1. In the process of enlivening the economy, we should adopt a flexible attitude toward a fairly large number of important factors such as general social products, production, and so on, so that they operate in accordance with market regulation. Under the condition that the price system has not yet been straightened out after the implementation of the open policy, vertical planned management and direct means of control are needed in order to ensure a balanced and stable macroeconomy. Contradictions and conflicts will occur between macroscopic and microscopic control, between planning and the market, between the state and enterprises, and between overall interests and partial interests. The difficulties lie in the fact that macroscopic control, planned management, the interests of the state, and overall interests are mingled with traditional management system and means. While we stress enlivening the economy and reforming the traditional system, our macroscopic control is very often obstructed. When we are stressing macroscopic stability, we usually adopt the old means, so that reform stagnates. Such phenomena will occur during the whole process of reform.

2. It is a necessary measure in reform to link the achievements in business with the incomes of workers and staff members in order to enhance economic results. However, production factors of various enterprises, including capital, goods and materials, labor force, economic interests, and environment differ greatly. Therefore, factors other than business also have a great impact on enterprsies. Strenuous efforts should be made in order to create equal conditions for competition among enterprises. This is also an important problem which should be correctly handled in reform. However, it is impossible to attain absolute equality.

3. The practice of "eating from the same big pot" should be abolished. However, it cannot be completely abandoned overnight. People wish to obtain the benefits from the abolition of the practice of "eating from the same big pot," but they also like to maintain the stability and safety resulting from the practice. Those who are able to obtain benefits from the abolition of the practice of "eating from the same big pot" are eager to change the status quo, whereas those who are unable to derive benefit from its abolition try to maintain the status quo.

4. The purpose of reform is to enrich all members of society. However, we cannot get instant results from reform, and make all members of society increase their incomes by the same margin. Some trades, some localities, some enterprises, and some of the masses will get rich first. The widening of the gaps in income difference are unavoidable. We should not practice egalitarianism. In the meantime, we should prevent too wide gaps in incomes, and gradually abolish the differences resulting from irrational, or even illegal incomes.

5. The new economic structural reform needs new standards, new systems, and new rules and regulations to ensure its normal operation. However, all these can only be gradually established in the process of exploring the new structure. It took more than 200 years for the capitalist economy to enact all its rules and regulations. It is impossible for us to establish, in a short period of time, standards, systems, and rules and regulations which are in accord with the new situation. Therefore, it is unavoidable that there will be loopholes and defects in reform, which give opportunity to some evildoers. This is the price which must be paid for reform.

6. The general guiding principle and policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy will not change. However, specific policies and measures for reform will inevitably be changed. Since reform is a revolution, it is necessary to readjust policies involved in light of practical conditions. When people have not yet apprehended and understood some correct measures for reform, we should be patient. If we make some mistakes because of our failure to assess things accurately, we should recognize them and correct them in practice. Only by constantly summing up experiences and enhancing our capability, and making minor readjustments at the appropriate time, can we avoid great relapses and fluctuations.

As long as we recognize the inevitability of the occurrence of these problems, and have made mental preparations for them, we will be able to treat them correctly, and avoid mental confusion. In so doing, we will actively support and take part in reform, rather than being observers of reform who irresponsibly apportion blame, or complain about various problems and passive phenomena occurring in reform. We should adopt an attitude of being the masters of our own affairs, and put forward opinions and suggestions on the improvement of reform. [paragraph continues]

This will be beneficial to the healthy progress of reform. In the meantime, we should consciously pay attention to protecting and supporting reformists because they are the backbone elements upon whom we rely in reform. They are also the targets of attack by those who try to obstruct reform. Of course, we should also pay attention to punishing those opportunists who avail themselves of loopholes in reform. We should not let them wantonly obstruct reform.

WE SHOULD TRULY GRASP THE WORK OF STUDYING, PROPAGATING, AND PROVIDING EDUCATION IN THE RELEVANT GUIDING PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES OF THE PARTY.

What is the guide for reform? This guide is various guiding principles and policies of the party for reform. Who are the masters of reform? They are all our cadres and people. Only by handing over all relevant guiding principles and policies of the party to our cadres and masses so that they become the understanding and conscious actions of the cadres and masses will success in the reform be ensured.

Through the practice in reform in recent years, our cadres and masses have, generally speaking, unprecedentedly enhanced their understanding of reform. Their level of understanding of the relevant guiding principles and policies of the party has also been raised. However, if we make a specific analysis of this general situation, we will discover that people's study and understanding of the relevant guiding principles and policies of the party for reform are not sufficient. Not everyone clearly understands the necessity, importance, and urgency of reform. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary to study again in a systematic way the guiding principles and policies for reform, and to provide people with education in this respect again by combining it with our work of summing up practical experience in reform.

We should continue to organize people to study a series of documents on reform issued by the central authorities, the decision on economic structural reform, the decision on the reform of the scientific and technological structure, the decision on the reform of the educational structure, this year's Document No 1, and so on, because they are programmatic documents which will be implemented over a long time, and to expound the basic orientation, tasks, and guiding principles and policies for reform. We should make specific arrangements, and organize cadres and the masses to conscientiously study the documents of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, especially Premier Zhao's report delivered at the meeting. This is because the report explains the specific tasks, steps, and measures to be taken during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and is a standard for action during the period.

In the process of discussing and determining the tasks and policies for reform, we must stick to the working method of the mass line. Before the formulation of our policies for reform, we should widely solicit opinions from the masses. This is not only a process of drawing on all collective wisdom and absorbing all useful ideas, but also a process of carrying out mobilization and propaganda work among the masses. The work of implementing policies and giving publicity to the tasks and policies of reform should be carried out in a systematic way. While making arrangements for the work of determining the tasks of reform, we should also make arrangements for the work of giving publicity to the plans and policies for reform.

All trades and services and all fronts should strengthen their work of giving publicity to reform. In particular, propaganda departments and the ideological front should make full use of their mass media and carry out their propaganda work for reform in a more systematic and profound way in order to create a political atmosphere beneficial to reform, and to push the smooth progress of reform.

WE SHOULD UNSWERVINGLY PROVIDE PEOPLE WITH EDUCATION IN THE MARXIST WORLD OUTLOOK, IN THE PURPOSE OF SERVING THE PEOPLE, AND IN THE REVOLUTIONARY OUTLOOK ON LIFE, OVERCOME VARIOUS KINDS OF UNHEALTHY TRENDS, AND CREATE A GOOD SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT FOR REFORM.

In the process of reform, why should we provide people with education in the Marxist world outlook? It is because the guiding principles, tasks, policies, and specific measures adopted by the party for reform are based on the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and methods, as well as on an analysis of our country's historical and practical conditions. If we deviate from the Marxist world outlook, it is very difficult to profoundly and thoroughly understand the scientific style and correctness of these guiding principles, tasks, and policies.

In the process of reform, why should we provide education in the purpose of serving the people? It is because serving the people is a basic measure. Without reform, there will be no success in reform. Without reform, it will be impossible for the people to obtain their greatest interests at the present stage. All guiding principles and policies for reform are aimed at serving the people. Without an explicit idea of serving the people, it is impossible to correctly understand and implement the guiding principles and policies for reform. Unhealthy trends inside the party are the largest factor obstructing reform. As far as party members are concerned, the ideological roots for their unhealthy trends are that they forget, or cast away, the purpose of serving the people.

In the process of reform, why should we provide education in the revolutionary outlook on life? It is because reform is a profound revolution. As for those who serve the people wholeheartedly, their participation in reform means, first of all, their devotion to the people, to the revolutionary cause, and to the four modernizations program aimed at making the country powerful and the people rich, and at creating their happiness in the future in the course of pushing forward these undertakings. If a man goes about things in accordance with another kind of outlook on life; if what is uppermost in his mind is to enjoy comfort; if he thinks that those who fail to idle their time in pleasure-seeking are fools; and if he thinks that "failing to take or eat means waste," and that "power, if not used, will become invalid," this means what he is doing is not devoting himself to the revolution, and that what he wants is to extort something from the revolution. To attain his purpose, he uses all kinds of methods to benefit himself at the expense of others, to put profit-making first, to seek private gain at public expense, and to secure his personal interests by force or trickery. Can such a person struggle hard and go all out to make progress to promote the four modernizations program? Can he give play to his wisdom and creativity for the sake of reform? Obviously, it is impossible for him to do so.

The education in the above-mentioned four aspects also includes important contents of the education in the "four haves." [paragraph continues]

Only by doing well in conducting the education in three aspects can we lead our cadres and the masses to correctly handle in reform the relations between the interests of the individual, the collective, and the state, between partial and overall interests, and between immediate and long-term interests. Otherwise, under certain circumstances, when particular individual interests, partial interests, and immediate interests cannot be obtained, or are subordinated to collective interests, overall interests, and long-term interests, or some personal interests are sacrificed, some people might become downhearted, or cast doubt upon the correctness of reform.

WE SHOULD TRULY IMPROVE THEORETICAL RESEARCH WORK, THEORETICAL PROPAGANDA, AND THEORETICAL STUDY TO STRENGTHEN THEORETICAL GUIDANCE OVER REFORM.

We should, first of all, conscientiously study and carry out research work on a series of strategic ideas on the building of socialism with Chinese characteristics put forward by the CPC Central Committee, headed by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. The main contents of the strategic ideas are: 1) the basic task of socialism is to develop productive forces; 2) the two strategic aims of social development in China are: quadrupling gross industrial and agricultural output by the end of this century, and the bringing of China's economic, scientific, and technical levels in the mid-21st century close to the level of the most-developed countries; 3) reform is the second revolution in China; 4) knowledge and talented personnel should be respected; 5) the concept of one country, two systems should be implemented; and 6) a global strategy of east, west, south, and north should be followed. Such strategic thinking demonstrates specific application of the basic Marxist principles in modern China. It is also a theoretical base and foundation for our reform and construction, and the great contribution made by our party to the creative development of Marxism. Therefore, many politicians and theoreticians in the world now regard Comrade Xiaoping as a great strategist in the contemporary world. However, it is inappropriate to say that we have carried out research and propaganda work and studied the strategic thinking in a sufficient and profound way. For example, we say that reform is the second revolution. What, then, are the targets of the revolution? Where does its motive force lie? How should we analyze class relations under socialism? There are many problems which should be studied in a profound way. The historical significance of Chairman Mao's article "Analysis of the Classes in Chinese Society" lies in its conclusion on the existence of bureaucratic capitalism in China, so that the targets of the Chinese revolution were more clearly shown, namely imperialism, feudalism, and bureaucratic capitalism. At present, our strategic objective at home is to eliminate poverty and ignorance. Proceeding from this task, how should we consider the problem of determining the targets of revolution and the force upon which we should rely? Over the past 30 years or so, our analysis and understanding of peasants and intellectuals was not completely correct, and many mistakes were made in this regard. We are now promoting the four modernizations program, and we should reassess and have a new understanding of the working class, peasants, and intellectuals. With regard to other strategic concepts, we should also carry out research work, and study and propagate them in a profound way. Otherwise, we will act blindly in the process of implementing them.

In the meantime, we should make a bold exploration of the theoretical problems arising in the practice of reform. The theory on the socialist commodity economy is the greatest breakthrough in the development of Marxism. Without such a theoretical breakthrough, it would have been impossible to create a new situation in reform and construction in our country as it is today. In the course of developing the socialist commodity economy, there are many theoretical problems which should be studied. For example, is commodity economy a production pattern? Some comrades have mentioned that commodity economy is a kind of production pattern, rather than a sheer product of capitalism. Some comrades have maintained that there are three production patterns in human society: 1) primitive economy; 2) natural economy, which exists with the occurrence of the division of labor in society; and 3) commodity economy, which occurs with the further development of the division of labor in society. Commodity economy has developed greatly in capitalist society. However, it cannot develop fully and healthily under capitalism. The basic principle of commodity economy is exchange of equal value. However, under the private ownership system of capitalism, this principle has been distorted. Outwardly, the principle of exchange of equal value is followed, but actually it is not pursued. It is only under the socialist system that commodity economy can fully and healthily develop. It is because public ownership is pursued under socialism. It is only public ownership which can truly ensure the full implementation of the principle of exchange of equal value. Therefore, commodity economy is not a product of capitalism. On the contrary, it will exist for a fairly long historical period. These viewpoints are worth paying attention to and studying. Let us cite another example. In the rural areas, there are various kinds of ownership systems with the economy under public ownership occupying a dominant position: 1) Public ownership economy run by the collective; 2) public ownership economy run by individuals on the basis of contracts; 3) renting economy; 4) economy run by individuals and under the control of society; 5) mixed economy. What changes will they undergo to conform to the demands of the development of the productive forces? What will be their future? All these problems should be studied. Such theoretical exploration is beneficial to widening our field of vision and enhancing our ideological vigor for reform.

Finally, we should conscientiously organize regular theoretical study of Marxism and Leninism for leading cadres. This is a fundamental task in our theoretical building. Although the central authorities have repeatedly stressed the importance of studying Marxist theories under the new situation, some comrades still fail to pay attention to it. Some leading comrades are not willing to send principal cadres to study in party schools. Some cadres are not willing to study. Sufficient attention has not yet been paid to regular theoretical study by cadres at their posts. Strictly speaking, this demonstrates our lack of political foresight. This situation should be truly improved.

I believe that as long as we make conscientious efforts to do the work well in the several aspects which I have mentioned above, it will be beneficial to guiding our cadres and the masses so that they will push forward the new economic structural reform. We should make mental preparations so that we will make more conscientious efforts to realize the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

JIANGSU LEADERS AT MEETING ON OPEN-DOOR POLICY

OW091441 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The provincial work conference on opening to the outside world concluded in Nanjing yesterday. It put forward the following task: To accelerate the pace of earning foreign exchange through exports and of bringing in capital and technology so as to open up new prospects for opening Jiangsu to the outside world.

Fully affirming the achievements of the past 2 years in opening to the outside world and reviewing previous experience, the conference pointed out: In order to open Jiangsu to the outside world at a faster pace, we should first further improve our ideological understanding and be clear about the purpose and significance of opening to the outside world. Second, we should fully utilize Jiangsu's two favorable factors: One, its excellent natural conditions and superior economic foundation; two, the successive opening to the outside world of Nantong City, Lianyungang City, the Suzhou-Wuxi-Changzhou economic zone, and the ports of Nantong, Lianyun, Zhangjia, and Nanjing. [passage omitted]

Attending the conference were leaders of the provincial CPC Committee and of the provincial government Han Peixin, Gu Xiulian, Chen Huanyou, and Zhang Xuwu. (Zhao Yingdong), deputy director of the State Council Special Economic Zones Office, was also present. Comrades Han Peixin, Gu Xiulian, and (Zhao Yingdong) spoke at the conference.

RUI XINGWEN ATTENDS SHANGHAI COMMENDATION MEETING

OW051156 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpts] The organs directly under the jurisdiction of the Shanghai municipal authorities held a meeting yesterday to commend advanced party branches and outstanding party members. Leaders of the municipal CPC Committee, including Rui Xingwen, Jiang Zemin, Huang Ju, and Wu Bangguo; and Wang Daohan, adviser to the municipal government, offered congratulations. Wu Bangguo, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, spoke on the current party rectification work.

He said: From now on party rectification work should emphasize the following three aspects: First, we should continue to concentrate on investigating and handling major cases and at the same time on correcting unhealthy trends characteristic of a trade; second, we must further strengthen party spirit, improve organizational work style, and enhance work efficiency. At present, we should concentrate on bringing about a change in organizational work style, simplify meetings, improve organizational discipline, improve order and work systems, refrain from empty talk, and try to perform more actual deeds. Leading cadres should go among the masses to conduct investigations in light of local conditions and should creatively implement the party's line, principles, and policies; third, we should further correct the guiding principles for professional work and correctly handle the relationship between upholding reforms and rectifying unhealthy tendencies. The purpose of improving the party style and rectifying unhealthy tendencies is to guarantee and promote reforms, not to restrict activities. Leading cadres at all levels should mentally adapt themselves to these two major changes: the gradual change from a product economy to a planned commodity economy; and the change from industrial bases to multipurpose urban and economic centers. This guiding principle should be clearly understood in the course of improving our party style. [passage omitted] Those commended at the meeting included leading cadres who had made contributions to Shanghai in terms of major policy decisions.

GUANGDONG: OFFICIALS JAILED FOR TAKING BRIBES

HK081217 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Yesterday the Shantou City Intermediate People's Court held a meeting to sentence according to law (Xing Jiankun), former Standing Committee member and secretary general of the Shantou Prefectural CPC Committee, to 7 years' imprisonment, and (Shi Hengbin), former Standing Committee member and organization department director of the Shantou Prefectural CPC Committee, to six and a half year's imprisonment for taking bribes.

From April 1979 to February 1983, by taking advantage of his position as secretary of the Jieyang County CPC Committee and Standing Committee member and secretary general of the Shantou Prefectural CPC Committee, (Xing Jiankun) poked his nose into the work of issuing exit permits by public security organs. In collaboration with his wife (Nie Ying), political work section chief of the Shantou prefectural financial work office, he accepted bribes worth 23,000 yuan in 14 instances from those who applied for exit permits.

From 1979 to 1982, by taking advantage of his power and position after assuming the post of standing committee member and organization department director of the Hantou Prefectural CPC Committee, (Shi Hengbin), in collaboration with his wife (Hu Huiizhen), former manager of Shantou's (Xinxin) Hotel, accepted various bribes worth 10,200 yuan from those who applied for exit permits.

GUANGDONG'S LIN RUO REPORTS ON STRUCTURAL REFORM

HK100217 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] The party school of the provincial CPC Committee held its 1986 graduation ceremony this morning. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Lin Ruo and Deputy Secretary Xie Fei attended. Lin Ruo delivered a report on economic structural reform.

In his report, Lin Ruo expounded on the basis for carrying out economic structural reform. He said: Commodity economy is a stage that cannot be skipped in socioeconomic development. Only by developing commodity economy can we promote the development of the productive forces and fundamentally consolidate the socialist system.

Lin Ruo said: Commodity economy has a dual nature, and the positive aspect is the essence and the main current. The negative aspect is secondary. We must therefore persevere in commodity economy on the basis of public ownership and persist in building the two civilizations simultaneously.

Xie Fei presented graduation certificates to 331 graduates, including those from the second party and government cadre training course and the third theoretical study class course.

GUANGXI READJUSTS POLICY TO ENCOURAGE GRAIN SALES

HK081237 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] To further arouse the peasants' economic enthusiasm for selling grain and oil-bearing crops and to promote the fulfillment of the quotas for the procurement of grain and oil-bearing crops, the regional people's government recently readjusted its policy on the procurement of grain again.

In addition to the fact that it must be stressed that all policies provided in the Guizhengfa No 12 Document of 1986 must be seriously implemented, and that the implementation of these policies must be guaranteed, peasant households which fulfil the quotas for grain ordered by contract will be rewarded. With a peasant household as a unit, those who fulfil their quota will be given two yuan reward for every 100 jin of unprocessed food grain ordered in advance by contract. [passage omitted] Those who fulfill their quota for the whole year in summer will be rewarded. Those who fulfill their quota for summer grain will be rewarded only for summer grain stored in a granary. Those who do not fulfill their quota for summer grain stored in a granary will not be rewarded. Those who fulfill their quota for the whole year in autumn will still be rewarded. Those who overfulfil thier quota for the whole year will be rewarded by being allowed to buy chemical fertilizers by way of reward. [passage omitted]

The money from the sale of grain must be paid immediately to peasants. The deposit for order grain in advance must be recovered. [passage omitted]

HUBEI LEADER DISCUSSES COMPREHENSIVE REFORM PROJECTS

HK040205 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Excertps] A provincial forum on comprehensive reform pilot project counties and cities convened by the Hubei Provincial CPC Committee concluded in Suizhou City on 30 June after 8 days in session. Responsible comrades of Suizhou, Danjiangkou, Huangpi, Puqi, Shishou, Luotian, Badong, Anlu, and Dangyang counties and cities, which are pilot projects, and of some other counties and cities attended the meeting. Also present were responsible comrades of provincial organs concerned and of theory research departments, totalling 50 persons. [passage omitted]

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu attended the meeting throughout. He gave many important views during the discussions. He stressed: In further developing comprehensive reforms in the pilot project counties and cities, we must first have a clear picture of the situation in reform and clear away various ideological obstacles. The level of ideological awareness plays a decisive role in determining whether the reforms can be carried out in greater depth.

1. We must seriously study basic Marxist theory and the spirit of the series of central instructions on reform. We must study Marxist philosophy and persistently apply the world-outlook and methodology of dialectical materialism to view the process of reform. [passage omitted]

We must study Marxist political economy and integrate basic Marxist theory with Chinese practice. We must study relevant science and technology centered on the major topics of planned commodity economy. We must similiarly study social science, including national economic management, macroeconomic and microeconomic management, and departmental economic management. Only by continually studying and acquiring new knowledge in this way can we emancipage our thinking from the bindings of traditional product economy, small peasant economy, and natural economy, and switch to socialist planned commodity economy. [passage omitted]

We must seriously study the series of central instructions on economic structural reform and thoroughly appreciate the intentions of the central authorities.

In this way our reforms will continually advance healthily under leadership and in a measured way under the guidance of the central line, principles, and policies.

2. The pilot project counties and cities must fully understand the glorious and arduous task they are shouldering. Reform work must be carried out in stages, and it must have stepping stones. The pilot project countries and cities must shoulder this glorious and arduous task. [passage omitted]

3. We must correctly handle the contributions and problems that arise during the parallel existence of the new and old systems. In reform, there must be a process of development of new systems and disappearance of old ones. While the two systems exist in parallel, contradictions and friction are bound to occur, and we must be ideologically prepared for studying the contradictions and correctly solving them. Sometimes we have to still make use of certain parts of the old systems, and undergo a transition. However, this is not the orientation. Reform is the orientation. On the other hand, we must protect new things that appear in reform as we protect our eyes. Even if these are only buds, we must support them and help them to grow and mature.

4. We must unify common nature and individual nature. We must resolutely implement the central authorities' intentions in close connection with local realities, and be bold and skilled in working creatively.

Specifically speaking, there are the following three sets of circumstances: 1) We must resolutely implement the reform principles and measures laid down by the central authorities. This is the guarantee for ensuring that reform will advance along the correct orientation. Otherwise, we may veer from the correct track. 2) In accordance with the central authorities' general demands and in light of the requirements of reform, the provincial authorities have to hand over certain experiments in reform measures to pilot project counties and cities. Preparatory and exploratory work is thus carried out at selected spots to provide experience for reform over whole areas. 3) There are certain problems on which neither the central nor the provincial authorities have laid down clear-cut regulations, and these may be problems that particularly need to be solved then and there by the counties and cities concerned. Some of them may be long-standing, great, and difficult problems. This requires that the localities carry out research and experiments in accordance with the general principles of the central and provincial CPC committees, to explore ways for resolving these thorny problems.

5. We must correctly distinguish between unhealthy trends and certain imperfections or mistakes in reform. We must resolutely correct unhealthy trends. Certain mistakes that occur in reform are only problems in work and problems of summation of experiences and lessons. At the same time, the upper levels must bear the burden for the lower levels regarding certain problems in work. Only thus can we resolutely correct unhealthy trends, resolutely carry out reform, and integrate the two so as to spur each other on.

6. We must resolutely protect the fruits of reform. At present there are certain phenomena in society that requires high vigilance on our part. Some people dislike the reform measures, heap reproach on them, and even erect obstacles. Some people spread rumors and slanders about reform activists and make things difficult for them. These things are impermissible. The party committees and the leaders at all levels must enthusiastically lead and support reform and protect the fruits of reform and the activists who are bold in reform.

We must investigate thoroughly and deal severely with people who attack activists who persevere in reform. Each case must be investigated without any ambiguity.

7. Step up the building of socialist spiritual civilization. The pilot project counties and cities must advance in the front rank in building spiritual civilization as well as doing a good job in reform and in building material civilization. They must regard bringing up a generation of new people as a major goal, and strive to improve people's cultural and spiritual qualities. In the rural areas, special attention must be paid to training and educating cadres and young people.

8. The pilot project counties and cities must have a work style that can withstand the stiffest tests. I hope that the pilot project counties and cities will have the pioneering spirit and also base their efforts on reality and advance in a thoroughly sound way.

Guan Guangdu stressed in conclusion that it is essential to strengthen leadership over the pilot project units. He said: These nine pilot project units are the reform pilot projects of the provincial CPC Committee and government and are also the pilot projects of the provincial departments and the prefectures and cities concerned. The upper-level party committees and the provincial departments must regularly go down to the pilot project units to investigate and study. [passage omitted]

GUAN GUANGFU VISITS HUBEI BROADCASTING PERSONNEL

HK071218 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] During the provincial forum of the counties and cities carrying out a pilot project of comprehensive reform that was held in Suizhou City at the end of June, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu visited all personnel who work at No 822 station of the provincial broadcasting and television department and No 207 microwave station of the provincial bureau of posts and telecommunications on the highest peak in Dahong Shan, some 1,000 meters above sea level. These two stations shoulder the tasks of transmitting and conveying broadcasts, television programs, and microwave telecommunications in the vast northwest and southwest regions of our province.

Guan Guangfu and responsible comrades of relevant departments went to the working areas of No 822 station and No 207 microwave station to inspect television, frequency modulation, microwave, and generator room equipment and to listen to their work reports. When listening to the report of a responsible comrade of No 822 station that the machine power on a high mountain is great and can directly or indirectly cover a radius of some 150 km, Comrade Guan Guangfu was satisfied, saying: You have worked on a high mountain year in and year out. Your living conditions are relatively hard. You have overcome many difficulties and completed your work and tasks relatively well. It is hoped that you will make sustained and redoubled efforts to make new contributions so that the masses throughout our province can listen to broadcasts and watch television programs well.

19 DEFECTORS SPEAK AFTER ARRIVING IN TAIWAN

Thank South Korea for Assistance

OW100653 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei -- After arriving in the Republic of China, the 19 mainland Chinese youths who defected to Korea in a wooden boat in mid-June issued a statement thanking the Korean government.

Chiu Chin-i, spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, said: The government of the Republic of China thanks the Korean Government for its proper care for the 19 young people, as well as for its assistance given to them on the basis of humanitarianism and Sino-Korean friendly relations so that they can realize their wishes to defect to freedom and return to the Republic of China.

Claim Mainlanders Desire Freedom

OW100413 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Taipei -- According to the 19 young people who defected to freedom in a small boat, since the Chinese Communists adopted the policy of opening to the outside world, young people in Mainland China have generally realized the superiority of the free world. If they had an opportunity, they would all defect to freedom.

Shortly after arriving in free China, the 19 young people met the nation at a press conference held at the headquarters of the Free China Relief Association. They indicated that while their dissatisfaction over Teng Hsiao-ping's autocratic rule was the primary cause of their defection to freedom, other reasons, such as the one-child policy, the destruction of Chinese culture, and all sorts of human rights abuses also prompted them to seek freedom.

The 19 young people began to plan their defection at the end of the last year. At first, their group consisted of only four people: Liu Chiang, Ho Yung-an, Chen Yung, and Wei Chen-hsiung. The other 15, who had the same common goal, were later recruited by them. According to Liu Chiang, they arrived in Wuchang by train in two groups in early June this year, and then proceeded to Tsingtao together. Wei Chen-hsiung added that while in Shandong, they cajoled a boat owner into selling them -- at a high price of 7,000 yuan -- a small boat with a carrying capacity of 3 metric tons, and they defected to freedom with that boat. [passage omitted]

Ho Yung-an pointed out at the press conference that, because security control is rather tight along the coastal areas in southeast China, and because Kwangtung is far from Taiwan, they chose the Shandong-to-Korea route. [passage omitted]

RESENTMENT TOWARDS FOREIGNERS ON RISE IN PRC

OW102341 Taipei CNA in English 1347 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, Jul 10 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BCC) in Taipei entitled "Xenophobia Again?":

According to the TORONTO GLOBE AND MAIL'S Peking correspondent, there is a gut feeling among Western businessmen and diplomats stationed in Red China that anti-foreign sentiment is rising among the Chinese people there.

To back his report, the journalist cited several recent instances in which foreigners were ill-treated. One is not sure whether these incidents herald the outbreak of another xenophobia. But they do suggest that foreigners are no longer welcome on the Chinese mainland.

One must point out that anti-foreign sentiment in Red China has its historical roots. Right after the birth of the communist regime in 1949, all foreign residents except Soviet citizens were regarded as spies and treated as such.

Missionaries who stayed behind were either expelled or jailed. During the Cultural Revolution, even foreign diplomats became targets of xenophobic mobs called "red guards."

There was a reversal of the situation after the second rehabilitation of Teng Hsiao-ping. Under his reform policy and the call for Four Modernizations, foreigners were treated as distinguished guests to be pampered. They were accorded privileges that were denied to the Chinese people themselves.

The idea was to win friendship as the first step toward winning moral and material support from the West. It was also a calculated gesture to show that post-Mao Red China has become a civilized country ready to become a constructive member of the international community.

In the new atmosphere the number of foreigners traveling to or residing in Red China has increased tremendously. But Peking is not entirely successful in achieving the objectives of spreading out the welcome mat. For instance, it has kept complaining that the U.S. is niggardly in effecting technology transfer.

In opening up the West, Peking failed to anticipate three side effects. The first is the rise of "spiritual pollution." With increased contacts with the outside world, such bourgeoise thinking as the pursuit of personal liberty and material enjoyment also entered the Chinese mainland.

The second outcome is that the people on the mainland are given a window through which they can see the true picture in the free world, particularly the happy life of fellow Chinese in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Singapore. The contrast has given birth to Red China's confidence crisis.

The third development is that Peking's open door policy has enabled westerners to take a closer look at Red China. They are able to discover the political repression and economic backwardness on the Chinese mainland. Faithful portrayal of Red China and the failure of the communist rule by foreign journalists and writers has made Peking lose face.

On the part of the people, they resent the VIP treatment accorded foreigners by the Communist authorities. Subconsciously, the local populace also became jealous of the affluence of the foreigners among them. Furthermore, the Chinese people on the mainland have become extremely selfish and rude after living so long under the unnerving rule of Communism. There is no such thing as courtesy any more. The new phenomenon also serves to give foreigners in Red China the feeling that they are not welcome guests.

COSTA RICA'S DENGO ON IMPROVING TIES WITH TAIWAN

OW091636 Taipei CNA in English 1455 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 7 (CNA) -- President Oscar Arias Sanchez of the Republic of Costa Rica is likely to visit the Republic of China sometime next year to consolidate the traditional friendship between the two nations, Costa Rican First Vice President Jorge Manuel Dengo disclosed in Taipei Wednesday.

Dengo, who arrived in this nation July 1 for a nine-day official visit, said President Arias, who visited this nation twice before he was elected president, has always been a true friend and supporter of the ROC. In order to reaffirm his friendship with the ROC, he will probably visit Taipei sometime next year, he said.

Speaking at a pre-departure conference at the grand hotel, Dengo said he was deeply impressed by the hospitality and hard-working spirit demonstrated by the people and the government here during his visit to this nation over the past few days. Dengo said he firmly believes that the relations between Costa Rica and the ROC will become more intimate in the future because of the increased understanding between the two nations.

The Costa Rican vice president said he hopes the ROC will further enhance its economic cooperation with Costa Rica and continue to provide assistance to help Costa Rica upgrade its technological and education levels.

KMT REVOKES MEMBERSHIP OF DEFECTING PILOT

HK100512 Hong Kong AFP in English 0446 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 10 (AFP) -- The ruling Kuomintang (KMT) has revoked the party membership of Wang Hsih-chueh, a Taiwanese commercial airline pilot who defected to China two months ago, a party source said Thursday.

The decision was made by KMT's Central Standing Committee, the party's top policy-maker, at a Wednesday meeting, it added.

The 56-year-old former pilot of the China Airlines (CAL), Taiwan's flag carrier, flew a cargojet to the southern Chinese city of Guangzhou on May 3 in a defection bid, leaving behind his wife of 30 years and three children in Taiwan.

Known as Wang Xijue in China, he was appointed in June deputy director and deputy chief pilot in the Beijing office of the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC).

He was also allowed to reunite with his 82-year-old father and brothers whom he had not seen since 1949.

The defection led to the talks in Hong Kong by CAL and CAAC officials over the return of the jet freighter and other two crew in the first official contact between the rival governments of Beijing and Taipei in almost 40 years.

The incident also prompted reforms in the CAL, which once rated Mr Wang, a former Air Force reconnaissance pilot, as "most loyal and reliable."

Mr Wang had been awarded a dozen times for making successful reconnaissance missions over China before he joined the CAL in 1967.

DEBATE OVER PRC'S 'EXPERIMENT' WITH STOCK ISSUES

HK100447 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 10-16 Jul 86 p 2

["The Past Week" column]

[Text] Since the official launching of urban economic structural reform in 1984, some companies and enterprises in selected cities were given permission to issue stocks. Chinese authorities, however, tend to be tight-lipped about the progress of the experiment, which has led to the belief that the issue still remains largely academic.

The lack of publicity and experimental status of the companies allowed to issue stocks reflect the extreme caution with which Beijing planners are treating this vital tool of capitalism. There seems to be considerable doubt whether the floating of stocks will work smoothly in a basically socialist economy. Urging caution in implementing such a reform, for example, Liu Guoguang, one of China's foremost economists, wrote in the Economic Daily last November about the impracticability of selling to individuals billions of renminbi worth of properties owned by state-run enterprises.

It was feared that under a stock ownership system it might be possible for shares to become concentrated in the hands of some people who could live off the profits of their investments without doing any work. Liu cautioned, moreover, that the system might turn some labourers into owners of means of production while reducing others to mere wage labourers with no say in the management.

Arguing in favour of the stock ownership system, its proponents point out that in most cases workers in a designated enterprise are only allowed to buy as much as 30 percent of the shares issued. In one case, it was cited that to prevent any individual from becoming a majority shareholder of a state-owned enterprise, an employee's stock purchase cannot exceed 5,000 yuan (Hk10,000), roughly equivalent to what a worker makes in four years.

Beyond its chief merit as an instrument for raising funds, Chinese proponents of stock floating believe that it can prod employees to work harder and more efficiently. Many factories lose money because of high waste. By introducing stock issues, it is hoped, the rate of waste will drop. This in turn will raise productivity. 'The more money the enterprises make, the more tax they pay to the government,' an official said. The stock issues could also benefit economic development by diverting consumption funds to production.

'Workers have been masters of the enterprises only politically,' an official was quoted as saying. 'But they will become masters both politically and economically if they are shareholders.'

In light of the pros and cons, it was interesting that the PEOPLE'S DAILY on 25 June carried at some length the success story of a well-known state department store in Beijing erstwhile known as the Tianqiao Arcade until it was transformed into the Tianqiao Company Ltd in 1984. The company was formed after incorporating all the retail department stores in the busy downtown Qianmen Dajie street by means of issuing three million yuan worth of stocks. It is not known how much this accounted for the amalgamated capital assets of the company. It was agreed, however, that the participating retail stores were entitled to purchase a maximum of one million yuan worth of shares and a minimum of 10 thousand with the amount offered to individuals ranging from 20,000 to 100 yuan. Consequently, the majority (numbering 400) of the company's employees became shareholders. All the shares were sold out within a very short time.

According to the PD report, the company's business 'thrived after its only dealing with the state was reduced to tax payment according to regulations.' Vested with a high degree of autonomy, the company receives no subsidy from the state, but enjoys full decision-making powers in its business operations and, of course, is responsible for its losses and the disposal of its profits.

A problem arose when the company applied for its business licence and was asked to specify whether its ownership was state, collective or private. The answer was finally settled for its being neither state nor collectively-owned, 'but a new type of commercial entity which is a mixture of all the three types of existing ownerships.'

Breaking previous administrative constraints, Tianqian has established business links with more than 300 manufacturing concerns and trading companies in 300 municipalities scattered in 22 provinces.

The freedom to purchase supplies from outside areas made a big difference as Tianqiao had been used to depend on only one source of supply. That was when all purchases from outside areas had to be approved by 'higher authorities.' Even the acquisition of fixed assets worth more than 50 yuan had to be 'approved' first.

Now the company's board of directors makes its own decisions in investing in trade, catering, and manufacturing establishments in terms of hundreds of thousands of yuan, or even a million. In fact, business is so good that the board recently decided to issue another bunch of shares worth 3 million yuan.

So it seems supporters of stock issues have won another round in the current economic reform. It is obvious that the sweeping structural changes touch not only the managerial and organizational aspects of enterprises, but also the more basic question of ownership.

But it remains to be seen to what extent stock issuing, or even stock exchange in socialist China will resemble these mechanisms as known in capitalist countries.

For one thing, 'many of the stocks issued in China are in fact bonds because they carry interest,' one official has pointed out.

This somewhat unusual practice is probably due to the risks, great or small, which stockholders are inevitably exposed to. Since losing money is a concept ordinary Chinese employees haven't got used to, it could be the interest is offered as a safeguard againt the potential risks.

Reports also say that no matter how much profit an enterprise makes, the annual dividend cannot exceed a fixed percentage, say 12 percent, of the company's share capital. Undistributed profits will be added to the share capital.

Thus a limit is set to prevent the possibility of shareholding employees living off the profits created as well as by those who do not own shares. [sentence as published] But some benefits for those who put in extra hard-earned money does seem to fit in with the general scheme of serving the interest of both the state and individuals. The question is how high is the limit?

CPP PLENARY SESSION TO BE HELD IN OCT

HK100426 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 10 Jul 86 p 3

[By To Yiu-ming]

[Text] The Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party will hold a plenary session in October to discuss issues surrounding the building of a socialist culture.

According to a report by the Japanese JIJI PRESS, the Communist Party has begun preparatory work on the sixth plenary session of the 12th Central Committee.

The report said one of the purposes of the coming session is to hammer out the agenda for the 13th Party Congress to be held in the Autumn next year.

It is widely expected the 13th Party Congress will continue the policy set by the 12th Plenary Session last year, that ageing party leaders from both the Politburo and the Secretariat will be allowed to step down.

At the last meeting, 10 retiring members of the Politburo were replaced by six younger members, cutting the size of the powerful body to 20 members plus two alternate members.

The composition of the five-member Standing Committee of the Politburo, however, remains intact. The members are: Mr Deng Xiaoping, Mr Chen Yun, President, Li Xiannian, General Secretary, Hu Yaobang and Premier, Zhao Ziyang.

More reshuffling is expected at the 13th Party Congress as the two most influential leaders, Chen and Deng, will be 83 years old by then.

Apart from leadership reshuffles, a local source said another focus of the coming session will be issues on the building of a socialist culture.

It will be a continuation of the last meeting during which -- though preoccupied by the next five-year economic plan -- some party leaders also touched on the sensitive issue of party rectification.

President Li stressed then that ideological and political works would have to be strengthened during economic construction and structural reforms, while the influential economist Chen Yun, lashed out at the role of market forces and condemned the corrupt influence of capitalism on China.

The idea of placing equal emphasis on economic reforms and socialist culture was agreed by the party as shown by the fact that the building of a socialist culture has been included in the Seventh Five-year-plan (1986-1990).

One of the 10 chapters in the economic plan is on programme in four major areas for building a socialist society that is culturally and ideologically advanced.

Besides ideological and political works, other programme areas include cultural undertakings, democracy and legal system, and public order.

PRC TAKING 'A GOOD STEP' TOWARDS OVERALL REFORMS

HK101055 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 p 1

["Letter From Beijing" by Bao Xin: "Reforms Are Being Carried out in an Overall Manner"]

[Excerpts] Dear brother:

Following the profound development of economic structural reform, China is now in fact carrying out overall reforms. The speech made at the Royal International Affairs Research Office by Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, during his visit to Britain in June indicated this trend. He said: "Reforms first started in the rural areas and are now proceeding in an all-round way, which involves the economic, scientific, technological, and educational structures as well as the political field. In other words, reforms are proceeding in both the material and spiritual spheres." This development trend serves as a vivid description of China's persistence in reforms and suggests the powerful vitality of reforms. [passage omitted]

In a socialist country, leading and organizing economic construction is the basic function of state organs. Therefore, economic structural reform should be carried out in company with political structural reform. [passage omitted]

The important contents of the current political structural reform are streamlining overstaffed administration, solving the problem of having more hands than needed, and overcoming bureaucracy. We will be able to advance with light packs so long as we have better staff and simpler administration. [passage ommitted]

In carrying out overall reforms, spiritual civilization is an indispensable factor. Our basic state policy is to build China into a modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and a high degree of democracy, and overall reforms are aimed at speeding up the realization of this target. We have taken a good step on the road of reforms. From now on, we will be more resolute in our advance and bring forward overall refoms with greater administration.

Yours,
[signed] Bao Xin
[Dated] 1 July

DAILY REPORT

China

Vol I No 134 14 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

- LIAOWANG on Zhao Ziyang's Trip to Europe, Africa [OVERSEAS EDITION 7 Jul] A 1

NORTHEAST ASIA

- Celebration of PRC-DPRK Amity Anniversary Continues D 1
  - Wan Li Speaks on Friendship D 1
  - RENMIN RIBAO Hails Treaty D 3
  - DPRK Paper Notes Relations D 3
  - Wan Li, Others Attend Rally D 3
  - Culture Ministry Fetes DPRK Group D 4
  - Speeches at Banquet Note Ties D 5
  - Organizations Exchange Greetings D 5
  - Tian Jiyun at Military Academy D 6
  - Tian Jiyun Delegation Decorated D 6
  - Kim Il-song Meets Tian Jiyun D 7
  - Tian Attends Nampo Mass Rally D 8
  - DPRK Delegation in Shanghai D 8
  - Chen Pixian Meets DPRK Group D 8
  - Deng Xiaoping Meets DPRK Party D 9
  - Tian Jiyun Delegation Returns D 10
  - DPRK Delegation Departs Shanghai D 10
- DPRK Announces U.S.-ROK Rejection of Arms Talks D 10

SOUTHEAST ASIA & PACIFIC

- XINHUA Cites Hanoi Radio on Le Duan Death E 1
- Comments on Attempted Coup in Philippines E 1
- Burmese Government Delegation Visits Beijing E 2

WESTERN EUROPE

- Zhao Ziyang Continues Visit to Europe, Africa G 1
  - Meets Greek President, Speaker G 1
  - Visits Archeological Museum G 1
  - Hosts Return Banquet in Athens G 2
  - Meets Greek Communist Leader G 2
  - Concludes Visit to Greece G 3
  - Wrap-up on Athens Visit G 3
  - Leaves Crete for Madrid G 4
  - Spanish Leader Welcomes Visit G 5
  - Visit Hailed by Spanish Press G 5

EASTERN EUROPE

Zhao Ziyang Hails Yugoslavia's Reforms H 1
Commentaries on Zhao's Yugoslavia Visit H 2
    Newspapers Praise Visit H 2
    Visit Will Enhance Ties H 3
Zhao Ziyang Interviewed by Yugoslav Journal H 3
Zhao Ziyang Cables Thanks To Yugoslavia's Mikulic H 7
Romanian CP Communique Hails Zhao Ziyang Visit H 4

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Guangdong, Shanghai Hit by Typhoon Peggy; 21 Dead [CHINA DAILY 14 Jul] K 1
RENMIN RIBAO Warns Leaders on Concealing Shortcomings [5 Jul] K 2
Wang Meng Addresses Cultural Meeting on Policy K 3
Meetings Urge Cooperation With Democratic Parties K 4
    Democratic Leaders Speak K 6
    'Mutual Supervision' Stressed K 8
Fei Xiaotong Describes Aspirations in Work [GUANGMING RIBAO 22 Jun] K 10
Li Peng, Others at Beijing Ordnance Trade Fair K 12
LIAOWANG Hails Bomb Specialist Deng Jiaxian [23 Jun] K 13
    LIAOWANG Commentary [23 Jun] K 20
National Seminar Held on Government Operations K 21
Zhu Houze Discusses Theoretical Problems [WENZHAI BAO 29 Jun] K 23
GUANGMING RIBAO Views Opening Policy [30 Jun] K 24
Qiao Shi 5 July Speech at Lawyer's Congress [RENMIN RIBAO 8 Jul] K 26
Chen Pixian Addresses Legal Reporters Meeting K 28
GUANGMING RIBAO on Political Structural Reform [16 Jun] K 29
RENMIN RIBAO on Need for Vocational Training [7 Jul] K 33
Beijing on Promoting Civilization in Countryside K 35
Correction to Central Leaders at Official's Funeral K 35

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

Henan Leader on Rural Party Rectification Issues P 1
Zhengzhou Plant Managers Urge Political Structural Reforms P 1
Guan Guangfu Visits Hubei Television Workers P 2
Hubei Secretary Meets Party School Graduates P 2
Hunan Reports Industrial Successes, Problems P 4
Hunan Holds Meeting on Rural Party Rectification P 4
Hunan Leader on Correcting Party Style, Malpractices P 5

NORTH REGION

Nei Monggol Congress Committee Meeting Ends 8 Jul R 1

NORTHWEST REGION

Shaanxi Economic Official Urges Solving Reform Problems [XIBEI XINXI BAO 23 Jun] T 1
Urumqi Earth Satellite Station Begins Operation T 3

TAIWAN

Problems, Changes for Taiwan's Diplomatic Policy V 1
[LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION 7 Jul]
Defense Minister Urges Resolve in Facing Communism V 2
Establishment of Free Trade Zone With U.S. Possible V 2
CSC Develops Special Steel for Building Submarines V 3
British Navy Rescues Crew of Sinking Taiwan Ship [AFP] V 3

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Situation in Vietnam After Le Duan's Death W 1
[WEN WEI PO 11 Jul]
Survey Says Foreign Business Dissatisfied With PRC W 2
Hong Kong Residents May Be Able To Tour DPRK W 3
[SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul]

LIAOWANG ON ZHAO ZIYANG'S TRIP TO EUROPE, AFRICA

HK101045 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 p 25

[Article by Ying Qian: "For the Sake of Friendship, Cooperation, and Peace -- Premier Zhao Ziyang Visits Six Countries"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council began his official friendship visit on 2 July to Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey, and Tunisia. This is another important diplomatic activity of China to develop its friendship and cooperation with Romania and five other countries following President Li Xiannian's visit to five South Asian and African countries in March of this year and General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to four West European countries in June this year. The frequent visits made by Chinese leaders have fully shown China's active diplomatic activities and the development of its relations with foreign countries.

The six countries that Premier Zhao is scheduled to visit are located in Europe, Asia, and Africa. They are Balkan or Mediterranean countries and they occupy important strategic positions. All six countries have attached importance to their relations with China and are willing to further develop economic cooperation and trade relations with China. They hold identical or similar views to those of China on many important world issues at present.

With the aim of "deepening understanding, promoting friendship, enhancing cooperation of mutual benefits, and maintaining world peace," Premier Zhao will separately exchange views with leaders of these six countries on bilateral relations and international issues of common concern. This will help develop in width and depth China's friendly relations and cooperation with these countries.

Romania is the first leg of Premier Zhao's present tour. As early as 5 October 1949, Romania established diplomatic relations with China. In the common cause of building socialism, the close cooperation and deep friendship between the Chinese and Romanian parties and between the two countries has continuously been consolidated and developed. In the past few years, party and government leaders of the two countries have visited one another on many occasions. The aim of these visits is to bring about long-term, steady, and overall development of the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries. Nicolae Ceausescu, secretary general of the Romanian Communist Party and president of the republic, paid his fifth visit to China in October last year. Zhao Ziyang has gone to visit Romania this time at the invitation of Ceausescu and Prime Minister Constantin Dascalescu.

Yugoslavia is also a socialist country which was among the first countries to establish diplomatic relations with China. The Sino-Yugoslav overall friendly relations and cooperation have developed smoothly in the past years. Marked results have been obtained in cooperation in various fields and mutual understanding and mutual trust deepen with each passing day. The two countries extensively share the same view on many international issues and on many aspects of socialist construction and economic reforms. The leaders of the countries have frequently visited one another to exchange experience in reforms and the construction of the two countries, to tap potentials of and expand economic cooperation and trade, and to strengthen cooperation in international affairs. The League of Communists of Yugoslavia has just concluded its 31st congress. The present visit of Premier Zhao will push to a higher stage the cooperative relations and friendship between the Chinese and Yugoslav parties, between the two countries, and between the people of the two countries based on mutual respect, mutual trust, learning from each other, and mutual support.

Both Greece and China are countries with a long history of civilization, and the friendly exchanges between the people of the two countries date back for a long time in the past. In more than 10 years since the two countries established diplomatic relations, the relations between the two countries have developed smoothly on the basis of the five principles of peaceful coexistence. In April this year, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou said during his visit to China that although the objective conditions of Greece and China are not exactly the same, they have common experiences in their efforts to persist in domestic reforms. Commentaries in Greek newspapers said that the Greek prime minister's visit to China is a new starting point in the development of the relations between the two countries and anticipated new achievements in Premier Zhao's return visit.

Although Spain is far from China, its political and economic relations with it have developed very fast in the past years. During his visit to China in September last year, Prime Minister Gonzalez discussed with Chinese leaders new ways to expand cooperation of mutual benefit. Premier Zhao will be the first head of state of a foreign country invited by Gonazalez to visit Spain after the general election. Spanish newspapers held that the high-level talks to be held between the prime minister and the premier in Madrid are a continuation of the talks in Beijing in September last year.

The traditional friendship between China and Turkey has a long history. The famous "Silk Road" in history started from Xian (called Changan in those days) and ended in Istanbul (called Constantinople in those days), Turkey. More than 2,000 years ago, China's silk, tea, porcelain, and other things were transported to Europe by means of the "Silk Road." In the past years, the political, economic, cultural, and technological cooperation between the two countries has been strengthened markedly. The fruitful visits by Turkish President Kenan Evren in 1982 and by President Li Xiannian in 1984 added vitality to the development of the traditional friendship between the people of the two countries.

After visiting Turkey, Premier Zhao will fly across the Mediterranean to Tunisia in North Africa. Premier Zhou Enlai visited Tunisia in January 1974, when the two countries established diplomatic relations. Both China and Tunisia belong to the Third World, and their friendly relations and cooperation have a solid foundation. Tunisian leaders have spoken highly of the results of cooperation between Tunisia and China, calling such cooperation an example of cooperation between countries on the basis of respecting sovereignty, equality, and mutual benefit. President Bourguiba called the Medjerda-(Bangjue) [bang jue 6721 6037] Canal the "Tunisia-China Friendship Canal," the biggest water conservation project built with the aid of China since Tunisia won its independence. Premier Zhao's present visit to Tunisia is to reciprocate the visit by Prime Minister Mzali to China in 1984. This provides a good opportunity for the two countries to look for ways to further expand their friendly cooperation.

It can be expected that Premier Zhao's visit to the six countries will certainly promote mutual understanding, friendship, and cooperation of mutual benefit, and make new contributions to the cause of maintaining world peace.

CELEBRATION OF PRC-DPRK AMITY ANNIVERSARY CONTINUES

Wan Li Speaks on Friendship

OW110327 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1324 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) — Wan Li, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and acting premier of the State Council, pointed out here today: "We firmly believe that the great friendship, based on Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, between the Chinese and Korean peoples will surely withstand every severe test and continue to grow from one generation to another."

The West Hall of the Great Hall of the People was in festive mood this evening. Wan Li played host to a grand banquet here to mark the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance.

Among those present were members of the Korean party and government delegation, headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the KWP Central Committee and vice president of the DPRK, who are here to take part in the celebration of the 25th anniversary of the treaty and on a goodwill visit.

The treaty was signed on 11 July in Beijing 25 years ago by Premier Zhou Enlai and [then] Priemier Kim Il-song on behalf of their respective countries.

Wan Li pointed out in his speech that the signing of the treaty composed a new, historic chapter in the history of friendship between the two countries. He said: "The treaty shows the common aspirations and determination of the Chinese and Korean people to strengthen their solidarity, develop their friendship, and safeguard Asian and world peace. Thanks to the common efforts of China and Korea, Sino-Korean friendly and cooperative relations have become increasingly close; and the two countries' exchanges and cooperation in the political, economic, and cultural spheres have yielded fruitful results and have effectively enhanced the two countries' socialist construction."

Wan Li pointed out: During those years of arduous revolutionary struggle, Chinese and Korean people shared weal and woe, fought shoulder to shoulder, and developed a militant friendship, cemented by blood. As before, the people of our two countries have been supporting one another and cooperating closely while their countries are engaged in building socialism and striving to achieve peaceful reunification. Wan Li said: Just as President Kim Il-song has said, the comrade-in-arm relationship between the Chinese and Korean people is an example of internationalism.

Comrade Wan Li highly evaluated the enormous successes the Korean people have achieved in socialist construction under the leadership of President Kim Il-song and the KWP.

Turning to the situation of the Korean peninsula, Wan Li said: The sincere efforts by the KWP and the Korean Government to ease tension in the Korean peninsula and to achieve North-South contacts and dialogue enjoy popular support. China will, as always, firmly support the just stand of the Korean party and government for an independent and peaceful reunification of Korea. He added: The United States and South Korea must stop their large-scale joint military exercises, which have taken place annually, to remove obstacles to the resumption of North-South contact and dialogue.

Wan Li pointed out: "Korea's recent proposals for tripartite military-level talks, and for the establishment of a nonnuclear peace zone in the Korean peninsula, are conducive to easing tension in the peninsula, and all relevant parties should positively consider these proposals. We believe that the Korean people, who have a glorious revolutionary tradition, will certainly surmount all difficulties and achieve an independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland."

Yi Chong-ok pointed out in his speech: The signing of the Korean-Chinese Treaty and Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance was an epochal event which, during the course of the common struggle for freedon, emancipation, and victory for the socialist cause, has pushed the blood-cemented fraternal ties and militant solidarity of the two peoples to an even higher level. Since the signing of the treaty, the people of our two countries have made enormous contributions to defending the two countries' revolutionary achievements, expediting socialist construction, and safeguarding Asian and world peace.

He praised the Chinese people for their achievements in the struggle for building a Chinese-style socialist society under CPC leadership. He said: "All these changes happening in the great land of China show that the lines and policies set out by the CPC are correct and in line with the actual situation of the Chinese revolution and the aspirations of the Chinese people." Commenting on independent and peaceful reunification of Korea, he said: "Although there are serious obstacles on the road to the reunification of the fatherland, the Korean people will rely on the strength of North-South solidarity and will certainly reunify their divided fatherland.

He thanked the Chinese party, government and people for staunchly standing beside the Korean people and always actively supporting the Korean people's socialist construction and struggle for independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland. He said: "We have learned from real life that the friendship between our two peoples is consolidated and dynamic -- a friendship between class brothers, based on genuine revolutionary justice.

The Korean party and government delegation arrived in Beijing by train at noon today. The distinguished Korean guests were met and entertained at a luncheon by Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, at the Diaoyutai State Guesthouse.

This afternoon, Wan Li presided over a grand ceremony held at the East Gate Plaza of the Great Hall of the Chinese to welcome Yi Chong-ok and his party. At the plaza, Chinese and Korean national flags were fluttering in the breeze, and a military band played the national anthems of Korea and China. Accompanied by Wan Li, Yi Chong-ok reviewed the honor guards of the PLA ground, naval, and air forces, and met well-wishers. After the welcoming ceremony, Wan Li met with Yi Chong-ok and his party at the Great Hall of the People and had cordial and friendly conversations with them.

Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi, Wu Xueqian, Chen Pixian, Hao Jianxiu, Zhu Liang, Wang Meng, Ai Zhixheng, and Leading members of other relevant departments, were present at the banquet. Also present were members of the Korean Radio and Television delegation, headed by Chu Chang-chun, chairman of the Korean Central Broadcasting and Television Committee; members of the delegation of the Korean-Chinese Friendship Association headed by O Mun-han, vice chairman of the Korean Committee for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries; diplomats from the Korean Embassy in China, and representatives of Korean experts and students studying in China.

RENMIN RIBAO Hails Treaty

OW110918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0700 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- A "PEOPLE'S DAILY" editorial today hailed the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between China and Korea, saying the treaty has contributed greatly to the peace and stability in the region. The editorial said the signing of the treaty was a great event in the history of the friendly relations between the two countries.

The treaty has played a major role in maintaining the security of the region, the editorial said. In the 25 years since the signing, exchanges of visits by leaders of the two countries have brought friendly relations to a new stage and cooperation in political, economic, scientific and technological, cultural and other fields have developed at a fast rate.

Korea and China have supported each other in their efforts to reunify their countries and the Chinese Government and people will continue to support the Korean people's efforts to bring together the two parts of Korea, the editorial concluded.

DPRK Paper Notes Relations

OW111010 Beijing XINHUA in English 1059 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Korean-Chinese relations are now closer than any time in the past, according to an editorial in NODONG SINMUN today to mark the 25th anniversary of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between the two countries.

The late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai and Korean President Kim Il-song signed the treaty July 11, 1961, in Beijing. The treaty was "a milestone" and accelerated the socialist construction of both countries and contributed greatly to the preservation of global peace, said the editorial.

It added that visits by leaders of the two countries in recent years have brought the friendly and cooperative relations to a new stage. It expressed appreciation for the Chinese people's efforts for peaceful reunification of the motherland and the maintenance of world peace. The Korean people consider China's support of their just struggle for peaceful reunification of their country a great inspiration, said the editorial.

Congratulatory messages were exchanged yesterday between Chinese leaders Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, President Li Xiannian, Premier Zhao Ziyang and Chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress Peng Zhen and Korean leaders Kim Il-song, president of Korea, and Kang Song-san, premier of the Administrative Council.

Wan Li, Others Attend Rally

OW111346 Beijing XINHUA in English 1336 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- A rally was held here this afternoon to mark the 25th anniversary of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

More than 1,000 people, including Korean experts, students and diplomats in Beijing, attended the rally, which was organized by the Chinese Communist Party committee and government of the Beijing Municipality.

Members of a Korean party and government delegation headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, received a standing ovation as they went onto the rostrum in the company of Chinese leaders Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi and Hao Jianxiu.

Speaking at the rally, Mayor Chen Xitong, who is also a secretary of the Beijing party committee, said that since the signing of the treaty in 1961, friendly relations of cooperation between China and Korea have developed continuously. Their exchanges and cooperation in the political, economic, cultural and other fields have grown in breadth and depth.

He pointed out that leaders of the two parties and countries have maintained close contacts and exchanged views on major issues of common concern in a thorough-going way. Multi-level contacts and ties have linked the central departments and provinces of the two countries. These testify to a solid basis of and broad prospects for the Sino-Korean friendship, the mayor asserted. He pledged that people in his city, together with people all over China, will resolutely support the just struggle of the Korean people for an independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland and all their rational proposals to this end.

Yi Chong-ok said in his speech that friendship and unity between the two parties, countries and peoples are a reliable factor favoring the socialist and communist causes in the two countries as well as peace in Asia and the world as a whole.

He reiterated that it is a firm policy of the Korean party and government to continue the Korea-China friendship from generation to generation. He told his audience that although there are barriers and difficulties on the way ahead, the Korean people are bound to realize an independent and peaceful reunification of their country with the support of all the peace-loving people in the world.

Culture Ministry Fetes DPRK Group

OW111442 Beijing XINHUA in English 1425 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- A Korean party and government delegation led by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, attended an evening performance of music, songs and dances here today.

Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Wang Meng, minister of culture, accompanied the visitors at the performance sponsored by the Chinese Ministry of Culture.

Also present at the performance were a Korean radio and television delegation and a Korea-China Friendship Association delegation. The Korean party and government delegation visited a television set factory here today and will leave for Shanghai tomorrow.

Speeches at Banquet Note Ties

OW112050 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1624 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text[Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance, the Korean party and government held a grand banquet at the People's Cultural Palace in Pyongyang City today to celebrate the signing of the treaty in Beijing by Comrade Zhou Enlai and Comrade Kim Il-song on behalf of their countries 25 years ago to the day. Speeches were successively delivered during the banquet by Kang Song-san, member of the Political Bureau of the WPK Central Committee and premier of the State Administrative Council of Korea, and by Chinese Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, head of the Chinese party and government delegation.

In his speech, Kang Song-san spoke highly of the great contributions made by the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance to promoting socialist causes in Korea and China and to safeguarding peace in Asia and in the world. He also spoke highly of the Korean-Chinese friendship forged during a long common struggle. He said that the WPK and the Korean people will, as always, do their utmost to bring the friendship between the parties, governments and peoples of the two countries to a higher level.

Tian Jiyun pointed out in his speech that the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance has not only played a very important role in strengthening and developing the great friendship and close cooperation between Chinese people and Korean people, but has also yielded far-reaching effects on safeguarding the security of both countries and peace in Asia and the world. He said that Chinese party, government and people actively support the Korean people's just struggle to oppose foreign aggression, defend national independence, and achieve an independent and peaceful reunification of the motherland; support the just stand and reasonable propositions of the Korean party and government; and are willing to do their utmost to provide this support.

In their speeches, both Kang and Tian expressed their belief that the Chinese-Korean friendship surely can stand up to the severest test and be developed from generation to generation no matter what changes occur in the world situation. Yim Chun-chu, vice president of the DPRK, conferred medals of various classes of Korea on Vice Premier Tian Jiyun and some 60 other Chinese comrades this morning in recognition of their contributions to the development of Korean-Chinese friendship and cooperation.

Also this morning, the Chinese party and government delegation visited Comrade Kim Il-song's old residence at (Wanjindae). In the afternoon, they visited the Pyongyang people's study hall and watched a large group gymnastics performance, "Brilliant Korea."

Organizations Exchange Greetings

OW122027 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1511 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- The all-China Federation of Trade Unions, the Central Committee of the Chinese CYL, and the All-China Women's Federation exchanged congratulatory messages today with the Korean General League of Professionals, the Central Committee of the Korean Youth League, and the Central Committee of the Korean Democratic Women's Union respectively to warmly greet each other on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Coopération, and Mutual Assistance.

Tian Jiyun At Military Academy

OW130845 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1552 GMT 12 Jul 86

[By reporter Gao Haorong]

[Text] Pyongyang, 12 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Chinese party and government delegation led by Vice Premier Tian Jiyun was warmly welcomed by teachers and students when it visited Korea's Kang Kon General Military Academy today. At the welcoming rally, commandant of the academy Chon Mun-ok recalled the history of the people and armies of Korea and China fighting together. He praised the effective reduction-in-force reorganization undertaken by the Chinese PLA to promote national defense modernization.

Addressing the rally, Deputy Chief of Staff Xu Huizi said that the people and armies of China and Korea have forged a profound militant friendship by sharing weal and woe and supporting one another in their long struggle against foreign aggression. Today, this traditional friendship is being strengthened and developed in the struggle to defend world security, build socialism, and realize national reunification, and in the cause of safeguarding peace in Asia as well as throughout the world.

This morning the Chinese delegation visited the Chuche tower in downtown Pyongyang and ascended to the top to have a good view of the city.

Tian Jiyun Delegation Decorated

OW131255 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1204 GMT 11 Jul 86

[By reporter Li Tu]

[Text] Pyongyang, 11 July (XINHUA) -- Yim Chun-chu, vice president of the DPRK, at the national auditorium this morning presented medals and decorations to more than 60 Chinese comrades and to members of the Chinese party and government delegation headed by Vice Premier Tian Jiyun.

Yim Chun-chu first read the Central People's Committee order signed by President Kim Il-song. The order said: The medals and decorations are conferred on the Chinese party and government delegation and other Chinese comrades in recognition of their contributions to developing friendship and cooperation between Korea and China and of their earnest support for Korea's peaceful reunification.

After reading the order, Vice President Yim Chun-chu conferred a national flag medal, first class, on delegation head Tian Jiyun; a freedom and independence medal, first class, on Xu Huizi; and friendship medals, first class, on Jiang Guanghua and Lu Xuejian.

Today Korea also conferred medals and decorations on 59 other Chinese comrades. They included members of the visiting fourth delegation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries and the Chinese-Korean Friendship Association and personnel of the Chinese Embassy and other permanent Chinese missions in Korea.

In reply, delegation headed Tian Jiyun sincerely thanked the Korean party and government on behalf of the awarded Chinese comrades. He said that the medals and decorations were not only a personal honor but, more importantly, they also reflected the fraternal Korean people's valuable friendly sentiments for the Chinese people.

Korean party and government leaders attending the award ceremony included Kye Ung-tae, Yon Hyong-muk, and Pak Chung-kuk. This morning the Chinese party and government delegation also visited Comrade Kim Il-song's former residence in Mangyongdae.

Kim Il-song Meets Tian Jiyun

OW122012 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1536 GMT 12 Jul 86

[By reporter Li Tu]

[Text] Pyongyang, 12 July (XINHUA) -- Kim Il-song, general secretary of the Workers Party of Korea Central Committee and president of the DPRK, met with the Chinese party and government delegation this afternoon. The Chinese delegation is headed by Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau and the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council.

President Kim Il-song said he is very happy that on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance, the Chinese party and government delegation and other delegations have come to Korea to take part in the commemoration activities. He said: The visit to Korea by the Chinese party and government delegation has inspired the Korean people, shown to the whole world the friendship between Korea and China, and contributed to strengthening the friendship.

Comrade Tian Jiyun conveyed to President Kim Il-song regards from Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, and other Chinese leaders. Kim Il-song expressed his thanks and asked Tian Jiyun to convey his regards to Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, and other comrades.

During the cordial and friendly conversation which lasted more than 1 hour, President Kim Il-song and Vice Premier Tian Jiyun exchanged information on each other's countries. Kim Il-song said: In Korea, cold weather has damaged agriculture in some localities, but the overall situation of industrial and agricultural production is good.

After Tian Jiyun briefed him on the latest situation of China's economic structural reform and this year's production, Kim Il-song said: We support your reform and your building of socialism with Chinese characteristics. China has rich experience and it has taken some risks in the reform. China always handles problems with mature methods. He said: We are very happy that you have done your work well and made achievements.

After the conversation, Kim Il-song posed with the delegation for a group photo, and gave a banquet for the delegation. President Kim Il-song today also met with a CPC goodwill visiting group headed by Wang Fang, member of the CPC Central Committee and secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee. Korean party and government leaders Yon Hyong-muk and Kye Ung-tae also took part in the activities.

Tian Attends Nampo Mass Rally

OW131230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1159 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July (XINHUA) -- A mass rally was held in Nampo City today to welcome a Chinese party and government delegation, which is here to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

Nampo City Party Secretary Pak Song-il and Chinese Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, head of the Chinese delegation, in their speeches to the 50,000 people attending the rally, praised the cooperation and friendship between the two countries and emphasized the importance of sustaining efforts to lower tension on the Korean peninsula.

They exchanged silk banners after their speeches. Also present at the rally were Korean party and state leaders Yon Hyong-muk and Yang Hyong-sop.

DPRK Delegation in Shanghai

OW121416 Beijing XINHUA in English 1358 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 12 (XINHUA) -- A Korean party and government delegation headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, arrived here today. The delegation was greeted at the airport by Rui Xinguen, secretary of the Shanghai committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC), and other local leaders.

The Korean visitors were given a rousing welcome by workers of the Baoshan iron and steel complex during their visit there this afternoon. They were briefed on the construction of the complex. Yi Chong-ok wrote in the visitors' book his wish for great achievements by workers of the complex in modernizing China.

The Korean visitors also went on a cruise along the Huangpu River this afternoon. They were entertained at a dinner given by Rui Xingwen and Jiang Zemin, mayor of Shanghai, in the evening.

Chen Pixian Meets DPRK Group

OW131232 Beijing XINHUA in English 0937 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Chen Pixian, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met two delegations from Yanggang and North Pyongan provinces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, here this afternoon at the Great Hall of the People.

The two delegation are led by Pak Chon-hwa and Yu Chae-man, vice-chairmen of the committees for administration and economic guidance of the provinces. Chen briefed the visitors on China's economic reform and had a cordial talk with them.

The delegations have come to China as guests of the people's governments of Jilin and Liaoning Provinces to attend celebrations of the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between the two countries.

Deng Xiaping Meets DPRK Party

OW140731 Beijing XINHUA in English 0712 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said here today that China's on-going reform of the urban economic structure, a comprehensive economic restructuring, also includes reform of some aspects of the country's political structure. Deng, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission of the Communist Party of China (CPC), said that at a meeting with a Korean party and government delegation here this morning.

Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and his delegation are here to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

Deng told the visitors that it is of great significance for China and Korea to exchange delegations on this occasion. It demonstrates the militant unity and fraternal friendship between the two countries. He noted that the two countries, which have maintained sound cooperation for many years, have the common task to continue their cooperation forever.

Yi told Deng that members of his delegation have seen great changes in China during their current visit.

Deng, terming the changes since 1978 as only small ones, said, "We are trying to realize a medium change by the end of this century, i.e., to have a national income exceeding 1,000 billion U.S. dollars, averaging 800 to 1,000 U.S. dollars per head," Deng added. What is more important, he said, is to realize a greater change in the first 30 to 50 years of the next century. "Only by then can we say that we have realized the four modernizations in the country and moved near to the level of developed countries," he said.

Deng said that the whole country is now working to create conditions for such medium and big changes through the current reform. The next five years covered by the country's Seventh Five-Year Plan for socio-economic development will be crucial. If the reform succeeds in this period, he said, conditions will have been created for a long-term, stable and continuous development of the country in this as well as the next century. "Judging by what we have achieved, such a goal can be realized," he asserted.

Yi told Deng that they have spent a good time in China. What has impressed them most is that young administrators they saw in China enterprises are leading production competently.

Deng replied that both Korea and China have paid attention to promoting younger cadres.

Yi conveyed greetings from Korean leaders Kim Il-song and Kim Chong-il to Deng, who in turn asked Yi to pass his best regards to them.

Tian Jiyun Delegation Returns

OW140958 Beijing XINHUA in English 0947 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese party and government delegation returned here this afternoon from Pyongyang after attending celebrations marking the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Sino-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

The delegation was led by Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau and of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and vice-premier.

Greeting the delegation at the airport were Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department under the CPC Central Committee, and Sin In-ha, Korean ambassador to China.

DPRK Delegation Departs Shanghai

OW131228 Beijing XINHUA in English 1153 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 13 (XINHUA) -- A Korean party and government delegation headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Korean Workers' Party Central Committee and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, left here for Beijing this afternoon. Earlier today, the Korean guests visited a shirt workshop and a wrist watch factory in Shanghai.

DPRK DENOUNCES U.S.-ROK REJECTION OF ARMS TALKS

OW140812 Beijing XINHUA in English 0726 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today denounced the U.S.-South Korean refusal to accept a second letter sent by O Chin-u, DPRK minister of People's Armed Forces, calling for tripartite military talks.

The United States and South Korean authorities showed "an extremely irresponsible and insincere attitude" in refusing to accept the letter addressed to William Livesy, commander of U.S. forces in South Korea, and Yi Ki-paek, South Korean defense minister, a spokesman for the DPRK Ministry of People's Armed Forces said in a statement today.

The refusal indicated that the U.S.-South Korean side is "seeking confrontation and war" instead of detente, dialogue and peace, the statement said. Pointing out that the DPRK's proposal for military talks between the U.S. forces and the North and the South of Korea is just and reasonable, the statement called on the United States to abandon its objection to the talks.

The original proposal for tripartite military talks was raised by the DPRK on June 9 but was rejected by the United States and South Korean authorities. The DPRK recently broadcast the text of two letters by O Chin-u urging the U.S.-South Korean side to reconsider the proposal carefully and make a positive response.

XINHUA CITES HANOI RADIO ON LE DUAN DEATH

OW101228 Beijing XINHUA in English 1222 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Hanoi, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Le Duan, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Vietnam, died at the age of 79 after failing to respond to any medical treatment at 03:30 (local time) on July 10, according to an obituary announced by the Voice of Vietnam here today.

Since December 1976 until his death, Le Duan had been general secretary of the Communist Party of Vietnam (CPV). He entered the Central Committee and Political Bureau of CPV in 1951 and was the first secretary of the Central Committee of the CPV from 1960 to 1976.

COMMENTS ON ATTEMPTED COUP IN PHILIPPINES

HK100811 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1143 GMT 8 Jul 86

["Short commentary" by Shao Ling: "The Aquino Regime Peacefully Passes a Crisis" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 8 July (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Yesterday (7 July), 53 year-old President Corazon Aquino put down a coup without resorting to force. This is the first violent coup attempt to overthrow her since she came to power. It can be said that this political victory will help enhance her prestige. Foreign analysts said that with full confidence, the Aquino regime turned the whole incident into a slight embarrassing joke. Corazon Aquino has established an image of calmness and confidence.

The coup was engineered by Tolentino, running mate of former President Marcos. On Sunday [6 July], when President Corazon Aquino went to the southern Philippines for an inspection and Vice President Laurel was visiting Europe, Tolentino mustered some 1,000 servicemen and marines who were Marcos loyalists and stirred up this coup. The performance of the coupists looked remarkably real. Pretending to be serious, they "took an oath of office of acting president" at the Manila Hotel and proclaimed the formation of a "new government." However, this coup was foiled in less than 13 hours. After returning to Manila, Corazon Aquino held a meeting of senior officials, including Defense Minister Enrile and Armed Forces Chief of Staff Ramos. She also made a nationwide speech announcing that the situation in Manila was completely under control. Tolentino and his supporters, gathered at the Manila Hotel, "do not pose any serious threat to the government."

It has just been about 4 months since Corazon Aquino came to power. She inherited an awful mess from Marcos. She urged the nation to give her more time to reconstruct the economy and stabilize the political situation, so that the Philippines could develop on the right track at an earlier time. In fact, over the past 100 days and more, President Aquino has been striving to fulfill the promise she made when she was sworn in. Internally, she adopted a series of measures to overcome the Philippines' serious economic difficulties and to invigorate the national economy. The Philippines is an agricultural country. Thus, she advocated the practice of giving priority to agricultural development. She formulated a series of measures to promote agricultural development, such as cutting export taxes on agricultural products and sales taxes on chemical fertilizer. [paragraph continues]

Through strengthening agricultural development and encouragement of private enterprise development, she strived to create 1 million job opportunities between 1986 and 1987. Furthermore, President Corazon Aquino has been actively seeking new help from foreign capital and aid, so as to ease the foreign debt burden, which amounts to as much as $26.2 million.

In order to resolve the civil war problem, which has seriously puzzled the Philippines, Corazon Aquino released the country's political prisoners, including Sison, former chairman of the Communist Party of the Philippines and Buscayno, commander of the New People's Army. President Corazon Aquino also insisted on holding talks with the Philippine communists. Recently, the Philippine communist leaders agreed on sending representatives to hold cease-fire talks with her so as to end the 17-year-old civil war. Moreover, President Corazon Aquino has not taken any violent action against the loyalists and supporters of Marcos.

On foreign affairs, the Aquino government adopted an active foreign policy. In addition to consolidating its relationship with members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, it continues and actively develops the friendly relations with the United States and China. Vice President Laurel has just completed his visit to China. President Corazon Aquino also expressed that she accepted the Chinese Government's invitation and would visit China within this year. At the same time, she also plans to visit the United States in September.

Of course, the Aquino regime now indeed faces many problems. In particular, the military assumed an ambiguous attitude so that the Marcos loyalists could take this opportunity. On the 100th day after she came to power, Aquino pointed out frankly, "If the time up to this moment is regarded as the honeymoon period, what will happen after the honeymoon is too difficult for me to imagine." Therefore, we can see that she is farsighted and faces difficulties squarely. To acknowledge problems shows that she is brave and full of confidence. She can overcome difficulties by mobilizing people power. But Marcos supporters erroneously thought it was the right time to engineer restorationist activities. Eventually, their activities soon ended in failure. This just shows that they had no understanding of the times.

BURMESE GOVERNMENT DELEGATION VISITS BEIJING

OW102138 Beijing XINHUA in English 1508 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- A Burmese Government delegation headed by U Tint Swe, minister of the first industry, was honored at a dinner hosted here today by Wu Wenying, Chinese minister of textile industry.

In their toasts, the two ministers reviewed with satisfaction the friendship between the two countries and their cooperation in the textile industry.

This morning, the two ministers held talks on the economic and technical cooperation between China and Burma.

U Tint Swe asked his host to convey Burmese President U San Yu's best regards to President Li Xiannian.

The Burmese delegation arrived here yesterday at the invitation of China's Ministry of Textile Industry.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES TRIP TO EUROPE, AFRICA

Meets Greek President, Speaker

OW111230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1205 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 11 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today met with Greek President Christos Sartzetakis and extended an invitation to him to visit China, which was accepted by the president, official sources said. Zhao, who arrived here Thursday on an official visit, accorded the invitation on behalf of Chinese President Li Xiannian during a courtesy call on the Greek President at the Presidential palace here this morning.

Sartzetakis welcomed Zhao to Greece. Premier Zhao said it was his honor to have the opportunity to make the acquaintance of President Sartzetakis. Sartzetakis said that the Greek people have an affection and admiration for the great Chinese people. They are not unknown to each other though their countries are far apart geographically, he noted.

During another meeting later today with Parliament Speaker Ioannis Alevras, Premier Zhao praised Alevras for his contribution to the development of Sino-Greek friendship and cooperation and expressed the hope that there would be more contacts between the two countries' parliamentarians.

Alevras, who led a parliamentary delegation on a visit to China three years ago, said he was most impressed during the visit by the Chinese people's hospitality and their determined efforts to achieve their country's prosperity and to raise people's living standards.

The Chinese premier this morning also laid a wreath at the "Monument to Unknown Soldier" at the Constitutional Square in the city center to honor those who had devoted their lives to the national independence of their country.

Visits Archeological Museum

OW111342 Beijing XINHUA in English 1332 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 11 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today expressed the hope that China and Greece would further promote their cultural exchanges. Premier Zhao said this at the end of a visit to the National Archeological Museum of Athens this morning. Accompanied by Greek Minister of Culture and Science Melina Mercouri, Zhao toured the major sections of the famous museum with great interest.

The Chinese premier inspected the exhibits of the earliest stone sculptures and other excavated articles that feature the full range of almost 3,000 years of ancient Greek civilization. After the short visit to the museum, Zhao said that both China and Greece have the most ancient civilizations. "Greece and China would make more contributions to the world if the two nations increase cultural exchanges," he said.

The Archeological Museum, built in 1866, has a collection of the most splendid works of ancient arts found in Greece. It is the biggest and richest museum of Greece and one of the most significant museums in the world for the study of ancient Greek arts.

Hosts Return Banquet in Athens

OW120022 Beijing XINHUA in English 2347 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 11 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a return banquet here this evening toward the end of his two-day official goodwill visit to the Hellenic Republic. Present at the banquet were more than 200 people including Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defense Ioannis Kharalambopoulos, President of the Greek Parliament Ioannis Alevras, senior officers of the Greek Army, Greek-Chinese Friendship Association officials, other well known personages and representatives of Overseas Chinese.

In a toast at the banquet, Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed deep gratitude for the hospitality accorded to him by the Greek people and government, which, he said, made him feel at home. He said that his fruitful talks with Prime Minister Papandreou, his cordial meeting with President Christos Sartzetakis and Parliament President Ioannis Alevras and his contacts with other people had helped enhance mutual understanding and trust. "This will further promote the friendship and cooperation between the people of China and Greece, he said. Zhao said that his visit had reached the desired aim and his tour of the Crete Island after the official visit will make his visit more pleasant and more memorable.

In reply, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou paid high tribute to the achievements made by the Chinese people in economic and social development, adding that China will play an even bigger role in the international arena in the remaining years of this century and also in the next.

Papandreou said that through talks, he has found that he shared identical or similar views with the Chinese premier on major international issues. China and Greece have many other things in common, he said. Both are conscientiously working for world peace, detente, and the independence and freedom of the people. The bilateral relations between Greece and China, he noted, have made a big stride forward, though it has not been long.

The Chinese premier is scheduled to tour the Crete Island, one of the largest in Greece noted for the ancient palace buildings and beautiful scenery there. He will fly to Spain from there on the fourth leg of his official visit to the Mediterranean and Balkan region.

At noon today, Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen, who is accompanying Premier Zhao on the visit, held talks with Greek Foreign Minister Karolos Papoulias. No details about the talks were revealed.

Meets Greek Communist Leader

OW112358 Beijing XINHUA in English 2342 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today met with Leonidas Kyrkos, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Greece (interior) at the Athens Astir Hotel where is is staying. Zhao, also a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, congratulated Kyrkos on his election as general secretary of the Central Committee of his party at its fourth congress held last year. Zhao invited Kyrkos to visit China at a time convenient to him.

Concludes Visit to Greece

OW120944 Beijing XINHUA in English 0931 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, July 12 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left here today for a tour of the Crete Island winding up the substantive part of his official goodwill visit to Greece. A send-off ceremony was held at the Athens international airport. Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou headed a host of high-ranking officials of the Greek Government to say good-bye to the Chinese premier.

The premier's visit, which began on July 10, is considered here as a great impetus on the development of the bilateral relations between China and Greece.

Premier Zhao said in his toast at the return banquet yesterday evening that he has achieved what he had expected of the visit. To help further the economic and trade relations between the two countries and open broader prospects for cooperation.

During the three-day visit in Athens, Premier Zhao was received by Greek President Christos Sartzetakis and met with Greek Parliament President Yannis Alevras.

The Prime ministers of the two countries also exchanged views on international topics, particularly on arms race between the two superpowers, Europe's role in world order and problems in the Mediterranean and other parts of the world. Both agreed that they shared identical or close views.

Despite the tight schedule, Premier Zhao Ziyang visited a historical museum to acquaint himself with the long history of Greece and the wisdom of the people of this ancient civilization. This, and his coming tour of the beautiful Crete Island, will make his visit to Greece "more pleasant and more memorable" as Premier Zhao put it.

Wrap-Up on Athens Visit

OW130138 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1606 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the Chinese State Council, called on President Christos Sartzetakis of the Hellenic Republic this morning. President Sartzetakis said: "I am very glad to meet the premier of great China today. The Greek people cherish the feeling of deep love and admiration for the Chinese people. Despite the long distance between our two countries, the Greek and Chinese peoples are not unfamiliar with each other."

After the meetin, Zhao Ziyang placed a wreath at the Tomb of Unknown Soldiers in downtown Athens.

At noon on 10 July, Premier Zhao Ziyang called on Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and had a friendly conversation with him. In the afternoon, Zhao Ziyang and Papandreou held official talks on the international situyation and the further development of Sino-Greek relations of friendship and cooperation. The premiers of the two countries shared identical or similar views on the questions they discussed.

On the evening of 10 July, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou hosted a grand banquet in honor of Premier Zhao Ziyang. In a speech delivered at the banquet, Prime Minister Papandreou said that the relations between Greece and China are quite satisfactory, and that the two countries have the same historical characteristics.

He pointed out: "If the principles of national independence, preservation of world peace, opposition to hegemonism, non-interference in others' internal affairs, and respect for the rights of weak and small countries have increasingly become the basis of international relations today, the Greece and China have really made concerted efforts to bring this about."

Papandreou said that China's new economic policies, formulated and put into effect in recent years, have opened new vistas for the development and improvement of economic and trade relations between the two countries.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said in his speech that the Chinese people heartily rejoice at the great achievements the Greek people have scored in building up their own country and wish them to achieve continuous new successes on the road of advancement.

Referring to the international situation, Zhao Ziyang said that development in peace is a common desire of all countries in the world. He pointed out: "Now, more and more countries are determined to hold their fates in their own hands, take positive actions of one kind or another to oppose aggression, and safeguard peace. It is our firm belief that with the joint efforts of all peoples and all peace forces in the world, the international tension can be eased, and world peace can be maintained."

Touching on the Mediterranean situation, Zhao Ziyang said that the Chinese people are deeply concerned about the situation in that region. He said that China is opposed to all forms of terrorism, the use of terrorism as a tool for political struggle, and the encroachment upon the territorial sovereignty of other countries on the excuse of striking at terrorism. The Mediterranean Sea, which links the three continents of Europe, Asia, and Africa, should be a sea of peace and freindship rather than an arena for staging a show of force, he stressed.

Leaves Crete for Madrid

OW140736 Beijing XINHUA in English 0720 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Crete Island, Greece, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left here for Madrid this morning at the conclusion of his official goodwill visit to Greece.

During his two-day stay on this largest resort island in Greece, the premier visited the World-famous Palace of Knosos and cruised the beautiful Gulf of Marmbeliou. He was received warmly by the local government and people.

Premier Zhao arrived here last Saturday from Athens. Before his departure, the Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou held a send-off ceremony for him.

Spanish Leader Welcomes Visit

OW110930 Beijing XINHUA in English 0823 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 10 (XINHUA) — Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez said here today that the upcoming visit by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang will promote friendly bilateral relations and cooperation between the two countries.

In an interview with Radio Beijing, Gonzalez stressed that Zhao's visit should be considered in a European context. Since joining the European Community in January, Gonzalez said Spain wants the community's foreign policy to be a coordinated one. Therefore, Zhao's visit will be beneficial both in a bilateral context and a European context, he added.

Gonzalez pointed out that Madrid and Beijing do not have any differences standing in the way of developing bilateral cooperation, instead, they share viewpoints on the international situation. He described this as an advantage for both countries. "It is on this basis that we have begun technology exchanges, which will further consolidate our relationship," the prime minister said.

Turning to world peace, Gonzalez said that Spain has consistently refused to have atomic weapons on its territory.

Gonzalez spoke highly of China's policy of "opening to the outside world." He said that this policy has been responsible for incalculable historic changes in China. He told Radio Beijing that during his tour of China last year he saw the vitality of a society which is in the process of modernization. To him, Gonzalez added, the opening of China to the outside world is an outcome of modernization itself.

"China will contribute, in the international context, to the overcoming of the present bipolar world and introduce elements of multipolarity to international relations and further guarantee the development of peace," Gonzalez concluded.

Visit Hailed by Spanish Press

OW140210 Beijing XINHUA in English 0155 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 13 (XINHUA) -- ABC, one of Spain's large, influential newspapers, today said Chinese Priemier Zhao Ziyang's forthcoming visit to Madrid is of "special significance" and will have a positive impact on Spanish-Sino relations.

The Madrid daily noted in an article that Premier Zhao's entourage includes many important leaders responsible for China's moderization program.

The Spanish national TV station last night broadcast a special program introducing the rapid development of Sino-Spanish relations and China's achievements in its moderization construction.

Premier Zhao is due to arrive here tomorrow morning for a four-day visit after winding up a tour of Romania, Yugoslavia and Greece. He will with Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzale for talks on international issues and bilateral relations before continuing his six-nation tour that will also take him to Turkey and Tunisia.

ZHAO ZIYANG HAILS YUGOSLAVIA'S REFORMS

OW101250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1231 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, who has concluded a visit to Yugoslavia, says China, which is focusing its structural reform on urban economy, has been greatly enlightened by the experience in Yugoslavia's reform.

In an interview with the Yugoslav newspaper "NEWS WEEKLY", which will appear Friday, Zhao said that Yugoslavia, "a pioneer of reform", has been carrying out reforms unswervingly and persistently in the past 30 years under the leadership of late President Josip Broz Tito. "The Chinese people are encouraged by the achievements in the Yugoslav reform, and have been greatly enlightened by the experience in the Yugoslav reform," Zhao said. He believes that Yugoslavians will overcome the temporary difficulties, and continue gaining successfully in the course of their reform.

Zhao also noted that the tide of reform has surged forward in almost all the socialist countries in recent years, and this is by no means an accidental phenomenon. China hopes reforms in all socialist countries will benefit their people, he added.

In the interview which was made July 7, the Chinese premier told "NEWS WEEKLY" that the focus of reform in China has been shifted from rural to urban areas to enhance the vitality of enterprises, develop a market system and set up a macro-regulating mechanism that gives greater play to various economic levers. The new economic structure, Zhao went on, will let enterprises compete and give them sole responsibility for their profits and losses. They will manage themselves, and be allowed to accumulate funds, transform and develop themselves, he emphasized. Over the past five years, Zhao said, China's gross national product (GNP) and national income grew at an average annual rate of about 10 percent whereas from 1953 to 1980 the rate was between 6 and 8 percent.

Referring to rural reform, the premier said relations between the state and farmers have changed enormously, with farmers now working to honor economic contracts or to meet market demand directly. China's total agricultural output over the past five years grew 11 percent annually, and the annual per capita income of rural residents jumped 14 percent -- statistics which are unprecedented in Chinese history, said Zhao.

As to urban reform, Zhao said, there are now 4.5 million self-employed people playing an indispensable role in the economies of China's towns and cities, Zhao said. But, he added that the individual economy accounts for only a small proportion of the national economy: less than one percent of the total industrial output value and 15 percent of the total turnover in the retail and service trades.

Therefore, public-owned enterprises are decisive factors in urban reform. Zhao said key measures in such reform include enlarging the decision-making power of enterprises and lessening the government's administrative intervention in their affairs. Zhao admitted that policies toward small public-owned enterprises are more flexible, while big state-owned enterprises still lack vigor.

At present, Zhao said, there are more than 2,500 joint ventures, cooperative enterprises and exclusively foreign owned firms in China. Arrangements are being made to set up 3,800 similar enterprises, and China is preparing to give more preferential terms to foreign investors.

Asked if China has encountered any resistance at home or abroad to its economic reforms, the premier said, "Traditional concepts, force of habit and bureaucracy are obstacles to reform." But the reforms will continue, Zhao declared, because the majority of people already enjoy tangible benefits from the on-going reforms and will continue to support them, as do the nation's leaders.

Zhao said China regards the threat to world peace as another obstacle to its economic reform. Therefore, China is determined to work with all people throughout the world to oppose war and maintain an enduring peace.

COMMENTARIES ON ZHAO'S YUGOSLAVIA VISIT

Newspapers Praise Visit

OW102001 Beijing XINHUA in English 1441 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Yugoslavia brought new values to relations between Yugoslavia and China, according to comments in today's Yugoslav daily newspapers.

A commentary in "POLITIKA" said, "China is one of the socialist countries that appreciates in a respectful manner the achievements and the course of Yugoslav self-management system." "On the other hand," the commentary said, "Yugoslavia is one of the countries that follows China's economic reform with great interest and expresses a political support for China in seeking its own course of the reform."

The newspaper said the two countries view the world situation in an obviously similar vein. "As independent and positive factors in international relations, the two countries hold identical views on socialism and peace," the commentary said.

The daily "BORBA" described Yugoslav-Chinese relations as excellent. The paper said besides words and expressions of friendship and wishes for all-around cooperation, the Yugoslav-Chinese talks contained many concrete proposals for turning good wishes into reality.

Visit Will Enhance Ties

OW110554 Beijing XINHUA in English 0531 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslavia and China are determined to develop their long-term cooperation, a Yugoslav Foreign Ministry spokesman said today at the end of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Yugoslavia. In a press conference, Aleksandar Stanic said that the Chinese premier's visit was a big step in the development of Sino-Yugoslav friendly relations and cooperation and was important in the maintaining of world peace.

During Zhao's four-day stay, the leaders of the two countries had identical or similar views on international issues they discussed, the spokesman noted, adding that the visit will help the two countries to play further role in the international arena and will promote democratization of inter-state relations and help preserve world peace.

ZHAO ZIYANG INTERVIEWED BY YUGOSLAV JOURNAL

HK110438 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1152 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Report: "Premier Zhao Ziyang Answers the Questions of the Editor-in-Chief of Yugoslav 'NEW WEEKLY'" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Belgrade, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met with Jiejiqi [2638 1015 1142], editor-in-chief of the Yugoslav newspaper NEW WEEKLY, on 7 July, and answered his questions about China's economic reform. The following is the full text of the questions and answers:

Question: Comrade Premier, could you please talk about the orientation and principle of China's economic structural reform and its achievements?

Answer: China's economic reform began in the countryside in the late 1970's. Two years ago, the focus of reform was shifted to cities. Now, the reform mainly serves the three interrelated purposes: First, making enterprises more dynamic; second, developing a market system; and third, establishing and perfecting macroeconomic regulatory means, and in particular, giving play to the law of value and various economic levers.

We hold that in order to develop a planned commodity economy, it is necessary to invigorate the enterprises. Socialism is a vigorous system. It requires that all enterprise managers and workers display a high degree of initiative, enthusiasm, and creativity. The new economic structure that we are building will enable the enterprises to operate in a vigorous and dynamic way. Under this structure, the enterprises will compete with each other under basically equal conditions, will bear sole responsibilities for their profits and losses, will have full decision-making power in their routine operations, and will have the ability to accumulate funds, transform technology, and develop production capacity by relying on their own strength.

Reform is a grand project of systems engineering. We will link our overall reform program with the settlement of some urgent questions in economic development in a certain period and will adopt well-coordinated reform measures in an orderly way according to needs and possibilities. This is an evolutionary process. We are trying to advance steadily and prudently, but we will always be firm in carrying the reform through to the end.

As far as the achievements are concerned, I want to point out these facts: China's Sixth 5-Year Plan between 1981 and 1985 has been successfully fulfilled. In the past 5 years, China's gross social production, total industrial and agricultural output value, gross national production, and national income have all increased by an annual average of about 10 percent, while the annual average growth rates of these items in the 28 years between 1953 and 1980 were merely between 6 percent and 8 percent. The successful fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan shows that our new construction principles and economic policies are better suited to our country's realities. It also shows that our economic structural reform has achieved initial results.

Question: What changes have occurred in China's cities and countryside through reforms in recent years? What position do the Chinese peasants and their enterprises now hold? To what degree can they independently decide their own operations? To what degree are they subject to the state's control?

Answer: Our rural reform has been carried out for 7 years. In this period, the first reform step was to change the collective farming system based on production teams and communes to the household production responsibility system based on output contracts. Then the system of state monopolized purchase of farm products was replaced with the system of state contract purchase of farm products so that farm products are brought to the markets. The first reform step has been generally adopted in all parts of the country, and this change has been thorough. The second step which reforms the farm product purchase system was started last year, so the change has not yet been perfectly accomplished. More efforts are needed to consolidate this reform step. However, it has also been generally adopted in all parts of the country. Fundamentally speaking, the state's relations with the peasants have been greatly improved. If, in the past, the peasants merely worked for fulfilling the tasks assigned by the state, then they now work for fulfilling the economic contracts or for directly meeting the market demands. Therefore, the rural economic activities are now unprecedentedly brisk and the peasants have unprecedentedly high enthusiasm for production. In the past 5 years, the total agricultural output value increased steadily at an annual average of 11 percent, and the rural per capita income increased at an average of 14 percent each year. These high growth rates have not been seen before in China's history.

As for urban reforms, many foreign observers often pay attention merely to the appearance of the individual economy in China. Indeed, some 4.5 million people in various cities and towns are now engaged in individual businesses, which play an indispensable complementary role in our country's economy. However, their proportion in the national economy is still very small. These private businesses account for less than 1 percent of the country's total industrial output value and account for merely 15 percent of the turnover in the retail commerce and various service trades. Therefore, we hold that the reform measures we have adopted for the public enterprises form a decisive factor that contributes to the increasingly brisk urban economies in recent years. The major measures we have adopted include: expanding the enterprise decision-making power in their business operations, reducing government interference in the enterprise operations, narrowing the scope of mandatory plans and expanding the scope of guidance plans and regulations by market forces, relaxing the controls over the prices of various small commodities, allowing various kinds of production materials and consumer goods beyond the scope of planned transfer to be freely sold on the markets, changing the system of profit delivery to the state by the enterprises owned by the whole people into the system of tax payment, changing the system of state appropriation of funds for enterprise capital construction projects to the system of offering bank loans, breaking barriers between localities and between departments, creating conditions for horizontal economic association between enterprises in the fields of funds, technology, production, and circulation, and so on. Now, small public enterprises have become rather dynamic, but, comparatively, the large public enterprises still lack vigor. This is a problem we are trying to solve.

We hold that enlivening microeconomic activities and strengthening macroeconomic management are two independent aspects, and neither side can be neglected. With regard to the relationship between the state and the enterprises, the state's direct control over the enterprises will be gradually changed into indirect control.

Question: Why does China want to seek foreign partners to establish joint ventures? What experience has China gained in this regard? What forms has China taken to carry out economic cooperation with developed countries?

Answer: China now has more than 2,500 Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperation enterprises, and enterprises solely owned by foreign capital, and the establishment of some 3,800 similar enterprises are under preparation. Allowing and encouraging foreign investment in China is an important part of China's policy of opening up to the outside world. In a state of national seclusion, we will not be able to realize modernization, and the policy of national seclusion is not in the interests of the Chinese people.

With regard to the utilization of foreign funds, our principle is to lay down an overall plan for all such items and devolve management authority to various levels. In order to give more conveniences and benefit to foreign investors, China has established four special economic zones and designated 14 open cities and some open zones in the coastal areas. This does not mean that other areas will not be opened to the outside world. As the special economic zones, open cities, and open zones are economically developed areas in China where transport conditions are better than other areas, coupled with the adoption of simplified procedures and preferential policies, 80 percent of foreign investment items are now made in these coastal areas.

Admittedly, the conditions for opening factories in China are not satisfactory enough. However, the low labor costs and other expenses, the vast territory, and the rich resources in China are greatly attractive to foreign investors. In the past, we did not make full use of the possibility of utilizing foreign funds. We are now summing up experience in this regard and are ready to offer more preferential terms to foreign investors. After the gradual adoption of new policies, foreign friends in the business circles will find that China's conditions for running enterprises are indeed competitive.

China is opened to the whole world. China is opened to both capitalist countries and socialist countries, to both developed and developing countries. Our foreign economic cooperation not only includes the use of foreign funds, but also includes the development of trade and technological cooperation. All forms of economic and technological cooperation accepted in the international community will be adopted by China.

Question: Is China's reform encountering any obstructions at home or abroad?

Answer: Anything may encounter obstructions. Traditional mentalities, habits and bureaucratism all form obstructions to reform. However, most people hve benefited from the reform and will continue to see the benefits of reform. From their personal experience, they have more and more clearly realized that the old structure hinders the development of our production, the improvement of our livelihood, and the prosperity of our country. We can say that China's reform is a cause supported by the whole nation. Some people may not understand some reform measures or may not become accustomed to the new conditions. They will finally come to understand them and get used to them.

I would like to point out here that among party and government leaders in China, there are no differences on the principled issue of carrying out reform. The "Decision on Reform of the Economic Structure" was unanimously adopted by a plenary session of the party Central Committee.

As for outside the country, I am glad to see that with the passing of time, more and more comrades and friends have understood and sympathized with China's reform. If there is any obstruction to China's reform outside the country, I think that the threats against world peace form an obstruction to China's reform. Therefore, we are determined to make joint efforts with all peace-loving countries and peoples to oppose war and maintain lasting world peace.

Question: Is China considering any reform of its political system?

Answer: In recent years, we have done a great deal of work to improve socialist democracy and the socialist legal system, and we will continue to do so.

We have laid down a policy for simultaneously building both material and spiritual civilizations. That is to say people's mental conditions, values, and cultural attainments should all be suited to the new situation of reform and opening up. This will also prevent the appearance of new problems under the new situation.

With the all-round development of the economic structural reform, the functions of government institutions will change. The government structure and the cadre systems must also be reformed step by step. Without reform, things in this regard will not be suited to the requirements of the economic structural reform.

Question: How does China view the reform trials in other socialist countries? If possible, could you please provide your opinion on Yugoslavia's reform?

Answer: In recent years, there is a trend of economic structural reform in almost all socialist countries. It is not an accidental phenomenon. I hope that reforms in all these countries will achieve the purpose of bringing benefit to the people.

Yugoslavia is a pioneer of reform. For more than 30 years, according to Comrade Tito's instructions, the Yugoslav people have been persistently carrying out reform with an indomitable spirit. The Chinese people admire and appreciate this very much. China and Yugosalvia have different historical backgrounds, national traditions, and geographical positions. Reforms in our two countries also have their respective characteristics. This shows that both of our countries share the same belief of combining the universal truth of Marxism with each other's national conditions. The Chinese people are inspired by the achievements of Yugoslavia's reform and have learned a lot of useful things from Yugoslavia's reform experience. I believe that the Yugoslav people will certainly overcome the transient difficulties and will win new victories in their reform.

ZHAO ZIYANG CABLES THANKS TO YUGOSLAVIA'S MIKULIC

OW120030 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0807 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Athens, 10 Jul (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang would up his official goodwill visit to the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and left Ljubljana by special plane this morning. As his special plane left Yugoslavia, he sent a message from the plane to Comrade Branko Mikulic, president of the Federal Executive Council of Yugoslavia. In the message, he expressed his heartfelt thanks for the hospitality accorded him during his stay in Yugoslavia.

The message says: "I am greatly satisfied that your efforts made my visit a success. We have exchanged views on issues of common interest and reached a wide-ranging unanimity. We are happy about the great achievements made by Yugoslavia in socialist construction. The friendly feelings shown by the people of various nationalities of Yugoslavia for the Chinese people have made a deep impression on us."

Premier Zhao said in the message: I am convinced that the relations of comprehensive friendship and cooperation between China and Yugoslavia will surely be developed further.

When Premier Zhao and party were leaving Ojubljana, capital of Yugoslav Republic of Slovenia, they were seen off at the airport by Dusan Sinigoj, president of the Executive Council of Slovenia.

ROMANIAN CP COMMUNIQUE HAILS ZHAO ZIYANG VISIT

OW121020 Beijing XINHUA in English 0630 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Bucharest, July 11 (XINHUA) — The talks between Romanian President Nicolae Ceausescu and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang will play a decisive role in strengthening the friendship and cooperation between the two parties and the two nations, AGERPRES reported today, quoting a Romanian communist Party communique.

The communique said that the Executive Political Committee of the Romanian Communist Party Central Committee has noted with satisfaction the determination shown by both sides in the talks to further develop the traditional relations between the two countries in all fields.

The communique stressed the two leaders had identical or similar views on major international issues and praised their cooperation in the international arena.

The committee demanded the government work swiftly on implementing the projects Zhao and Romania leaders decided that the two countries would work on.

GUANGDONG, SHANGHAI HIT BY TYPHOON PEGGY; 21 DEAD

HK140256 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 14 Jul 86 p 1

[By staff reporters]

[Text] Fifty-two people died and more than 700 were injured when Typhoon Peggy and a strong tornado struck the south and east China coast at Guangdong and Shanghai over the weekend.

In Guangdong Province, Typhoon Peggy, accompanied by torrential rain, battered the eastern part of the province on Friday, leaving 21 dead and 297 injured, a provincial official said.

In Shanghai, China's largest city, a powerful tornado lashed the southeastern suburbs, claiming 31 lives and injuring more than 500.

Li Gaisheng of the Guangdong Provincial Disaster Prevention office told CHINA DAILY that more than 100,000 people were stranded by the flooding caused by heaving rains after Typhoon Peggy swept across the province, severing all traffic and communications links.

A spokesman at the Central Meteorological Station in Beijing said downpours had washed away more than 4,700 houses and damaged 43,600 others.

Troops have been called in to help with the rescue work. About 20,000 people have been moved out of the affected areas so far.

Li Guo, deputy head of Guangdong's disaster headquarters, said earlier that Typhoon Peggy destroyed 680 bridges and blew away more than 1,000 kilometres of telephone wires, disconnecting 3,000 lines. More than 200 mm of rain fell within 24 hours, flooding 392,000 hectares of farmland.

"Total losses are estimated at 600 million yuan ($166 million)," he said.

Efforts are being made to rescue some 10,000 people still stranded by flooding in Jiexi and Puning counties near Shangtou City. More than 10,000 people in Huiyang Prefecture have been moved out by boat.

Li Gaisheng said the flood waters were still rising and the death toll would certainly be higher.

Typhoon Peggy now moved to Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region and became a low pressure front.

In Shanghai, about 1,300 houses were destroyed and power supplies cut off when the tornado passed through more than 20 villages in the city's Nanhui, Fengxian, and Chuansha counties on Friday afternoon.

Nanhui County reported the most serious damage. Nine people died when their houses collapsed, two were reported missing and 15 seriously wounded in the country's Danzhi village. The tornado flattened 193 houses and large areas of farmland were flooded. The tornado blew off the roofs of five workshops at a motor factory in Xinchange Village. In Chuansha County, a 20-ton crane was blown up into the air, landing on a 40-ton cement boat. One million yuan worth of silk cloth and embroidery was lost when the tornado hit the Jianzhen Silk Factory, destroying the roof and severing high voltage wires.

Rescue teams were immediately sent to the disaster areas. Vice-Mayor Ni Tianzen and Deputy Secretary of the Municipal Party Committee Huang Ju rushed to the area to direct the relief operation. Two hours after the tornado, a disaster relief co-ordination centre was set up on the spot, while 450 police officers and more than 100 vehicles including 19 fire engines were summoned for emergency rescue work only five minutes after the alarm was raised.

The tornado, the worst for 30 years, caused extensive damage but total losses had not yet been worked out, a municipal official said.

RENMIN RIBAO WARNS LEADERS ON CONCEALING SHORTCOMINGS

HK110315 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 5 July 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Leaders Should Not Shield Shortcomings -- More on Rectifying the Unhealthy Trend of a Trade"]

[Text] While rectifying the unhealthy trend of a trade, leaders must uphold principles and must not hide faults and shortcomings. This is an important point in the experience of some central departments and some units in Beijing. Only thus can we make a good start in this work.

The unhealthy trend of a trade appears in the process of various business activities. The essence of such irregularities is to use the functions of the trade to seek selfish gains. The buniness activities of various trades are interrelated to each other. If leading comrades of a trade cannot adhere to a principled stand to effectively check the unhealthy trend in their trade, then they can find all kinds of pretexts to hide wrongdoings and to shirk their responsibilities. For example, when people criticize the practice of rough loading and unloading, they may argue that as the package was not opened and the goods were not inspected in the process of loading and unloading, we the broken goods may be a manufacturer's quality problem; they may even argue that the goods are broken by the consignees themselves after they take delivery of the goods. So they retort: "How can the blame be put on us?" As each sticks to his own argument, the case will just become confused and the problem will not be effectively solved.

Admittedly, the business activities of a trade are conditioned by many factors. When problems exist in the work of a trade, we cannot put the blame completely on outsiders and workers of this trade without regard to the objective conditions and the external factors. However, the unhealthy trend of a trade is different from ordinary faults and shortcomings in people's work. It refers to the irregular actions of seeking selfish gains by taking advantage of the routine functions of a trade. When handling such cases, we should require only those who "have contracted the disease" to "take the medicine." The unhealthy trend of a trade or unit must be dealt with by comrades, expecially leading comrades, in this trade or unit. Their responsibilities must not be shifted onto other people.

Some leaders conceal the problems in their trades or units, because they think that "one's dirty linen must not be washed in public." They are not willing to publicize the problems in their trades and units for fear of losing face, damaging their reputation, losing such titles of honor as "civilized units," "pacesetters," or "advanced units," or losing their bonuses. These comrades like to trust to luck. As long as the irregularities are not serious, they may not be noticed and handled by the upper authorities.

So they try hard to conceal such problems and shift responsibilities onto other people in order to turn big problems into small ones and turn small problems into no problem at all.

Our comrades must not have such a wrong idea. Problems cannot be concealed for ever. An unhealthy trend will spread rapidly in a trade like a virus and will become an epidemic disease in the whole trade, if it is not promptly checked. In that case, the trade's reputation will be ruined, and workers throughout the trade will be contaminated by this disease. Even the "neighbors" may also be "infected." This is not an insignificant problem that we can neglect. Leading comrades in all trades and units must be regard the irregularities in their trades and units as unavoidable slight problems in the routine business activities as people may always gain the advantages of being in a favorable and convenient position. They must not try to gloss over these problems and find pretexts to shirk their responsibilities.

We advocate that leading cadres should take the initiative in checking unhealthy trends in a trade. That is, they should, first of all, not involve themselves in any irregular practice, and at the same time, adhere to the principles in dealing with the problems exposed in their trade or unit. They must be serious in handling such cases and must not try to shield the wrongdoers. If they can do this, it will not be too hard to check the unhealthy trends of various trades.

WANG MENG ADDRESSES CULTURAL MEETING ON POLICY

HK111415 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1317 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Report by reporter Lin Hua: "Wang Meng Delivers Policy Address at Meeting of Directors of Cultural Departments (Bureaus)" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Newly-appointed Culture Minister Wang Meng delivered a 2 and 1/2-hour policy speech today during his first meeting with the participatnts in a national conference of directors of cultural departments (bureaus).

Wang Meng first talked about the new situation emerging in the field of literature and art. He said: Thanks to the central authorities' inspiration, an atmosphere characterized by mutual understanding, mutual trust, and mutual respect is gradually taking shape; people are more and more eagerly looking forward to the reform; and the present period is the period most favorable to cultural and artistic development since the founding of the PRC. However, it should also be noted that in the wake of the rapid progress of the four modernizations program and the development of the situation in the reform, people's thinking, conception, lifestyle, and psychological frame are changing constantly, and the traditional stagecraft, in face of new challenges, needs further development, new ideas, and finer quality.

Wang Meng said: In order to keep up with the new situation, we must strive to ensure that culture and art will develop steadily over the long term. It is necessary to give first priority to the principal goal of preserving unity and stability and building the four modernizations. It is also necessary to comprehensively and accurately understand and implement the party's principles and policies on the cultural and art work in the new period.

He said: the party's policies on culture and art are an organic whole. We should comprehensively understand and correctly implement these policies, and restrain from stubbornly persisting in our own views and from quoting out of context.

When talking about some existing differences of opinion and disputes, Wang Meng pointed out: The more flourishing artistic creation and theoretical study are, the more easily disputes and differences of opinions will burst out. This is a normal phenomenon. Only differences and disputes can inspire people to go on with exploration. Wang criticized those who uphold extreme views and resort to radical acts, complaining that they just want to be treated kindly but tolerate no difference of opinion. They challenge others in an overbearing manner and attack others with exaggerated and bitterly sarcastic terms. This is unfavorable to the shaping of an open and harmonious environment.

Wang Meng pointed out: It is necessary to let everybody speak out freely and to promote the exploratory spirit. At the same time, we must try our best to maintain a tolerant and modest attitude and to listen to different opinions. We must not prohibit people from criticizing, allowing them to sing only praises.

Wang Meng maintained that the reform of the cultural and art structure must be launched resolutely and cautiously and great efforts be made to improve the quality of writers and artists. He said: At present China is lagging far behind others in the fields of literature and art, whether in terms of the scale, quality, or quantity. Therefore, we must work hard to raise our cultural and artistic standards and make it our central task in cultural and art development.

In his speech, Wang Meng expounded in particular on the stable and consistent nature of the central authorities' policy toward literature and art. He said: Our central leaders have always advoctaed emancipation of the mind and encouraged people to make bold exploration. The central authorities have just taken moderate measures to cope with all the criticism and disputes that have ever burst out. No massive criticism against any figure has been launched so far. Remarking on popular works catering to vulgar tastes currently emerging in society, which he called "market culture," Wang Meng held that something can be done to meet the demand of different levels. He said: The essential point is that we must unremittingly enhance the public's appreciation standards. Only by creating a greater number of healthy fine spiritual products with social benefits can we constantly fulfill the wide variety of demands at different levels arising from the broad masses' cultural life.

MEETINGS URGE COOPERATION WITH DEMOCRATIC PARTIES

HK130428 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1326 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Report: "Noted Members of Various Democratic Parties Point Out That Cooperation Among Various Parties Must be Codified Into Laws and Institutionalized" — ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — In the past few days, various democratic parties in Beijing and the Association of Industry and Commerce held forums one after another to mark the 30th anniversary of the introduction of the 8-character principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" by the CPC.

Some celebrities who have experienced hardships suggested that cooperation among various parties must be codified into laws and institutionalized.

In 1956, the CPC introduced this principle, thus heartening the members of various democratic parties. However, in 1957, the anti-rightist movement began and many members of these democratic parties were referred to as rightists. During the "four clean-ups" movement and the "Cultural Revolution," which followed the anti-rightist movement, people only paid lip service to this 8-character principle. Since the 3d plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, this principle has been implemented again. At the 12th CPC National Congress, on the basis of this 8-character principle, General Secretary Hu Yaobang introduced another 9-character principle -- the principle of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe." The two 8-character principles have been combined to form a 16-character principle.

In the past few days, various democratic parties have been holding forums. Those who attended the forums suggested that by boldly introducing an 8-character principle and by developing it into a 16-character principle, the CPC has shown that it is broad-minded. They said: The two 8-character principles have been introduced in accordance with both present and past circumstances. Over the past 30 years, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the cooperation and mutual supervision between various parties have very significantly contributed to perfecting socialist democracy and the socialist legal system, to spending up the four modernizations, and to the reunification of the motherland.

Those who attended the forum held by the Central Committee of the China Democratic League affirmed the contemporary and historical significance of the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision." They pointed out that in order to earnestly implement the principles of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal or woe," it is necessary to further eliminate the pernicious "leftist" influences and to institutionalize and codify into laws the cooperation among various parties.

At the forum held by the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, Lu Jiaxi said: the principle of "mutual supervision" is still important under the present circumstances. It is necessary to find out whether or not our work runs counter to the development of things and whether or not we adhere to the principle of seeking truth from facts and to treat each other with sincerity. Only by doing this can we "treat each other with all sincerity."

At the forum held by the Central Committee of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, Lei Jieqiong pointed out that in order to sincerely implement the 16-character principle, it is necessary to pay special attention to promoting non-communists. She said: As far as I know, nearly all the principals and headmasters of secondary and primary schools are party members. The CPC's policies are not properly implemented in this respect. On the other hand, this encourages those snobs who "join the party to be officials." She pointed out that formalism still haunts the implementation of the 16-character principle. She suggested that "mutual supervision" must be institutionalized and codified into laws before the principle can be earnestly implemented.

Democratic Leaders Speak

OW131201 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1505 GMT 12 Jul 86

[By reporter He Ping]

[Text] Beijing, 12 Jul (XINHUA) — The United Front Department of the CPC Central Committee, the CPPCC National Committee, the central committees of all democratic parties, and the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce held a meeting at the Great Hall of the People yesterday and today to mark the 30th anniversary of the institution of the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision." Yan Mingfu, head of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee, pointed out at the meeting that the tortuous course experienced in carrying out this principle since its institution shows that, whenever it is earnestly adhered to in doing united front work, socialist democracy can be fully manifested; the democratic parties, the Federation of Industry and Commerce, and other mass organizations and people without party affiliation can fully play their roles; and united front work can develop. On the other hand, whenever this principle is ignored or abandoned, socialist democracy is undermined, and united front work remains at a standstill or even retrogresses.

During the 2-day meeting at the Great Hall of the People, leading members of the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee, the CPPCC National Committee, all democratic parties, the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce, and other relevant mass organizations, as well as well-known personages from all walks of life conducted open, sincere, and uninhibited discussions on how to further promote socialist democracy and strengthen the cooperation between the CPC and the democratic parties.

Yan Mingfu, the first to speak at the meeting, said: As far as the ruling party is concerned, what it fears is silence among the people. The CPC needs the people's supervision; without it, the party will be divorced from the masses and will make mistakes one way or another. The democratic parties are major political channels through which the CPC maintains ties with the masses and hears their opinions and requests. The democratic parties are also a major political force essential for perfecting China's socialist political system and carrying out democratic consultation and democratic supervision. Their work of reflecting public opinion and their supervision are extremely important for the party and the government to know about the people's opinions, formulate proper policies, improve their operations in various areas, make fewer mistakes, combat bureaucratic attitudes, and correct any misconduct.

Yan Mingfu said: Revolution and construction over the past several decades fully show that the democratic parties are truly the CPC's comrades in arms sharing weal and woe with us, and that the relationship between the CPC and all democratic parties is a new type of friendly relationship based on the four cardinal principles and the common cause of building socialism.

He said: A central leading comrade recently pointed out that although we have made some progress in recent years in encouraging more people to participate in the formulation of major state policies, in giving fuller scope to the democratic parties' supervisory role, and in reflecting and respecting public opinion, we still have not yet set up a perfect system to guide the work in these areas.

We must therefore make an effort to study the problem and solve it by drawing up a whole series of supporting measures. It is our hope that you will unreservedly and actively put forward your opinions and suggestions on this fundamental issue so that multiparty cooperation and the socialist political system in China will be even better.

Zhu Xuefan and Qian Changzhao, vice chairmen of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang; Fei Xiaotong, vice chairman, and Feng Zhijun, member of the Executive Bureau, of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League; Sun Xiaocun, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association; Lei Jieqiong, vice chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy; Lu Xijia, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party; Huang Dingchen, chairman of the Central Committee of the China Zhi Gong Dang; Zhou Peiyuan and Yan Jici, vice chairmen of the Central Committee of the Jiusan Society; Li Chunqing, vice chairman of the Council of the General Office of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League; Hu Ziang, chairman of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce; Cheng Siyuan and Li Tiezheng, democrats without party affiliation; and Cheng Zihua, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, also addressed the meeting.

Wan Guoquan, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association, read a speech by Hu Juewen, chairman of the association. Qu Wu, acting chairman of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang; Chu Tunan, acting chairman of the China Democratic League; Ji Fang, chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party; and leading members of some other democratic parties and concerned mass organizations sent written messages. In their remarks, they reviewed the lessons they have learned since the institution of the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" 30 years ago. They said that the principle is an inevitable outcome of historical development, namely, of multiparty cooperation under CPC leadership, and that it is important for building a socialist political system with distinctive Chinese characteristics. They said: Although there have been trials and hardships as well as complications during the past 30 years, the CPC and all democratic parties have always been helping each other and sharing weal and woe like people in the same boat. After order was restored following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" was enlarged with the additional principle of "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe." Guided by the new principle, the operation of all democratic parties has become unprecedentedly livelier, and democratic parties have played an increasingly more important role in the country's political life.

Speaking on further developing and perfecting the multiparty cooperation system under the CPC's leadership, many persons maintained that, politically speaking, all democratic parties, as political parties serving socialist construction, should give top priority to participating in the state's political life; carry out democratic construction on the country's important policies, modernization, and other major issues; fully reflect the opinions expressed by their members and the masses with whom they have ties; and exchange supervision with the CPC. They said that this is most important for fostering socialist democracy, consolidating the socialist legal system, preventing Communist Party members and state organ personnel from divorcing themselves from the masses, combating bureaucratic attitudes, and taking prompt steps to discover and correct shortcomings and mistakes.

Making the concluding speech at the meeting, Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, said: The CPC leads a big country of 1 billion people. To do a good job in managing the affairs of 1 billion people, relying simply on inner-party supervision is far from enough. To understand the situation in various fields, make relatively well-conceived and correct decisions, and eliminate or make fewer mistakes, we must also rely on supervision from the people and the democratic parties. Thus, while the CPC and the democratic parties are supervising one another, we must emphasize that it is necessary that the democratic parties supervise the CPC and that the CPC must have sincere political consultations with all democratic parties.

Liu Lantao said: To further promote unity and cooperation between the CPC and the democratic parties, and to give fuller play to the roles played by the various democratic parties, we must respect the democratic parties' political freedom and organizational independence prescribed in the Constitution, as well as their equal status prescribed by law, and encourage and support them in working independently and creatively. By doing so, we will improve and strengthen the party's leadership, instead of weakening it. He said: To exercise leadership, the CPC relies primarily on its correct line, principles, and policies, and on the exemplary vanguard role of the vast numbers of Communist Party members, and not by doing all the work for the democratic parties.

Among those present at the meeting were Lu Zhengcao, Miao Yuntai, Mao Yisheng, and Liu Jingji, vice chairmen of the CPPCC National Committee.

'Mutual Supervision' Stressed

OW131031 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1439 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Political consultation and democratic supervision should be carried out constantly and systematically so that multiparty cooperation, a political system under socialism with Chinese characteristics in our country, may further develop and be perfected. This was the view expressed by speakers -- responsible persons of all democratic parties, the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce, and other people's organizations concerned and eminent personages from all fields -- attending the symposium marking the 30th anniversary of the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision."

Zhu Xuefan, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, said: The Communist Party and the democratic parties must make joint efforts to create a still better environment and still more favorable conditions for implementing the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" and "treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe." At present, we must first continue to combat the influence of "leftist" thinking and eliminate all kinds of obstructions. At the same time, we must step up propaganda and education in the theory and policy of united front work in order to help the vast numbers of cadres, especially the leading cadres at all levels, foster a firm idea of united front work and constantly enhance their willingness to implement united front policies. He said: Regarding political consultation and democratic supervision, especially multiparty cooperation under the leadership of the Communist Party, a workable system and concrete measures should be formulated on the basis of past experience. It would be better still to put them in the form of law.

He suggested that more new channels be opened up and regular ties be established between organizations of the Communist Party and of the democratic parties to enable them to familiarize themselves with each other's conditions and exchange views. Members of the Communist Party and the democratic parties should increase contacts, make friends with each other, and genuinely treat each other with all sincerity and devotion.

Fei Xiaotong, vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, said: United front work can be strengthened through the existing united front work organizations and by improving ideological understanding both in and outside of the party. First of all, united front work organizations should strengthen their leadership over the democratic parties, clearly define their nature and mission under the new situation, and, in view of the characteristics of the various democratic parties and democratic persons, take the initiative in giving full play to their role in a coordinated way. He said: In the past few years the CPPCC has made great progress in its work. Members of the CPPCC National Committee have spoken up straightforwardly during sessions; they have repeatedly sponsored proposals and have been very serious and responsible in handling proposals. All this plays a role in ensuring "mutual supervision." He said: In a sound system of socialist democracy, political power must be subject to popular supervision; a system of political consultation can ensure this. [passage omitted]

Lei Jieqiong, vice chairman of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, said: As for people outside of the party, their strong points should be put to use and used boldly. They should be trusted fully in an atmosphere of democratic cooperation and mutual respect. They should be given positions and powers along with duties. They must be treated equally in terms of working conditions, penalties, awards, training, and promotion. [passage omitted]

Huang Dingchen, chairman of the Zhi Gong Dang Central Committee, said: As the ruling party, the Communist Party of China must constantly listen to different opinions and criticisms in order to correct defects and mistakes in time. Supervision by the democratic parties is conducive to improving and strengthening the Communist Party's leadership over the socialist cause and to building a high-level socialist democracy. In fact, multiparty cooperation under the leadership of the Communist Party has become an important component of the political system in our country and a feature and strong point of the political system under socialism with Chinese characteristics.

Zhou Peiyuan, vice chairman of the Jiu San Society Central Committee, said: "Long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" should be gradually perfected in the course of reform so as to make them concrete and systematic. Principles, no matter how good, would come to nothing if there are no concrete measures to implement them and if they are not made into a certain system. He said that the principle of "long-term coexistence and mutual supervision" is implemented better at the central level than at local levels at present. To instill this principle deep in the people's hearts, it is imperative to adopt concrete measures and formulate a workable system to guarantee that all democratic parties play their role in democratic supervision.

Li Chunqing, vice chairman of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, said: To use modern political terminology, certain "checks and balances" are necessary in politics. To avoid errors, "feedback" is needed. If democratic parties can exercise checks and balances and provide feedback, that would be very good supervision. To realize such supervision, the key lies in expanding socialist democracy.

Hu Ziang, chairman of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce, said: To carry out multiparty long-term cooperation and mutual supervision, we democratic parties and the Federation of Industry and Commerce must on the one hand strengthen ourselves organizationally and ideologically and, in the spirit of treating each other with all sincerity and sharing weal and woe and exercising our duties as masters, must positively exercise our democratic supervision over the state's political, social, and economic life; on the other hand, there must be continuous development in breadth and in depth of both the content and form of mutual supervision with a view to gradually systematizing it so as to achieve a political situation in which there are both centralism and democracy, and both unity of will and personal ease of mind and liveliness.

Cheng Siyuan, a democrat without party affiliation, said: The CPPCC has experts in all fields, a tremendous advantage of having a wealth of qualified persons. He said: If the various NPC special committees invited responsible persons of the related CPPCC work teams to their meetings as observers, it would be helpful to promoting democracy.

FEI XIAOTONG DESCRIBES ASPIRATIONS IN WORK

HK130634 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 22 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Fei Xiaotong: "A Talk With Friends in Sociological Circles"]

[Excerpts] This time, I was present at a recent conference from beginning to end. I think the conference has been a remarkable success. In what way is it a success? I have the following three points in mind:

First, the conference marked the beginning of solidarity and it itself a big step toward future solidarity. Everyone knows what solidarity is and that is must be based on a common understanding and a common direction. At the conference, Comrade Hu Sheng reaffirmed the principle of the development of the Academy of Social Sciences of China. Doubtless, we sociologists should work hard and be united under this principle. Our views may differ, but this is not a serious problem. Agreement on many issues can only be gradually reached through practice and research. However, I believe that despite its long and winding road, Chinese sociology will develop healthily.

Second, the problem of how to reform the academic societies was discussed at the conference. Comrade Hu Sheng suggested that perhaps the sociology society could introduce an innovation in this respect. This problem cannot be solved by holding just one conference. However, an important problem has been posed. Very often people are confined by old methods and old approaches. At first, the founding of various academic societies gave impetus to our academic work and contributed to enlivening the academic atmosphere. However, some approaches have been outpaced by the development of the new situation. We should conduct surveys and earnestly study the problem of how to make the reforms and the societies a success. [passage omitted]

I am a little anxious now. At 76, I am an old man. An ordinary person at 80 is quite useless intellectually. I wasted many years in the past. However, I have always wanted to leave something behind. In order to thank the people who have brought me up, I must have something to present them with. I resumed my academic studies at 70. I said at that time that in the next 10 years, I would make the best use of my time and produce some serious academic works. In fact, there are not many people now with qualifications similar to mine. I hope that I can do something on behalf of our generation and, on the basis of my past research work, make some practical contributions to analyzing the Chinese society and leave some records for future genertions' reference.

I have been fine in recent years, and I have been able to frequently revisit "Jiang Village," where I conducted a survey 50 years ago, to observe its changes. Organizations on various levels have enthusiastically cooperated with me by providing me with information and materials. Thus, in recent years, beginning with a village in Jiangsu, I have been able to conduct investigations in several towns and some prefectures and compare their conditions, thus deepening my understanding of things in light of objective developments. At the beginning of last year, I visited Fujian and Wenzhou. My mind was broadened by the development of the coastal areas. This year I will conduct surveys in Huaiyin and make further comparisons.

In the course of investigation and practice, I have noticed the problem of imbalanced regional development. The opening up and development of the prosperous coastal areas will certainly widen the gap between these areas and remote border areas. Thus, I am giving thought to the problems that could result from the growing difference between these areas and the problem of the future of the country's western regions. Because of all this, I have started a research project on "the development of the remote border areas" and introduced the principle of "making the eastern regions help the western regions, faciliating a flow of natural resources from the latter to the former, helping each other, mutual benefit, and mutual prosperity." A researcher must place himself in the context of a developing society, asimilate the masses' wisdom, deepen his understanding of things, and form systematic views.

Although I planned to use 10 years to conduct research, more than 3 years have been used to "set up stages," that is, to found sociology societies, sociological research institutes, and socilogy departments. Now that the "stages" have been set up, whether or not people can "perform" well on these "stages" remains an open question. The masses have set strict demands on sociology. Leaders at various levels welcome this. However, our strength is far from great. In order to train people, we still have much basic work to do. For example, we have to train teachers, write textbooks, and provide courses before we can recruit students. This is quite a job for me. For example, I was not the right person to edit "An Introduction to Sociology" and I could not produce high-standard work given the circumstances at that time. I was fully aware of this. As was expected, my friends abroad were very disappointed with the textbook I edited and they could not understand why I undertook something that could only damage my reputation. However, in order to rebuild Chinese sociology, I could not avoid this work.

What should I do in the future? I still have four [as published] years at my disposal. I am going to finish writing "Jiang Village's 50 years." [paragraph continues]

With the assistance of the comrades at Shanghai University and Fudan University and on the basis of historical records, oral reports, and surveys conducted on field trips, I will try to describe and analyze "Jiang Village's" changes over the past 50 years and to most objectively understand the social development and changes in our rural areas. [passage ommitted]

In the next few years, time will be extremely valuable and must be properly used. I must make sure that I will be able to fulfill a few tasks. Although I am not as energetic and careful as in the past, with the support and concern of some central leading comrades and the revelant departments and with the help offered by many young or middle-aged comrades, I still have to try my best to do something. On the above occasion, people proposed the inclusion of a volume of sociology in our encyclopedia. This is somethng required of us by the objective circumstances. It was agreed that we should do this. Subjectively, I am willing to be responsible for this task, but I am not unaware of the difficulties. I must wait until conditions are ripe before I sign a contract with the publishing house.

As a member of the older generation, I sincerely advise young comrades in the sociological circles to be serious about academic work, dig into it, and doggedly lay a solid foundation. Scientific work permits no fakes. We cannot deceive others. Do not seek fame or practice formalism. We should wish others success, not failure. We should neither counter each other's efforts nor flatter each other. We will have to count on these young comrades to develop Chinese sociology in the future. Given our heavy responsibilities, we should clearly define our course and straighten out our style. In order to adapt ourselves to further developments in the future, it is time we properly did basic work and steadily advanced.

Although we have taken a new step toward solidarity, much depends on how we do our work in the future. Now that we have a clear direction and a clear picture of the demands, I hope that our comrades will really cooperate with one another, do away with empty talks, make more constructive efforts, and contribute to the development of Chinese sociology.

Finally, I would like to repeat what I said at the Guangzhou conference last year: Despite my age and diminishing strength, I am as resolute as I was in the past. It is my hope that I will be like "a fallen flower, which is not simply something detached from its parent plant, but is something forming part of the soil-nourishing, guarding, and supporting other flowers."

LI PENG, OTHERS AT BEIJING ORDNANCE TRADE FAIR

OW122031 Beijing Domestice Service in Mandaran 1100 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] During the past few years, China's ordnance industry has built more than 200 production lines for making civilian goods. These production lines turn out some 700 kinds of products classified into 16 big categories.

Recently, Li Peng, Yang Dezhi, Yao Yilin, Yan Jici, Zhou Peiyuan, Zhang Aiping, Kang Shein, and other leading comrades visited a trade fair held at the national agricultural exhibition hall in Beijing, featuring ordnance industry technology and its civilian products. They praised ordnance industry achievements in developing the production of items for civilian use and encouraged it to switch to this field of operation more rapidly.

LIAOWANG HAILS BOMB SPECIALIST DENG JIAXIAN

HK100930 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 25, 23 Jun 86 pp 4-8

[Article by LIAOWANG reporter Gu Mainan: "Deng Jiaxian, a Man of Great Merit in Developing the 'Two Bombs'"]

[Text] Many scientists of the older generation still remember that for some time during the 1940's, a number of outstanding nuclear physicists in the world "disappeared" all of a sudden. And they did not reappear in public until the successful explosion of the first U.S. atom bomb.

Scientists "disappeared" in China, too. Not long ago, Professor Yang Chen Ning asked a 1960's nuclear physics graduate at Beijing University: "Have you ever heard of Deng Jiaxian?" The latter shook his head. We cannot blame that graduate for his ignorance. This is because Deng Jiaxian had for a time engaged in some kind of top secret work for the state.

This reporter has of late covered China's nuclear weaponry research and design base, and has learned much about the heartbreaking stories of Deng Jiaxian and many other unknown heroes, who have dedicated their whole lives to consolidating China's national defense.

We Shall Launch a "Big Firecracker"

We will go back to autumn 1958. A responsible person of the Second Ministry of Machine-Building at that time sent for Deng Jiaxian and said: "Deng, we shall fire a 'big firecracker.' This is a top secret matter, and we should like you to join in the work. What do you think of it?" He said solemnly: "This is a glorious task!"

Deng Jiaxian had been to the United States before the founding of the PRC, shortly after his graduation from the Department of Physics, Southwest Union University, Kunming. After he acquired his doctorate degree at Purdue University, Indiana, in 1950, he overcame one obstruction after another and returned to China with another 200 or more Chinese students studying abroad. When this young doctor appeared before the older generation physicists who had just returned from Europe and the United States, such as Qian Sanqiang, Peng Yuanwu, and Wang Ganchang, everybody was happy to have such young blood at the newly set up Modern Physics Institute for Research under the Chinese Academy of Sciences. For several years, Deng Jiaxian worked hard together with the veteran scientists in initiating the undertaking. They rode their bicycles to purchase parts at some stalls selling secondhand goods, and made the Modern Physics Institute -- the first research organ of modern physics in new China -- gradually grow.

When the responsible person in China's nuclear industry said that China was to launch a "big firecracker," and that Deng was to join in the work, Deng instantly understood that he was being asked to take part in the research and development of the atom bomb. Facing this matter of great importance, which was both arduous and glorious, he was rather terrified and timid, and said: "Developing the atomic bomb! But, am I up to the requirements for the job?"

"Sure, you are. Do it together with the others! This is the nation's trust in you. The whole thing has a bearing on the security or danger to the state; I believe you will make a good job of it!"

When Deng went home that evening, he could not sleep all night. His wife, Xu Luxi, found this extraordinary and asked him what had happened?

"No big deal, only I'll be transferred to another post!" he said quietly, but when he thought that it would be impossible to stay together with his wife and children most of the year round, he was a bit sad. With deep regret, he said: "Luxi, I'm afraid I shan't be able to take good care of our day-to-day family life from now on. My life will be dedicated to my future work. If I do a good job of it, my whole life will be quite significant, and it is even worthwhile if I die for it!"

That night, Deng and his wife recalled many things in the past, talked about the experiences they had shared and the future of the nation, and both of them became emotional. His wife Luxi, the eldest daughter of Mr Xu Deyan, knew nothing about where Deng would be transferred, nor what kind of job he would be engaged in. She saw that the undertaking her husband would go in for would be an important one that had a bearing on the state's interests, and believed that her husband would go all out without regard for his own life. That was because they had both experienced national disasters and the ruin of their families... the gunfire of the Japanese invaders at Lugougiao in the 'July 7 Incident' in particular seemed to be still echoing in their ears, and how often did the scenes of Japanese soldiers arbitrarily slaughtering unarmed Chinese come back before their eyes...

"A nation without the strength of self-defense will inevitably be knifed, and its people will suffer." Since the "July 7 Incident" Deng had to begin a life in exile with his teachers and schoolmates. Now, when he learned that China, a backward country which had been bullied arbitrarily during this century, was going to develop a strategic nuclear weapon in order to consolidate its national defense, he could not repress the excitement and joy in his heart. Since then, this excellent young physicist, who had already caught the attention of the public both at home and abroad, receded totally into oblivion.

Years of Hardship Initiating the Undertaking

After his "disappearance," Deng Jianxian entered the Nuclear Weaponry Research and Design Institute in preparation. The so-called Nuclear Weaponry Research and Design Institute at that time was simply a stretch of farmland, and its scientists and technicians were few in number. As responsible person for the theoretical design of the atom bomb, he had to start everything from scratch. The first thing he did after he took office was to change into his overalls, and to work together with the construction workers, cutting down kaoliang, building earth works, pushing carts, mixing mud, and building houses. He worked side by side with young people in mud and water. College students admired this hard-working man with a doctorate degree from a university abroad. When they saw him work clumsily, with his tall and broad physique, they found this funny and nicknamed him "the bear," and forgot about his official title. It was very busy at the work site; and the scientists and technicians were sweating all over. As days went by, one building after another was erected for the research center and workshops.

Prior to this, Marshall Nie Rongzhen had signed an accord on behalf of the Chinese Government on new national defense technology with the Soviet Union. According to the accord, the Soviet Union promised to provide China with an atom bomb model for teaching purposes. They had done a lot of work for the exhibition of this model, and sent people to the station for its delivery on several occasions, but the model never appeared.

One day, Liu Jie, the vice minister of the Second Engineering Building Ministry, sent for Deng Jiaxian and said: "You must be mentally prepared; we must rely on ourselves for the theoretical design of the atom bomb."

That happened in the late 1950's.

"The research and development of a strategic nuclear weapon is where the interests of the Chinese and the world's peoples lie; now we have to rely on ourselves!" He was addressing the young college students. He encouraged the young people around him by saying: "People like us who are engaged in this undertaking should willingly become unknown heroes. We should not care about fame, nor personal benefits, but we must bear hardships. Even your fruits of scientific research are not to be published as theses."

If the atom bomb is compared to a dragon, the theoretical design of the atom bomb will be "the dragon head." According to a saying by the leading member of that time: The cubic equation for "the dragon head" is "the dragon head" of "the dragon head" of "the dragon head." The result of this leading work had a bearing on the success of all kinds of engineering design of the atom bomb. None of the Chinese had ever built an atom bomb before, and there was no authority to speak of in this field. Under the conditions of the strict blockade abroad, Deng studied hard, and prepared his lessons before giving lectures. The young people called him Professor Deng, but he said: "No don't do that, let's work together!" Sometimes, he had to prepare his lessons until four in the morning, and he would take a rest in the office for two or three hours, then resume his work at daybreak. In the evening, the college students would all come to the office to study, but Deng would work until the others had stopped their studying, despite the fact that his wife and children were waiting for him. Often he would go home on his bicycle under the escort of young people in the still of the night. Then, the gate to the barbed wire compound of his living quarters being closed, he would climb over the barbed wire fence, and the young people would pass the bicycle to him over the fence. When he got home, he would find his wife working in the office on the evening shift, and his son asleep in the corridor. In those days, his whole energy was devoted to his work. Day in and day out, he would be in a trance, and he would think of the atom bomb even when he was walking. He worked so untiringly that many "jokes" about him circulated among those around him. One evening, they had some urgent task to complete, and when it was finally done, he said to one of his comrades, "Come, let's have a meal at my place!" When they had supper, the guest found the noodles had turned into some kind of gruel. His son had put the noodles in cold water before he put the pot on the fire!

"I'm sorry, that's my child's cooking," Deng said apologetically. Because his wife was working heart and soul in the office, their child had to do all the cooking. A primary school pupil of 12, his son had already undertaken all the household chores including preparing all the family meals.

Usually, he would never give orders to others at work, but just pat their shoulders and say: "Well, I'll have to rely on you for this, please do a good job of it." In those days, he worked overtime almost every night till midnight. Several years went by and in his planned work schedule, Sundays were always included as workdays. He had a familiar way with young people, being together with them all the time. He showed a great concern for others and was always untiring in his work. When it was 19:30 on Sundays, he would say: "All right, let's call it a day; it's time for you to go home and take care of your family affairs."

Nothing is too difficult to accomplish in this world. Deng Jiaxian and the others worked day and night, and by 1959, they had outlined the theoretical calculation of China's first atom bomb. In a series of key questions, such as explosive dynamics, neutron conveyance, nuclear reaction, the properties of material under high temperature and pressure, all kinds of scientific data had been worked out in a down-to-earth way, with no margin for error. China had none of the large-type electronic computers at that time. In order to get to the bottom of a problem, he once led more than 10 young people working on it continuously in three shifts day and night. Nine times they worked on the calculation with the help of four hand-operated calculators. Even working so meticulously, they were not satisfied with the results, and they invited such specialists in theoretical physics as Zhou Guang to make their estimation based on physical conceptions. The results proved that Deng's scientific data was accurate and sound.

At 15:00 on 16 October 1964, a fiery mushroom-shaped cloud rose with a boom in the sky above the vast Gobi Desert. This thunder which shocked the world proclaimed: The age when the Chinese people were bullied arbitrarily has come to an end!

Later, a reporter of Chinese origin living abroad wrote, saying: "When news of the successful trial explosion of China's first atomic bomb spread abroad, the ecstacy and pride of the Chinese people was beyond description. In the eyes of Overseas Chinese, that mushroom-shaped explosion was the full bloom of the spiritual flower of the Chinese nation. And the news spread from the newspapers and radio broadcasts was the letter from home worth a thousand gold pieces."

The spiritual flower of the Chinese nation in full bloom was precisely cultivated by Professor Deng Jiaxian and thousands upon thousands of ordinary Chinese people; and the letter from home worth a thousand gold pieces was written in the skies with the sweat and blood of a large number of unknown heroes.

This Is the Battlefield, I Won't Leave!

Shortly after the successful explosion of the first atom bomb, when Deng Jiaxian's thrill had not been pacified, another job with still greater difficulties fell on his shoulders, as well as those of other scientists and technicians.

This was another job requiring arduous labor. As responsible person for organizing the theoretical design in the development of the H-bomb, the difficulties he met with were unimaginable. In winter 1965, the research and development of the H-bomb was at its critical juncture. Once in the still of the night the guard was still standing by the door of the computer workshop. People asked why he did not go to sleep, and he answered he was there "to stand guard for Lao Deng."

"I'm sure he is not going home tonight. We'll take care of him, and you had better go to bed." Deng spent the whole night in the workshop that night, and he did not leave the place until he got the results. Day in and day out, he never stopped for a moment in his work. Sometimes, he would just take a rest on the floor of the workshop. He was under constant stress, experiencing one success or failure after another and crucial moments of life and death together with his colleagues. Particularly after he was appointed director of the Nuclear Weaponry Research and Design Institute, he had always played an exemplary role, been bold at taking risks, and exerted all his efforts.

Nuclear weapon technology has always been an absolute top secret with the superpowers. It is impossible to get it through such channels as import and exchange, and it is unavailable no matter what amount of foreign currencies we have. Under the arduous and difficult conditions in China, the Chinese wanted to master these technologies with their own wisdom and hands. Aside from necessary support from the party and state, Deng Jiaxian and the other scientists who participated directly in the research and development of the nuclear bombs, have paid a tremendous price beyond imagination for it.

"As an organizer and participant in the course of the research and development of the H-bomb and new strategic nuclear weapons, Deng is a man of great merit!" Deng's colleagues said in unison. Every important breakthrough in the development of new strategic nuclear weapons, and every successful milestone test is linked with Deng Jiaxian's name, they said. All year round, he was going from one place to another, going where the difficulties where, appearing at the posts where the work was most dangerous, in the workshops for special material processing, at the dynamic physical test ground, in the wilderness in snowstorms.

It was well after midnight one day and he had already gone to bed. The nuclear material processing workshop faraway suddenly called him on the phone; a problem had cropped up in the processing of a key part. He put down the phone, said nothing, and got into a car still in his slippers. At that time, he was close to 60. He drove the car at top speed on the rugged valley roads in complete darkness for more than three hours, and it was almost daybreak when he finally arrived at his destination. He did not take a moment's rest, and ran straight into the workshop which processed the nuclear material. A worker who persisted in his work despite his illness was greatly comforted when he saw the director on the site, who made light of all the hardships in getting there. Deng studied the problem together with the workers, and soon solved it.

As director and one who takes the lead among scientists and technicians, his every word and action in his personal appearances at critical moments was unforgettable and comforting to those under his leadership. Now, all the parts of the nuclear device had been prepared, and the general assembly work was to begin. The assembly hall was completely quiet, scientists and technicians would come in, each to his own assembly post. Deng Jiaxian held the hand of one of the technicians. "But, why is your hand so cold? Come, let me warm it for you," Deng said, and put his hand inside his coat. "There's no hurry; we have ample time!" The scientists and technicians understood his appearance at every critical moment, which needed no explanation: "should anything happen, we'll die together!"

When they worked, the scientists and technicians always bore Deng's words in minds: "There must be a weight to make the balance work! Nothing is a trifle here. Everything is important here. Any small problem will bring a disaster if not properly solved." Therefore, he always repeatedly asked everybody: "Any more problems?" And he would not accept even the smallest hidden danger.

One day, in the workshop in which the nuclear device was to be stored at the test base, a technician noticed a spark when positioning the crane which was to lift the nuclear device. It was already 5:00 in the morning and Deng had only gone to bed a little earlier because he had worked well past midnight. Learning about the situation, he hurried to the site. But no matter how hard they tried in testing, the spark did not show again. He then decided to set up a specialized group to get to the bottom of the problem. [paragraph continues]

When the technician saw that the director was serious and concerned about the problem, he became all the more energetic in his work, and got all the records concerned ready, examining every entry on who had been there, and what had been moved. The search for the cause did not end until past 16:00 that afternoon when it was eventually pinned down.

Year in and year out, he led scientists and technicians in the bitter struggle of research and nuclear testing at the forefront, working selflessly, and spent a whole decade living alone without the company of his wife and children. The risks of failure, the joys of success, working in the open under attack from storms and frost, had turned his sideburns white, and his face was marked with deep wrinkles. However, a tremendous success almost cost him his life through overexcitement.

This was during an underground nuclear test. Everything was ready, and all the people at the test ground were waiting for the solemn countdown to "zero." The nuclear device was slowing going down the shaft, and all testing devices were set to work, monitoring whether or not all kinds of scientific data were normal, but when the nuclear device was sent deep into the shaft, a signal on one of the testing devices failed to work.

"What are we to do?" The scientists and technicians returned to the tents, trying to find a way out. Some suggested taking the nuclear device from the shaft to make a thorough examination; others believed this to be too dangerous, and they were for continuing to send the device lower down the shaft when the problem was solved. Thus the discussion went on from midnight till dawn. Finally, having compared all suggestions, Deng decided to adopt appropriate measures on the site. Together with the scientists and technicians, Deng arrived in the neighborhood of the shaft, and studied a solution for the problem. The wind was howling over the Gobi Desert, and it was piercing cold, for the temperature was minus 30 degrees Centigrade! People found him exhausted, and said: "Director Deng, you had better go home!"

"No, here is the battlefield, I can't leave it!" Deng refused solemnity.

He did not leave the site until the trouble was ended. When the successful test was over, a celebration of the occasion was held, but he passed out after he drank just a small glass of wine in all his excitement, because he had not been eating regularly. Those at the scene laid him down hurriedly, and when his blood pressure was tested, it was shown to be very low.

"Director Deng! Director Deng...." People were calling his name, but he was still in a coma. He only opened his eyes after the doctors had applied first aid throughout the night.

When he came to, the first thing he asked about was: What was the result of the nuclear explosion test? Was all the data ready? He just would not take a rest, and plunged into intense work.

Utter Loyalty to the Motherland

Of the 32 nuclear tests China has conducted, Deng Jiaxian has on 15 occasions been personally in charge of command in the test team headquarters. During this period, he was often on a tight schedule, going straight from the railway station to the airport. Sometimes, there was not even time for a normal meal, and he had to get some steamed bread from the canteen and start for the journey. Within the period of a month one year, he made two round trips from the factory to the test site, a distance of several thousand kilometers! [paragraph continues]

More often than not he would get straight to work the moment he stepped out of the plane. It was always between three and four hours sleep at night, and he would often work all night through. Sometimes, having just gone to bed, after a telephone call he would put on his clothes again and set out to work.

The tense work over long years impaired his health, but he totally ignored it. He passed out on the test ground on several occasions. Once, when a nuclear test was about to take place in winter 1984, he started for the test ground, dragging his legs along with some difficulty on the snow-covered earth. Suddenly, he found himself unable to go on any longer, and said to the two scientists walking in front of him: "Give me a hand, please give me a hand!" So saying, he fell upon the shoulders of the two men breathlessly. It turned out that he had stomach trouble, and an attack of hypoglycemia. He was extremely weak, but he continued working after he had taken some candies and water.

When a breakthrough was made in H-bomb theory, he would be as happy as a child with every success of the nuclear test. At such moments, he would take cigarettes and candies from his pockets, and say with smiles: "I'll stand you a treat today!" And if circumstances permitted, he would invite everyone to dinner.

But Deng Jiaxian was always very strict on himself. People say, as a famous scientist and leading cadre, his daughter was the last to return to the urban areas from Nei Monggol, settling down there in the countryside. For years, whenever he returned to Beijing from the research and test base, he would always buy a bus ticket with money from his own pocket, and he would take the bus when he was out on business. Once, he went to visit his wife, who was then confined to a hospital. On his way home, he was caught in a shower without even an umbrella. When he got home from the bus stop, he was wet through. When asked why he had not taken the car specially provided for him, he said: "I am a communist, I shouldn't enjoy special privilege when dealing with my personal affairs."

Shortly before a nuclear test in late January 1984, Deng Jiaxian took several scientists and technicians along with him to report their work condition to Beijing. In another two days, he would have to fly back to the test site. At that time, the airplane fare happened to rise. When he learned that the difference in prices between front and back cabins would be 40 yuan, he told the others to book him a seat at the back cabin. He said: "Let's save as much as we can for the state!"

"Deng, with your academic level and experience, it is entirely possible for you to make your life a bit more comfortable. You can travel at home and abroad and see the world, giving lectures and touring places. Why should you have selected such a path and willingly struggle on such an arduous post?" An engineer asked him when they were having a conference in Hangzhou.

"Yes, the West Lake is so beautiful! It seems that it's the first time that I have ever visited Hangzhou. I have never imagined that it could be so beautiful. It's surely a wonderful thing to see places. But, a person should always do more for the people!" He answered, viewing the fascinating West Lake scene.

When touring the tomb of Yue Fei, he purposely stood in front of the stone tablet with the inscription "Utter Loyalty to the Motherland," and said to his comrades: "Come, please take a picture of me here."

And that is Deng Jiaxian, a man who has dedicated his whole life to the motherland, a man who has written a new song of "Utter Loyalty to the Motherland" with his own life.

China's intellectuals are worthy of the pride of the Chinese nation. This is because thousands upon thousands of people like Deng Jiaxian are engaged in bitter struggle in oblivion, to rejuvenate the Chinese nation, seeking neither fame nor personal interests.

LIAOWANG Commentary

HK100940 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 25, 23 Jun 86 pp 4-5

[Commentator's article: "They Are the Pride of the Chinese Nation"]

[Text] The editorial department of this weekly received a feature written by one of its reporters, entitled "Deng Jiaxian, a Man of Great Merit in Developing the 'Two bombs'," at a time when the last batch of manuscripts for the current issue had just been sent to the compositor. We have made it an exception to carry this feature as a leading article in this issue. The editorial department seriously recommends it to the readers: Please read it through and come to know Deng Jiaxian, an outstanding intellectual, who has made important contributions to the motherland!

China's intellectuals are the pride of the Chinese nation. Here we have Deng Jiaxian, who has waged bitter struggles for, and devoted himself to, invigorating the Chinese nation silently, remaining unknown for two decades. As a matter of fact, he is not the only one to do so, for there are also his comrades-in-arms and colleagues. The hundreds and thousands of intellectuals, "the spiritual flowers of the Chinese nation in full bloom," who have devoted their hearts and souls, sweat and even their lives, to the lofty cause, should all be respected and admired by the people. Together with the workers and peasants on other fronts, thousands upon thousands of intellectuals like Deng Jiaxian are pushing forward the development and expansion of socialist industry, agriculture, commerce, science, national defense, education, culture, sports, and public health.

New China has risen from the East, and won the admiration of the world's people with its startling accomplishments, scope and speed of construction. The important contributions of the intellectuals are right there. Will any undertakings go without the intellectuals? No, certainly not.

Our readers may see the features of China's intelligentsia today from Deng Jiaxian's deeds.

He has a fiery heart, cherishing the motherland as well as the people. For the interests of the motherland and the people and the progress of the Chiense nation, he has plunged himself into his undertakings heart and soul, disregarding his own fame and interests, his health, and even his own life. Is he not the kind of man who is selfless, noble-minded, and pure as Comrade Mao Zedong mentioned in his earlier years?

He is full of pride and confidence in his own strength. Was it difficult to make an atomic bomb? Yes. Was it difficult to make a H-bomb? The more so, it was. Those who already had them would not teach us, nor even give us a model. "We can't rely on others, because they are unreliable; we have to rely on ourselves!" How well he has put it, with boldness of vision! Be united, be determined, study diligently, quietly put ones' shoulder to the wheel, and overcome the difficulties. He and his comrades have finally made it. Arduous struggles and self-reliance are precisely the virtues of the Chinese nation.

He adheres to the scientific attitude of seeking truth from facts, works in a down-to-earth manner, but has never taken a chance; even with a slight mistake, he would spend days and nights on end to get to the bottom of it, which is the way to avoid failure and to ensure success, and the spirit of bearing responsibility for the state and people. He is lenient towards others, but very strict on himself. He has made great contributions, but he has asked very little for himself, and this is precisely the noble character and sentiments a communist should possess!

For a period in the past, China's intellectuals were discriminated against, regarded as aliens, and censured as "the stinking ninth category". Even today, it is hard to say that such effects have been completely eliminated in some people's minds. We hope that those comrades will take a look at Deng Jiaxian -- the advanced representative of the Chinese intelligentsia. How respectable and adorable they are! Are they not the pillars of the State?

For some time in the past, people acknowledged only the fruits of physical labor, negating or deprecating those of mental labor and in effect pulling society back to illiteracy. Such views are probably still wandering in society, hindering the implementation of policies for the intellectuals. We hope that those comrades will take a look at Deng Jiaxian -- The advanced representative of China's intelligentsia. Can his, or their contributions be calculated in workhours and workdays?

If you really want to realize the four modernizations, you will have to show respect to, and treasure, the intellectuals. Chinese intellectuals like Deng Jiaxian are trail-blazers for the modernization of China.

NATIONAL SEMINAR HELD ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

OW101534 Beijing XINHUA in English 1515 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Taiyuan, July 10 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government's operations must be streamlined or they will retard economic development, a professor of political sciences said here at a national seminar on governmental functions.

Speaking at the first such conference in China for at least 30 years, Cao Peilin, an associate professor at Shanghai's Fudan University told more than 70 political scientists China should study government's role in the economies of the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan and the United States.

Participants in the conference delivered 40 papers along the lines of Cao's remarks. The conference was held last month in Taiyuan, captial of Shanxi Province in north central China. Proceedings were released today.

Tan Jian, an associate research fellow of China's Academy of Social Sciences, argued that China's centralized management system "was a transplant of the Soviet model of 1930s."

That system "controlled economic and social affairs with commands from the central government," Tan said. "This might be a good system for winning military and political victories, but it lacks flexibility and so does not suit the development of a modernized, socialist commodity economy."

But in addition to interfering too much in the economy, "China's government departments have tried to accomplish too much," said Yu Haocheng, deputy chairman of the China Politics Society. Following national leader Deng Xiaoping, Yu argued that overextended agencies "dampen the initiative of those who try to accomplish their departments' main tasks."

For example, he said, in line with China's tradition since 1949, government work units spend a substantial portion of their energy taking care of their workers' basic needs.

"So we have government departments in charge of housing, of transportation, of hotels, cinemas, kindergartens and other facilities in addition to whatever their primary purpose is supposed to be," he said.

Worrying about meeting workers' needs that are also addressed by city governments has "diverted leaders' attention from their main work, led to confusion in the management of municipal services and the overstaffing of government institutions, and disrupted the main work of government," he said.

The issue of government's proper role was raised 30 years ago, in the early years of China's economic development following the 1949 liberation. But, according to Yu, the issue became embroiled in political struggles and debate was discontinued.

"This resulted in the slowdown of economic development that followed," said Yu.

But beginning in late 1978, China's "government began to change its main focus from class struggle to economic development," he said, and the subject became relevant once again.

Liu Yichang, associate research fellow of the China Society for Public Administration, said government functions in China are continuing to change -- from centralized command planning to guided planning stressing market mechanisms.

In practice, Liu said, "this means adopting indirect management of the economy and granting enterprises autonomy in production and operation."

This also means moving such seconrdary activities as workers' food services to specialized enterprises and implementing modern management methods, he said.

And it means studying the experience of other countries. "China should learn from Japan how the government can use financial and administrative means to manage the economy, and it should learn from the United States how to regulate the economy with spending policies, subsidies and other economic levers," he said.

ZHU HOUZE DISCUSSES THEORETICAL PROBLEMS

HK031147 Beijing WENZHAI BAO in Chinese No 325, 29 Jun 86 p 6

[Summarized report by WENZHAI BAO Materials Office: "Zhu Houze Discusses Theoretical Problems" -- first paragraph is WENZHAI BAO introduction]

[Text] Not long ago, Zhu Houze, director of the Central Propaganda Department, delivered a speech at a meeting held in Shanghai on the current theoretical work. Excerpts of the speech follow. Subheads are our editors.

Will Socialism Actually Work?

Zhu Houze said: Not admitting that Marxism and the international communist movement entered the stage of another low ebb after 1956 is not a historical materialist approach. After World War II, quite a few socialist countries made mistakes in development in succession, but Japan and the FRG developed fairly rapidly. The development of basic sciences since the beginning of the 20th century has promoted technological revolution to advance with big strides. In the face of the postwar new international political and economic situation, people are bound to ask again and again "will socialism actually work?" In solving the problem, not only are theoretical deliberations and explanations needed, but what is needed more is that the solution to the problem also should be tested in practice. The emergence of such a trend of thought is a reflection of historical necessity.

Adherence to the Four Basic Principles Is Not the Specific Standard in Daily Life

Zhu Houze said: Some people are worried, since theoretical work has just become livelier, whether the practices of stressing the four basic principles are combating bourgeois liberalization will hinder the liveliness and flowering in literary creation? In my opinion, as a strategic slogan and principle, adherence to the four basic principles and opposition to taking the capitalist road must be upheld. However, this is a political concept, a standard on the higher plane of principle. It is not directly equal to or a substitute for the standard for specific behavior in daily life. Literature and art works full of vitality cannot be produced using a fixed mold.

Socialism Is the Practice and Exploration of the Whole Party and the Whole Nation

Zhu Houze said: Since socialism is under practice and exploration, in envisaging future society, we should not prematurely make any excessively detailed description while we lack in repeated practice. We should also not prematurely make any excessively rigid regulations on permitting or not permitting or on banning or encouraging some issues currently under practice and exploration. The practice and exploration of socialism in China is an undertaking of the whole party and the whole nation and not the result of the judgements of a small number of individuals.

We Are Not Free From Mistakes in Making Theoretical Judgements

Zhu Houze said: Theory should play a tremedous guiding role. This is needed by practice. However, such a role cannot be completed in one try.

It may develop errors in two forms. One is that theory is divorced from practice and the other is that mistaken judgments are made on the explorations of practice, blocking the road to the truth. For example, in the last 3 decades, our peasants and cadres at the grass-roots level have reached the edge of truth and the threshold of rural economic rejuvenation many times. However, their practices were regarded as "capitalist" and "regressive" due to mistaken theoretical judgments. This lesson particularly merits attention.

GUANGMING RIBAO VIEWS OPENING POLICY

HK101249 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Opening to the Outside World and the Building of Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] We must open the country to the outside world and must not close it to international intercourse. China has stated clearly the choice to the world. This is a prudent choice made by the 1 billion people and is also a choice that should not be changed.

However, at present whenever the opening up policy meets with reverses and whenever there is something foul, some people immediately relate it to the choice we have made, and even doubt it. An often-heard statement says that we have gained something materially but lost something spiritually. As a result, our effort to open up to the outside world has imperceptibly been played down. It seems that we had better close slightly the door that has been opened.

To clarify this problem, we must have the aid of theory and facts and must have patience.

We must be aware that building socialist spiritual civilization must be based on material conclusions to a certain degree. Otherwise, it is impossible for people to engage in a spiritual production and live a healthy, rich spiritual life. Thanks to the opening up policy, our economy has become more prosperous and our material wealth has somewhat increased. This has laid a sound foundation for strengthening spiritual civilization.

What is more important is that people's minds have changed. As a result of opening up to the outside world, people's thought has been heavily pounded by outside influence and made great progress. Compared with the past of our country, no doubt it has been very modernized. However, now we find that there is still a long way to go toward modernization and take it as a target toward which to strive. This results from our having broadened our horizon and compared our country with the world's developed countries. With the field of vision widening, there are certainly one or two people who blindly worship foreign things and fawn on foreign powers. However, the vast majority of the Chinese people have aroused their national self-respect and self-confidence after comparing our country with other countries. Our forefathers never fell behind others; we will certainly be able to stand firmly as a giant among different nations of the world. At the same time, with the closed, conservative, and narrow concept of small production broken, people now have a stronger sense of competing with each other and catching up with the advanced and are encouraged with the noble spirit of carrying out reform and blazing new trials, while their ideas of inertia, sticking to conventions, and being satisfied with old practices are changing. [paragraph continues]

Their encouraging mental attitude, progressive ideas, and scientific way of thinking have all resulted from the drive of opening up to the outside world and have become an important content of our spiritual civilization.

Spiritual civilization also includes education, science, and culture. Since opening up our country to the outside world, we have widely associated with developed countries in the field of education, we have paid attention to new scientific and technological achievements emerging in the world and imported advanced technology and equipment, and we have absorbed successful foreign experiences in the fields of culture and art. All this is quite obvious to everybody. At the same time, a wave of advocating science and seeking knowledge has emerged. Scientific and cultural development and the untiring pursuit of scientific and cultural knowledge will help people enhance their consciousness and combat uncivilized, backward ideas. This also constitutes a part of spiritual civilization.

Opening to the outside world also helps us critically assimilate some progressive ideas and morality from capitalist society. Historical materialists do not think that there is nothing in common between the societies of different systems. The socialist spiritual civilization we are building is not a river completely separated from the long river of man's history (just as some people imagine the building of a unique proletarian railway). Contrary to this, socialist spiritual civilization inherits and develops all good things and thinking of mankind and is an ocean where hundreds of rivers of man's civilization flow together. Experience has demonstrated that socialist spiritual civilization can assimilate and has assimilated some progressive ideas, morality, and achievements from capitalist society, such as attaching importance to knowledge and talented people, good work efficiency, observing public order and health, and paying attention to courtesy and politeness in public association.

In the course of opening to the outside world, we certainly meet with some things that are relatively complicated. Therefore, we should make an analysis of them and distinguish between good and bad. For example, some popular thoughts and theories are not all a complete mess. A.I. Herzen said: "There are no philosophic theories that are based on pure lies and fallacies." In order to hold water and persuade people, these theories inevitably contain something reasonable. For this reason, we have adopted and used something useful from capitalist economics and some scientific methods of management. Moreover, some habits and customs as well as some headgear and footgear upon which our comrades frown are in fact nothing but different habits and customs of different nations; they are of no class nature. Thus, some changes taking place in our way of life should not be regarded as a bad thing. We should not exaggerate the concept of "bourgeois influences" and stick on all foreign things a label of class nature.

With our country opening to the outside world, some capitalist rubbish does enter our society. These decadent things corrupt weak-willed young people who lack life experiences. Some of them uphold the corrupted profit-before-everything mentality and advocate benefitting themselves at the expense of others; some have lost their bearings before colossal profits and fallen capitve to unhealthy tendencies; and others harm the interests of the state and people in no consideration of personal or national dignity. Therefore, we must take the matter seriously and adopt effective measures to prevent these poisonous germs from spreading. [paragraph continues]

Meanwhile, we must carry out education in patriotism, collectivism, and communism so as to enable them to acquire more mental immunity. Meanwhile, we should not negate the benefits brought to us by virtue of the opening up policy and close the door of our country again only because of the appearance of these negative factors. We must also realize that the opening up policy is not the source of some immorality in our society. It is because "socialist society still has the vestiges of the old society from which it emerged, such as the vestiges in the economic, moral, and spiritual fields." It is easy and simple to blame all faults on the opening up policy. But this does not tally with the facts, and will also hinder our cause of socialist modernization from going forward.

Our opening up policy has brought a positive influence on the building of socialist spiritual modernization. We must definitely affirm it. We should not ignore negative influences, nor should we exaggerate them. Ignoring them will prevent us from fighting their harmfulness, but exaggerating them will hinder us from carrying out the opening up policy smoothly.

QIAO SHI 5 JULY SPEECH AT LAWYERS' CONGRESS

HK100843 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jul 86 p 4

[Speech by Qiao Shi: "Strive To Build a Socialist Lawyer System With Chinese Characteristics -- delivered to the First National Congress of Lawyers (5 July 1986)"]

[Text] Comrades:

The convening of the First National Congress of lawyers marks a new stage of development of China's lawyer system. Our party and state are attaching great importance to and showing great concern for the work of lawyers. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, I would like to extend our warm congratulations to this congress and, through the participants, our cordial regards to lawyers throughout the country!

Since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the work of lawyers has been rapidly rehabilitated and developed in our country. At present, there is already a 20,000-strong continent of lawyers, and in many places, law offices and legal advisory organizations have been set up. Over the past few years, lawyers have been playing an increasingly greater role in upholding socialist democracy and the legal system; in promoting reform, opening to the outside world, and economic invigoration and construction; in protecting citizens' legal rights and interests and severely punishing serious economic and other criminals according to the law; and in publicizing the legal system, improving the relations among the people, and stepping up the building of spiritual civilization. Facts show that it is entirely necessary to perfect the lawyer system, build a contingent of lawyers, and strengthen the work of lawyers in our country. Especially, under the new situation of reform, opening up, and economic invigoration, in order to implement Comrade Deng Xiaoping's instruction on "grasping both economic construction and the legal system with out two hands," it is imperative to vigorously strengthen the work of lawyers. Without a perfect lawyer system, the legal system cannot be perfected.

In his opening spech at the 12th CPC National Congress, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "Our modernization drive must proceed from China's realities. In both revolution and construction, we must pay attention to studying and absorbing foreign experience. [paragraph continues]

"However, we will never succeed if we mechanically copy the experiences and models of other countries. In this respect, we have had many lessons. We must integrate the universal truth of Marxism with China's concrete realities, follow our own path, and build socialism with distinctive Chinese charateristics. This is a basic conclusion we have drawn from our long-term historical experiences." Our lawyer system must also be a socialist lawyer system with distinctive Chinese characteristics, which is in conformity with our national conditions. In this respect, we do not have a model to follow, and we have to constantly probe, study, and sum up experience in the course of practice, and gradually develop and perfect the lawyer system.

First, the lawyers in our country are law workers rather than free professionals. This fundamental character decides that our lawyers must unconditionally place themselves under the party and state leadership, faithfully serve the fundamental interests of the party, the state, and the people; and work for the development of socialist democracy, the perfection of the socialist legal system, and the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

Second, in the work of lawyers, we must adhere to the socialist road, the people's democratic dictatorship, the leadership of the Communist Party, and Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought. To uphold these four basic principles should be the basic guiding principle for the work of our lawyers. Only thus can we ensure that our lawyers adhere to a correct political orientation in work, constantly improve their quality politically and professionally, and enhance their ability to work for the party and the state and to serve the people.

Third, our lawyer system is an organic part of the socialist legal system. Fundamentally speakang, the work of our lawyers is united with the work of public security and procuratorial organs and people's courts, because they have the same objective; that is, to act strictly according to the law on the basis of facts to defend the dignity of the Constitution and other laws and the dignity of the socialist legal system. On this premise, they coordinate, supplement, and restrict each other.

Fourth, our lawyers must be upright and honest in performing their duties, serve the people wholeheartedly, and value the interests of the party, the state, and the people above everything else. They must uphold truth and be always ready to correct mistakes. They should never violate the interests of the state and the collective and the dignity of the law merely for the sake of their clients, nor should they yield to certain persons' and influence and fail to seek truth from facts, argue strongly on just grounds, and speak impartially to defend the legitimate rights and interests of the state, the collective, and the citizens.

The National Lawyers' Association, which will be established soon after this congress, is a mass organization for the unity of the broad masses of law workers. It is expected that this association will make unremitting efforts to train more lawyers and to improve the quality of lawyers and to explore the road of establishing the lawyer system with distinctive Chinese characteristics.

At present, although certain progress has been made in the work of lawyers in China, basically speaking, the lawyer system is still in its infancy and is in need of universal attention and support from all quarters.

The CPC committees, governments, and political and legal departments at all levels must understand fully the importance and role of the work of lawyers in the course of perfecting the socialist legal system and attach greater importance to and support the work of lawyers. It is necessary to take resolute measures to stop and deal with the illegal act of obstructing lawyers from performing their legal duties and even persecuting the lawyers and to effectively protect the rights and interests of lawyers. It is necessary to create necessary working conditions for lawyers and resolve the lawyers' difficulties in work and life. At the same time, we sincerely hope that the broad masses of lawyers in our country will understand profoundly their glorious duties as the people's lawyers; love their work; painstakingly study Marxism, Mao Zedong Thought, and the party's policies and state laws; and strive to improve their knowledge and working ability, give full play to their enthusiasm and creativity, and make bold explorations and advances, so as to make more outstanding achievements in their work and win further trust and respect from the whole society.

I wish this congress complete success!

CHEN PIXIAN ADDRESSES LEGAL REPORTERS MEETING

OW131832 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1226 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- The Chinese legal reporters' association held an inaugural meeting 12-13 July. Chen Pixian, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, attended the meeting to extend his greetings. He pointed out in his speech at the meeting: To propagate legal knowledge among the cadres and people, carry out education in the legal system, and intensify news reporting on the legal aspect is basic to instituting the legal system, as well as being an important task at present to enforce the legal system. He urged all legal reporters in China to create a new situation of legal reporting in order to meet the needs of enforcing the legal system. [passage omitted]

Chen Pixian addressed the opening ceremony of the association. He said: Comrade Deng Xiaoping unequivocably pointed out recently: "The legal system is in the interest of the whole. In order to enforce the legal system it is important to solve the problem of education. A fundamental question is how to educate people." At present we have legislation to guide the major and fundamental aspects of our national life and social life. However, some cadres and people, with a weak sense of law, still do not have the habit and experience of doing things according to law. A fundamental way to solve this problem is to spread legal knowledge among the cadres and people, and educate them in the legal system. Journalists shoulder an important responsibility in carrying out the education.

He urged the journalists to make more reports on the legal aspect. He said: Apart from continuing to report the crackdown on criminal and economic offenses, journalists should also report more on the legislation work and how the laws are carried out in the civil, economic, and administrative fields. In order to make the legal system promote and protect the smooth procedure of our economic construction and reform, journalists should particularly pay attention to studying and reporting how the cadres and people are using legal means to regulate and control economic operations in the course of restructuring the economy. [passage omitted]

GUANGMING RIBAO ON POLITICAL STRUCTURAL REFORM

HK270709 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 16 Jun 86 p 3

[Article by Ma Zhenggang: "On the Role Played by Political Restructuring in Promoting the Development of Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] The building of socialist spiritual civilization not only needs a solid material foundation, but also needs extensive people's democracy. In order to bring socialist democracy into full play, we must carry out reform of the political structure. The synchronous advance of political structural reform and economic structural reform will greatly promote the development of spiritual civilization in our country.

I. Political Restructuring Is the Guarantee for the Building of Spiritual Civilization

As part of the social superstructure, spiritual civilization not only conditioned by the economic basis, but is also influenced by other factors of the superstructure, such as political factors and laws. When viewing the socioeconomic and political situation in our country, we find that, on the one hand, our country lags behind the developed capitalist countries in the level of social productive forces, and, on the other hand, our political system of people's democratic dictatorship is superior to the capitalist political system. This fact shows that the building of socialist civilization in our country depends not only on economic development, but also on the improvement and development of the political system. However, the superiority of the socialist political system must be demonstrated through some proper political forms and requires continuous improvement and reform of the political structure. Otherwise, the superiority of the socialist political system will merely be an abstract concept, and using the advantages of the socialist political system to promote the building of spiritual civilization will merely be empty talk.

Socialist construction is an organic entity that includes three major parts: socialist economic construction, political construction, and cultural construction. These three major parts are interdependent and interact on each other. None can develop and advance independently. The integrity of socialist construction requires us to coordinate socialist reforms in all fields and to form an integrated reform program that includes reforms in various major aspects so that reforms in various fields will promote each other and our all-round reform will progress in a harmonious way. In recent years, our political structural reform did not keep pace with economic structural reform. As a result, the building of spiritual civilization in our country lagged behind the development of the overall situation, and also affected the smooth development of our economic structural reform. If the defects in our political system remain unchanged, the three major parts of socialist construction will all be directly of indirectly affected, and in particular, the building of spiritual civilization will be directly harmed. The fact that it is difficult to check party and government cadres' involvement in business transactions is also related to the lack of a democratic atmosphere in our political structure and to the existence of bureaucratism. Defects of the cadre system enable some leading cadres to use their power in pursuit of selfish gains. [Paragraph continues]

The vague division of functions and duties between party organizations and government institutions has also weakened the party's leadership and the political and ideological work. Therefore, only through reforming the political structure can we have a political guarantee for the building of spiritual civilization.

II. Perfecting the State Organs, Arousing the Initiative of the People for the Building of Spiritual Civilization.

The socialist state organs are an organizational entity that represents the will and interests of the people, exercises state power, and manages state affairs on behalf of the people. They form the main part of the entire socialist political structure. Therefore, whether the state organs are functioning smoothly and reasonably on a sound basis is a question which has direct bearing on whether our socialist political structure is perfect and whether the people's democratic rights are fully guaranteed. At present, we should pay special attention to the following issues for the purpose of perfecting and improving the state organs and building socialist spiritual civilization:

First of all, we should strengthen the supervision of the state power organs over the administration organs. This will effectively check bureaucratism in state organs and prevent functionaries of the state organs from breaking the law and neglecting their official duties. So, this will effectively check the unhealthy tendencies in various state organs so as to improve public conduct as a whole.

Meanwhile, it is necessary to strengthen the functions of the people's congresses at all levels. The people's deputies should be answerable to the people. The domestic consciousness of the people and their understanding of the legal system should be raised. For a long time in the past, many people did not strongly feel the necessity of a sound democratic system and did not clearly understand the legal system. This is always a weak link in building our spiritual civilization. Through reform, the people' democratic rights will be better exercised through the functions of the people's congresses at all levels, and the people will also raise their domestic consciousness and deepen their understanding of the legal system. This is an important part of our efforts to develop spiritual civilization.

We should strengthen the functions of the people's congresses, streamline the unwieldy administrative organs, and set up some necessary new organs. This will fully guarantee the people's rights in managing various cultural undertakings. Under the present conditions, the people's rights in the management of cultural undertakings are exercised through the people's congresses. With the people's congresses performing more important functions, the people will have a stronger sense of responsibility and will have greater initiative in the building of spiritual civilization.

III. Reforming the Cadre System, Requiring Cades To Play a Leading Role in the Building of Spiritual Civilization

The success or failure of all socialist undertakings is directly related to the state of the cadre system of the socialist state. In the past, the reform of the cadre system in our country did not keep pace with economic structural reform, and economic reforms were conducted on the basis of the old cadre system. [paragraph continues]

As a result, some leading cadres seriously misrepresented the correct policies formulated by the party and government. For example, when the party and government decided to develop the planned commodity economy, some cadres took advantage of this opportunity to run their own profit-taking business; when the party and the government stressed the need to bring socialist democracy into play and expand enterprise decision-making power, some people went against the central authorities' instructions by adopting various countermeasures without regard to party discipline and state law; when the party and government called for opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, some people engaged in illegal speculative transactions and profiteering business in order to satisfy their insatible desire for private gains without hesitating to sacrifice national and state interests. Such malpractices in the ranks of the leading cadres have seriously corrupted our social values and public conduct and have harmed the building of spiritual civilization. In order to thoroughly check these unhealthy tendencies, we must thoroughly reform the cadre system.

The principles and requirements for reforming the cadre system are precisely an important part of our socialist spiritual cadres are also a yardstick to judge the level of our spiritual civilization. The de facto lifelong tenure of office for cadres, the patriarchal leadership style, and the bureaucratic work style are all incompatible with socialist spiritual civilization. To eliminate all these unhealthy phenomena is an urgent requirement of socialist spiritual civilization.

Reorganizing the ranks of cadres in light of the four requirements will give scientific guidance to cadres at various levels in the building of spiritual civilization. The building of socialist spiritual civilization, like socialist economic construction, has its own objective regularly and characteristics. Only when leading cadres at all levels really master this regularity and characteristics can they avoid making erroneous policies for the building of spiritual civilization. Therefore, leading cadres must first meet the four requirements.

The people should be able to elect cadres, supervise their work, and remove incompetent cadres from office. This will effectively correct the unhealthy tendencies among the cadres. The socialist state system determines in principle that all cadres, in no matter what position they are, must be public servants. However, facts show that if the people cannot exercise their rights to supervise the cadres' performance in their work and to dismiss those who are incompetent, it is unavoidable that some public servants may degenerate into overlords riding roughshod over the people and abuse their powers and official functions in various scandals of infringing upon the people's interests. So, only when these public servants are placed under the people's supervision and when the people can decide their appointment and removal can we effectively prevent some leading cadres from using their power in pursuit of private gain and vying with each other in seeking selfish interests.

Adoption of a system for defining cadre's tenure of office will help train and cultivate socialist new people. The basic task in the building of socialist spiritual civilization is to cultivate a new generation of people who have lofty ideals, moral integrity, good educational background, and a sense of discipline. The system of setting a fixed tenure of office for cadres is an effective way to train socialist new people, because it enables more people to be promoted to leading posts.

So, more people will exert themselves to meet the four requirements, and more people will become qualified cadres with socialist consciousness. This will then promote the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

Separating Government Functions From Those of Party Organizations, Strengthening the Party's Leadership Over the Building of Spiritual Civilization

In recent years, there were two deviations in our country regarding the position and function of the ruling party in the state political structure: The first was reflected in the fact that the principle of separating government functions from those of party organizations was not implemented thoroughly in some localities, where the functions of party organizations were still confused with the functions of government and party organizations did not take care of party affairs. The second was reflected in the fact that because some local party leaders lacked correct understanding of the party's leading role, some local party organizations simply washed their hands of any routine affairs after they were relieved from government functions. These two deviations have adversely influenced the building of spiritual civilization. In order to correctly ensure the party's leadership, we should take reform steps to deal with these two problems.

Regarding the functions and leadership methods of party organizations, Lenin pointed out: "The party's task is to exercise overall leadership over all state organs." ("Collected Works of Lenin" Vol 33, p 221) The so-called overall leadership refers to political, ideological, and organizational leadership rather that concrete administrative interfernece. Our reform of the party's position and function in the state political structure should follow this principle. We must first implement the principle of separating government functions from those of party organizations. Without doing so, it will not be possible for the party to exercise effective political, ideological, and organizational leadership. Under the premise of separating government functions from those of party organizations, the party must exercise its leadership through the formulation and implementation of correct principles and policies, through the exemplary role of party members, and through the party's propaganda and organizational work.

The separation of government functions from those of party organizations is a major step for straightening out the party style. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "Setting aright the party style is the key to straightening out public conduct." What should we do to straighten out party style? Party rectification and the method of carrying out criticism and self-criticism are of course important and useful measures, but they are not the sole way to straighten out party style. If there is no strict organizational measure, the results of ideological education will not be guaranteed. Therefore, in order to effectively straighten out party style, apart from conducting party rectification and doing political and ideological work among party members, it is still necessary to strictly implement the principle of separating government functions from those of party organizations. Cadres responsible for the party's organizational work must not be allowed to directly handle administrative affairs and manage enterprise production. Our party is a ruling party. If party cadres can directly handle routine administrative affairs, power will be too centralized, and this will give opportunities for some people to abuse power by seeking selfish interests. [paragraph continues]

Separation of government functions from those of party organizations will also be favorable to the consolidation of the party organizations. After freeing themselves from routine administrative affairs, party organizations at all levels will be able to better concentrate on studying and implementing the party's line, principles, and policies and on enhancing their ideological, organizational, and party style quality. The quality of party organizations is a decisive factor for the building of socialist spiritual civilization. With good quality, they will play a leading role in improving public conduct and social values.

RENMIN RIBAO ON NEED FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING

HK100717 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "A Strategic Task"]

[Text] After working out the correct line, guiding principles, and policies, the success in realizing the four modernizations program and invigorating the Chinese nation lies in talented personnel. There are several categories of talented personnel. In the process of promoting socialist modernization, we need not only a great number of senior scientific and technical experts, but also a larger number of junior and middle-level and senior technical workers, and hundreds of millions of vocationally well-trained urban and rural laborers. Without such a well-organized large contingent of laborers and technicians, we are unable to turn our advanced technology, facilities, and management means into practical productive forces. Even if we have senior specialized personnel, it is difficult for us to give full play to their role.

To train a large contingent of laborers and technical workers, we should rely on developing vocational and technical education. Vigorously developing vocational and technical education is a strategic task facing our country's economic and education work.

Vocational and technical education is the weakest link in our country's general educational system. There are historical reasons for this situation. For example, our country's vocational and technical education started late, had a poor foundation to start with, and was devastated during the 10 years of turmoil. We have encountered many difficulties in restoring and developing it. However, the more important reason is that the concepts of many of our comrades have lagged behind the times.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have achieved very great results in bringing order out of chaos, and in attaching importance to the training of talented personnel for the whole society. However, a few years ago, some comrades had one-sided views on training talented personnel. For example, when they talked about the training of talented personnel, they always thought of higher education. They looked down on or even neglected secondary vocational and technical education. Due to the fact that the proportion of general senior secondary schools in the secondary educational structure was too big, a situation of "a massive army pushing simultaneously toward single-plank bridge" occured. A large number of candidates, who failed in their university entrance examination, had not acquired any special skills when they sought employment.

According to statistics, the ratio of engineers to technicians in China's engineering enterprises is 3:1. According to the experience of some developed countries, there are 3-5 technicians to 1 engineer and 10-15 skilled workers to 1 engineer. In most of China's enterprises, the number of engineers is out of proportion to that of technicians. This causes a waste of talented personnel at the higher level. This is because the development of secondary technical schools, which are responsible for training technicians, is too slow. Some localities even blindly turned secondary technical schools into colleges. It is thus more difficult to change the situation of imbalance in the increase of the numbers of engineers and technicians.

As industry in China is presently underdeveloped, technical workers are traditionally trained through the "apprenticeship system." Linking education with labor has now become a common trend in various countries throughout the world in developing education. In some developed countries, due to the fact that workers receive extensive pre-employment vocational training, highly skilled workers account for 20 percent, middle-level skilled workers 50 percent, and junior skilled workers 30 percent of the total workforce. However, according to statistics issued by China in 1985, in industrial and communications enterprises under ownership by the whole people, junior skilled workers accounted for 71 percent, middle-level skilled workers 27 percent, and highly skilled workers (most of them over 50) 2 percent of the total of 40 million skilled workers. That is the reason for the poor quality of many enterprises in China. It is a task of top priority to vigorously develop vocational and technical schools, and to train a large number of senior and middle-level skilled workers.

With the change in the rural economic structure and the development of commodity economy, people need scientific knowledge whether they are engaged in farming, the breeding industry, or running town and township enterprises. We need a generation of new people who have mastered modern technology for production. All this has assigned an urgent and arduous task to rural vocational technical education. The development of tertiary industry, commerce, and services also relies on a large number of qualified technical and management personnel trained through vocational and technical education.

In a word, various trades and services should look at vocational and technical education with new eyes, and approach it from the high plane of the development of the trades and services concerned.

The reform of our country's labor system is imperative. The principle of "vocational training before employment" should be widely and gradually pursued. Vigorously developing vocational and technical education is the work of educational departments. This is also a bounden duty of economic departments and other departments. Various relevant quarters should cooperate with each other closely to solve practical problems of running vocational and technical schools in terms of funds, teachers, school buildings, facilities, and so on. They should make contributions to the great development of vocational and technical education.

BEIJING ON PROMOTING CIVILIZATION IN COUNTRYSIDE

OW131338 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Station commentator's article: "Modern Peasants Must Be Imbued With Modern Civilization"]

[Excerpts] Over the past few years, many peasants have begun to eliminate poverty. Their material life has become better and better. Hundreds of millions of peasants have never been so cheerful and high-spirited. China's vast countryside has never been so full of vigor. However, we must also realize that despite the developing economy in rural areas, socialist spiritual civilization is still not yet well developed. In some localities, feudalist and superstitious activities such as worship of gods and Buddha and extravagant wedding parties and funerals still prevail. Some cadres do not hesitate to spend money to repair temples, but hate to spend money to repair buildings and buy desks and chairs for local schools. Some peasants do not hesitate to spend money to worship Heaven, but are reluctant to spend money to send their sons or daughters to study science or master technical skills. All these ignorant and backward phenomena run counter to our targets in building the new countryside.

At a meeting in 1962, Comrade Chen Yi exhorted people against ignorance. He said: Imperialism is an enemy. So is feudalism. Ignorance is also a formidable enemy. More than 30 years have passed since the founding of new China. In many areas, particularly in remote areas, peasants still suffer a great deal because they are ignorant. One of the pressing tasks at present is to help peasants to forge ahead in developing modern civilization so that modern peasants will be imbued with modern civilization while continuously reforming the rural economy. To build a socialist new countryside is the aspiration of hundreds of millions of peasants. However, we must vigorously develop not only material civilization, but also spiritual civilization. Otherwise, we will not be able to consolidate our collective economy and maintain it over a protracted period, even if we have done a good job in developing it. [passage omitted]

We must grasp the two civilizations simultaneously. We must not only eliminate poverty, but also emancipate ourselves from ignorance. By carrying out ideological education in various forms, we must lead peasants to consciously resist and combat uncivilized and unhealthy ideas and habits. At the same time, we must carry out education and serious criticism, even to the extent of taking legal actions against those individuals who take the lead in promoting feudalism and reviving superstition, in confusing and poisoning people's minds, and in undermining the development of spiritual civilization in the countryside. In a word, our rural outlook will definitely become better and better if the leadership at all levels in our countryside truly and firmly grasps the development of spirutual civilization as a strategic task of great significance.

CORRECTION TO CENTRAL LEADERS AT OFFICIAL'S FUNERAL

The following correction pertains to the item headlined "Central Leaders Attend Former Official's Funeral," published in the 9 July China DAILY REPORT, page K 15, from paragraph three, last line:

...county [passage omitted] (new graph) Wreaths sent by central leading comrades, including Hu Yaobang, Chen Yun, Peng Zhen, Ulanhu, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi, Yu Qiuli, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhen, Bo Yibo, Yang Yichen, Kang Keqing, and Chen Zaidao, were laid on both sides of Comrade (Li Shangwu)'s remains. [passage omitted] (new graf) More than 600... (rewording passage)

HENAN LEADER ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION ISSUES

HK110215 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Zhao Di, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke yesterday at the conclusion of the provincial forum on rural party rectification attended by directors of prefectural and city CPC Committee party rectification offices. He demanded that the CPC committees at all levels strengthen leadership, make sound preparations for village-level party rectification, and do a thoroughly good job in completing township-level rectification.

Comrade Zhao Di stressed: Henan has 47,000 rural party branches and 1.36 million party members. The task of launching party rectification on such a large scale is extremely arduous. The party committees at all levels must therefore pay great attention to this work and get a serious grasp of it from now on. Every county, city, and district must organize pilot projects in village-level party rectification. [passage omitted] The focus must be on solving problems of serious abuse of power and grave violations of law and discipline by party-member cadres.

Comrade Zhao Di said: The rural economic accounts are managed in chaotic fashion. Many party-member cadres have seized collective property. This has a serious effect on party-masses and cadres-masses relations. Whether serious stock can be taken of these accounts is a major hallmark for judging whether village-level rectification has been done in a superficial way or not. We must organize forces to get a serious grasp of this work. [passage omitted]

On township-level party rectification, Comrade Zhao Di said that this work commenced in mid-December 1985 and its conclusion began at the end of June. Generally speaking, progress has been smooth, development healthy, and results good. The main problems at present are: 1) The problems in a few townships have not been properly resolved and they need to make up for missed lessons. 2) The work of investigating and dealing with cases in a few counties and townships has left some stains behind. Some of the leftover problems are rather great and need to be handled vigorously. 3) There are many leftover problems in organizational measures. In many places there are party members who have been arbitrarily reregistered before their problems have been thoroughly investigated. These problems must all be properly resolved. [passage omitted]

Zhao Di said: It has recently been discovered that certain units have arbitrarily transferred to other work comrades sent to work in party rectification offices. They have even arbitrarily dismissed or downgraded these comrades. This is impermissible. Places and units where such problems exist must seriously check on them and put things right.

ZHENGZHOU PLANT MANAGERS URGE POLITICAL STRUCTURAL REFORMS

HK110115 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] According to a GUANGMING RIBAO reporter, a number of Zhengzhou City plant managers hold that there can be no guarantee for expanding enterprise decision-making powers unless political structural reforms are carried out and the upper-level organs are streamlined and truly delegate their powers. Otherwise, it will be impossible to mobilize the enterprises' enthusiasm.

In the past 2 years, the Zhengzhou City CPC Committee and government and the departments in charge of the enterprises have done a lot of work in implementing the State Council's regulations on expanding decision-making powers. The powers of many central and provincial enterprises have thus been firmed up. However, due to the fact that political structural reforms have not been carried out in many upper-level units and departments synchronously with implementing the regulations on expanding decision-making powers, some powers that should have been delegated to the enterprises have not been, and some powers that were delegated have been quickly withdrawn again by the departments in charge.

A sample survey shows that over 40 percent of the State Council's 10 regulations on expanding decision-making powers have not been implemented. The outstanding signs of this are: 1) The enterprises' power to sell their products has not been implemented. If the enterprises lack the power to sell their products, this has a direct impact on business relations between the enterprises and other places. 2) The power of establishing organs has not been implemented. Certain departments demand that the enterprises establish organs [words indistinct] and adopt all kinds of measures to make life difficult for them if they do not. 3) The power of labor and personnel management has not been implemented. One enterprise promoted a young worker to managerial rank. When it reported to the upper-level department in charge, it failed to get approval for this move for over 6 months.

The plant managers demanded that in the wake of the continual deepening of reform and the expansion of the plant manager responsibility system, it is essential to solve the problem of enterprise [words indistinct]; otherwise, the plant managers will, as in the past, have only responsibilities without powers, and the plant manager responsibility system can hardly be effectively promoted.

GUAN GUANGFU VISITS HUBEI TELEVISION WORKERS

HK091132 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 4 July, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Guan Guangfu, Governor Guo Zhenqian, and provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Zhao Fulin went to the studio of the Hubei television play production center in (Jiutianshan), 40 km from the center of Wuhan City, to visit the principal play production workers, including playwrights, directors, and cameramen of the television play serial "Wangzhaojun," which is being jointly shot by the Hubei television play production center and the Nei Mongol television station. Zhang Jinxian, chief playwright of this television play and director of the Hubei provincial broadcasting and television department, and responsible persons of the play production department introduced the situation in making preparations to the leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee. [passage omitted]

Responsible comrades of relevant departments, including the general office and propaganda department of the provincial CPC Committee, took part in the ceremony to mark the beginning of the shooting.

HUBEI SECRETARY MEETS PARTY SCHOOL GRADUATES

HK111244 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Yesterday morning Guan Guangfu, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Qian Yunlu, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, went to the provincial CPC Committee Party School to call on the students who will graduate this summer.

They had a discussion meeting with representatives of the students.

The responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee encouraged teachers and students of the party school to build up a good school style of forging ahead, seeking truth from facts, blazing new trails, and dedicating themselves, so as to build the party school into one of the important bases for studying theory and bringing forth talented people.

Some 371 students will graduate this summer, the biggest number in the history of the party school. After having a photograph taken with all the students, the responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee met with some representatives of the students.

Comrade Guan Guangfu delivered a speech at the meeting. He first stressed the role and position of party schools. He said that we are now carrying out two grand projects. One is the four modernization drive through which we will build socialism with Chinese characteristics. The other is to bring forth a great number of cadres who are revolutionary, young, well educated, and have professional knowledge. Party schools play a very important role in fulfilling these two projects. We must view party school work from this high plane and attach importance to, and strengthen, party school work.

Comrade Guan Guangfu put forth four requirements on how to further properly carry out party school work.

1. It is necessary to do well in training cadres in connection with the characteristics of party schools. [passage omitted]

2. It is necessary to study the party's line, policies and principles since the 3d plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee. [passage omitted]

3. It is necessary to put the education in party spirit, party style, and party discipline in an important position. [passage omitted]

4. It is necessary to adopt the teaching method of linking theory with practice. [passage omitted]

Comrade Guan Guangfu said that party schools must cater to the four modernization drive, and strengthen research on theory. He expressed the hope that theoretical workers of party schools would take an active part in the four modernization drive and reform, have the courage to research theory, dare to tackle tough problems, and dare to explore complicated and controversial problems in real life. The provincial CPC Committee Party School must set a good example to all party schools in the province in studying theory. It must provide theoretical information to the provincial CPC Committee and CPC committees at all levels, and make great breakthroughs in theoretical research and exploration. [passage omitted]

On how to strengthen self building of party schools, Comrade Guan Guangfu said that the political quality of the members of the leadership groups of party schools must be good on the whole. It is necessary to set higher demands on the members in party spirit, party style, and party discipline. These members must set an example in uniting with others. [passage omitted]

Comrade Guan Guangfu also demanded that the provincial CPC Committee Party School strengthen ties with party schools of all prefectures and counties.

CPC committees at all levels must strengthen their leadership over party school work, support party school work, create necessary conditions for properly running party schools, and gradually set up and perfect networks and systems for party school education in the province. Comrade Qian Yunlu also delivered a speech at the meeting. [passage omitted]

HUNAN REPORTS INDUSTRIAL SUCCESSES, PROBLEMS

HK070307 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpts] According to HUNAN RIBAO, the province achieved gratifying results in industrial and communications production in the first half of the year. Total industrial output value was 14.21 billion yuan, representing 49.8 percent of the year's plan and showing an increase of 6.5 percent over the same period last year.

The special feature of industrial and communications production in the first half of the year was that an appropriate growth rate was maintained despite serious shortages of electric power, fuel, capital, and raw materials, and despite the fact that the growth rate in the corresponding period of last year was rather high. The provinces's figure for the entire period was slightly higher than the figure forcast for the whole country. All 13 prefectures and cities and all 13 major industrial departments, with the exception of coal, achieved better production than in the same period of last year. [passage omitted]

However, there are still many discrepancies compared with the demands advanced by the provincial economic work conference at the beginning of the year. The main problems are that the quality of some products is unstable, input consumption and losses have both increased, certain products are now stockpiled, and the amount of capital required for production has increased. The province has carried out a sample survey of 273 light and textile industry products since April. Only 53 percent of food products and 74 percent of other products were found up to standard. Over 400 enterprises covered by the provincial budget are now running at a loss, and the amount of the loss is greater than in the same period last year.

At a recent provincial telephone conference on industry and communications, the provincial government ordered that a good job be done in arranging production in the second half of the year. [passage omitted] The province should maintain a growth rate of 7 to 8 percent and strive to attain a total output value of 30 billion yuan for the year. [passage omitted]

HUNAN HOLDS MEETING ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK090243 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Fusheng pointed out at the third provincial conference on rural party rectification, which concluded on 8 July, that in village-level party rectification it is necessary to proceed from rural realities and regard as the primary tasks conducting in-depth education in party spirit and improving the party members' ideological and political awareness.

Comrade Liu Fusheng said: The village level is the frontline in reform and economic construction. [passage omitted] We must correctly handle and practice the principle of solving the problems without causing confusion and strictly act according to party policies without leaving any after-effects.

Village-level party rectification must be closely linked to the special features of the rural areas. We must base the work on reality, carry out in-depth education in party spirit, and improve the party members' political quality, to enable them to enhance awareness and unify understanding. We must strictly investigate and deal with serious cases of abuse of powers and violations of law and discipline by party-member cadres, and other problems that arouse strong reaction among the masses.

We must do a good job in the organizational rectification of the party and strengthen the building of the leadership groups.

Regarding the timetable and measures for village-level party rectification, Comrade Liu Fusheng said that village-level party rectification will start in the second half of this year and be basically completed by the spring festival of 1987. We must pay attention to making use of slack season in agricultural production. As far as method is concerned, we must persevere in conducting education by positive example. On the basis of enhancing awareness, we should unfold criticism and self-criticism, unify people's thinking, correct mistakes, and purify the organizations. [passage omitted]

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Mao Zhiyong spoke at the conclusion of the meeting. He stressed that the party committees at all levels must strengthen leadership over village-level party rectification. The secretaries must grasp the work personally. Deputy secretaries in charge of party rectification must spare no effort. The party rectification office force can only be strengthened, not weakened. While getting a good grasp of village-level party rectification, the prefectures and counties must also fully complete district and township rectification and consolidate and develop the fruits of rectification in units at and above county-level.

HUNAN LEADER ON CORRECTING PARTY STYLE, MALPRACTICES

HK130139 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Liu Fusheng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out at a meeting of responsible cadres of provincial departments and bureau this morning that the provincial organs must further correct party style, straighten out sectoral malpractices, and transform their work style so as to provide better service for the basic levels. He said: The provincial CPC Committee has decided to transfer 700 party-member cadres from provincial organs and some central units in Hunan and send them to the rural areas to help with party rectification. [passage omitted]

Liu Fusheng said: At present the responsible comrades of certain units have muddled ideas regarding the correction of sectoral malpractices. In correcting such malpractices, we must start with the leading organs and the principal leading cadres. [passage omitted]

The 700 party-member cadres being transferred will be sent to 20 counties at the end of August. They will work there for 6 months. After party rectification is concluded, these counties can be regarded as permanent liaison points for the provincial units sending cadres there.

Shi Xinshan, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, presided at the meeting today. [passage omitted]

NEI MONGGOL CONGRESS COMMITTEE MEETING ENDS 8 JUL

SK100959 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] After a 9-day session, the 17th Standing Committee meeting of the 6th regional People's Congress, which had fulfilled the items of the agenda, concluded on the afternoon of 8 July.

Batubagen, chairman of the autonomous regional People's Congress Standing Committee, presided over the meeting. Attending the meeting were vice chairmen of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, including Zhou Beifeng, Seyinbayaer, and Butegeqi.

Attending the meeting as observers were Bai Junqing, vice chairman of the regional people's government; Wang Linghong, chief procurator of the regional People's Procuratorate; and responsible persons from the regional Higher People's Court, from the relevant regional-level departments, commissions, bureaus, and offices, from the offices in charge of People's Congress work in various leagues, and regional level cities from the People's Congress Standing Committees of a number of banners, counties, and districts, and from the organs under the regional People's Congress Standing Committee.

The meeting approved the resolution to establish the group in charge of legal system work under the regional People's Congress Standing Committee and the decision on electing deputies to the next committee at the sumu, township, and town level in Ih Ju League. The meeting also held discussions on draft regulations and rules on regional autonomy.

The meeting proceeded in fully developing democracy during discussions in a very lively atmosphere. At the meeting, the participants aired their own views and spoke out freely. They held earnest and careful discussions with the comrades attending the meeting as observers on the structure and every act of the draft regulations and rules on regional autonomy and put forward many supplementary and revisory opinions that have provided a favorable basis for improving or perfecting these regulations and rules.

Questions and the supplementary and revisory opinions raised by the participating members and the personnel attending the meeting as observers will be submitted to the drafting committee at the fourth session, which will be responsible for organizing the work of revising these regulations and rules. These revised regulations and rules will be distributed to the departments, leagues, cities, banners, and counties throughout the region to further solicit the opinions of cadres and the masses of various nationalities in an extensive way. Then, these well-discussed regulations and rules will again be submitted to the regional People's Congress Standing Committee for examination and approval.

SHAANXI ECONOMIC OFFICIAL URGES SOLVING REFORM PROBLEMS

HK030517 Xian XIBEI XINXI BAO in Chinese 23 Jun 86 pp 1, 4

[Article by Li Jiayou: "Apply the Reform Spirit To View and Solve Problems in Reform"]

[Excerpts] Applying the reform spirit to view and solve problems in reform means proceeding from the desire for reform and finding ways to resolve the problems in reform by going deep into the practice of reform; the aim of solving these problems is to promote reforms, not to preserve and revive the old system and order. We should apply the viewpoint of reform to view new people and events in reform. We cannot use the yardstick of the old system to measure the results of reform and go in for nitpicking, finding faults, and hampering the progress of reform. At present we should particularly ensure that the cadres and masses apply the viewpoint of reform to view and deal with the following issues:

I Take a Correct View of Advanced Units and Persons in Reform

A number of advanced units and persons in reform have recently suffered all kinds of censures and reproaches and are having a very uncomfortable time. This is extremely unfavorable for deepening the reforms. In recent years the advanced units and persons in reform have gone in for bold pioneering and innovation, thereby leading us forward and gaining merit by opening up a new situation in reform. The reforms will lose their momentum if we are unable to take a correct view of these units and persons. We must make a specific analysis of the problems of various kinds among them. Only a very few people, motivated by moneygrubbing, commit all kinds of outrages while waving the signboard of reform. Of course we have to deal with such people in accordance with party discipline and state law. However, in most cases the problems are related to the nature of their work; or else mistakes occur in their work and certain of their methods "go too far" because they do not have a clear understanding of the policies, or because their own regulations and methods of the policies, or because their own regulations and methods seemed to be in line with the policies in the past but are not so now. We must not seek perfection regarding these problems in work and blindly censure these comrades for them. We must sum up experiences and lessons with them and encourage them to brace their spirits and do still better in reform. So long as people are exerting every effort, we must allow certain deviations to occur in their work and must not mete out indiscriminate punishment to them. We should still less hold the comrades at the lower levels accountable for problems caused by lack of unity in the intentions of those in the upper levels.

It also happens that comrades engaging in reform who have no problems regarding themselves incur the jealousy of certain people and are victimized, falsely charged, and suffer miscarriages of justice just because they have in the course of reform encroached on the interests of certain people, or else because "the big tree attracts the wind." In such cases it is necessary to act in line with the principle of seeking truth from facts and carry out investigation and verification so as to promptly overturn all the derogatory terms heaped on them. We must also resolutely act in line with the intention of the fourth session of the Sixth NPC that "it is necessary to deal severely with launching retaliatory attacks, making false accusations, and framing people," and "sentence the accuser to the punishment facing the person he wrongly accused."

When reformers encounter difficulties, the leading comrades at all levels must show concern for them, encourage and support them, provide them with the necessary protection, and take the initiative in shouldering responsibility for the mistakes in their work. At the same time, it is necessary to pay attention to discovering and cultivating still more advanced typical examples of reform and use them to guide the way to carry out reform in greater depth.

II Take a Correct View of the Plant Manager (Director) Responsibility System

Carrying out the plant manager (director) responsibility system is a major reform in the enterprise leadership setup and an important aspect of internal reforms in the enterprises. [passage omitted] At present this system is at the pilot project stage, and 739 enterprises in Shaanxi are carrying out pilot projects in the system. Everyone has unanimous views that this system should continue to be implemented on a trial basis, but there are some different views and opinions regarding its specific workings. Leading central comrades recently made explicit statements on this question on many occasions. We must do a good job in ideological and political work and bring everyone's thinking into line with the intentions of the central authorities. We should lay stress on having a clear idea regarding two issues: 1) The plant manager has the power to hire and fire middle-grade cadres and to nominate a deputy manager. The specific methods and procedures for doing this must be beneficial for overcoming the phenomenon of "two layers of skin" in managing personnel and managing production, and should help the plant manager to make correct and effective policy decisions; 2) a plant manager cannot have the sole say or abuse his powers. When problems arise, he must hold more consultations and exchanges of views with the responsible comrades of the party committee and the trade union, follow the mass line, respect the views of the party committee, and strive to gain the support and cooperation of the party committee and the trade union. He should rely on the collective wisdom in order to do his work well.

III Take a Correct View of Problems That Arise in Wage Reform in the Enterprises

Wage reform is a very complex and sensitive issue, and the staff and workers have a great variety of views on the matter. All units must act in the spirit of the "outline for propaganda on current enterprise reform issues"; on the basis of seriously investigating and analyzing the state of mind of its own staff and workers, each unit should use various forms of carrying out appropriate propaganda, education, and explanation work, so as to stabilize the workers' emotions and ensure that they will care for the overall situation and contribute toward making a success of wage reform in the enterprise in the attitude of being masters of the house. Regarding the issue of the reduction of the bonus funds after the wage readjustment, the state has allowed 75 percent of the money to be included in production costs. We must take advantage of this condition to rapidly set up economic responsibility systems and put them on a sound basis, so as to solve the problem of the "big pot of rice" gaining ground, mobilize the workers' enthusiasm, and boost production.

IV Correctly View the Relationship Between Reform and Unhealthy Trends

We must persevere in reform, and correct unhealthy trends. At present some people on the one hand acknowledge that the situation is good, but on the other vent an extraordinary number of grievances and complaints. "They eat when the meal is served and abuse the cook afterwards," and stir up a "nameless fire." Lack of correct understanding of the relationship between reform and unhealthy trends is an important cause of this phenomenon. We must seriously carry out ideological and political work on these comrades. We should ensure that everyone clearly understands that the root of unhealthy trends is not reform but the influence of capitalist, individualist, and feudalist ideology. [paragraph continues]

It is indeed the case that a few people have taken advantage of loopholes in reform to indulge in unhealthy trends. While correcting the unhealthy trends, we must block these loopholes by replenishing and perfecting the reform systems that have been set up. However we cannot on that account hold that reform is bound to produce unhealthy trends, or doubt and waver over reform because unhealthy trends have to be corrected.

We must strictly grasp the policy demarcation lines while correcting unhealthy trends and must not confuse shortcomings and mistakes in reform with unhealthy trends. In some places, due to lack of clear policies and failure to distinguish between right and wrong, plant managers dare not take responsibility, people dare not undertake contract tasks, purchase and sales staff cannot be sent out, and no one dares entertain visitors. These things affect the enterprises' normal production operations. The upper-level department concerned should promptly formulate a certain number of regulations governing enterprise production operations. [passage omitted]

URUMQI EARTH SATELLITE STATION BEGINS OPERATION

HK091150 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The Urumqi earth station of the domestic satellite telecommunications network today held a ceremony to mark the commencement of its operation. Beginning today, all places throughout Xinjiang can receive the programs of the Xinjiang television station through this ground receiving station. The Xinjiang television station has now become the first station throughout our country to make use of satellite to relay television programs. [passage omitted]

State Council Vice Premier Li Peng conversed with regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang through the satellite. [passage omitted]

Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Tomur Dawamat also talked with Vice Premier Li Peng. [passage omitted]

Leading comrades of the regional party, government, and Army, including Song Hanliang, Tomur Dawamat, Janabil, Zhang Sixue, (Tang Guangcai), and (Wu Naixing), also attended this ceremony to mark this operation of the station.

PROBLEMS, CHANGES FOR TAIWAN'S DIPLOMATIC POLICY

HK111337 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 p 22

[Article by Wang Peiyu: "A Glimpse of Taiwan's 'Diplomatic' Policy"]

[Excerpts] In early June, Interpol's 82d executive committee meeting unanimously adopted a resolution that: In view of the situation in which the Taiwan authorities refused to take part in Interpol activities under the name of the Police Organization of the Region "Taiwan, China," it has been decided that the secretary general and all members of Interpol should execute the resolution of the 53d plenary session of the organization, and stop Taiwan's police organization from taking part in any of the organizations's business and activities. This is the second severe setback concerning international organizations experienced so far this year by the Taiwan authorities.

Before this, the Asia Development Bank, after admitting the PRC as a member, asked Taiwan to stay in the organization under the name of "Taipei, China." But the Taiwan authorities dealt with this by taking an attitude of "not changing the name, not withdrawing from the organization, and not participating in the activities." The authorities thus caught themselves in a dilemma.

It is just as Yu Kuo-kwa, Taiwan's "Executive Yuan premier," said on this year's international situation, "we are still in an ever-changing and difficult environment."

The status of Taiwan in the international community has continued to drop since the 1970's. At the beginning, the PRC was restored its legitimate seat at the United Nations. Then, China and the United States established diplomatic relations. At present, an absolute majority of the world's countries (134 in number) have established diplomatic relations with the PRC Government, and acknowledge that the PRC Government is the only legitimate government representing China, while Taiwan is part of China [passage omitted]

In order to overcome the difficult situation in the international community, Taiwan has begun "changing" its "diplomatic policy." At a press conference, Fredrick F. Chen, "representative to the United States of the coordination committee for North American affairs," stated that Taiwan "should focus its future security consideration on the Soviet Union." It is widely known that Taiwan has long claimed that Mainland China poses a great threat to the security of Taiwan. But the "new point of view" proposed by Fredrick F. Chien is the first "change" to taken place on a formal occasion.

This "new point of view' has attracted general attention among international circles. Public opinion in the West holds that over a long period in the past, people living on and outside of Taiwan island were generally dissatisfied with the ossified "diplomatic" policy of the KMT authorities. Proposal of this "new point of view" may pacify Taiwan's people and change the "government's image of being ossified," as well as possibly winning more support from people living overseas.

In order to change the impression upon this European and American countries, Taiwan began its so called "substantial diplomatic" offensive. It sent more than 10 teams to the United States for "tactical procurement," each of which brought a turnover value of some $1 billion. It also sent several teams to Europe for large-scale procurement. The aim of this move was to reduce Taiwan's favorable trade balance with this region and to give them a good impression of Taiwan. People called this kind of diplomacy "money diplomacy" [passage omitted]

However, acting on behalf of the "government," "Executive Yuan premier" Yu Kuo-hwa repeatedly stressed the principle of "the four unchanges," that is, we shall by no means change the "state system" formulated by the Constitution of "Republic of China," or the general goal of "Republic of China" to fight communism and restore the country, and so on.

International public opinion pointed out that the Taiwan authorities now face a more difficult situation in terms of "diplomatic" relations. If they do not face the reality about China and the international community, they will be unable to change their situation of being isolated in the international community.

DEFENSE MINISTER URGES RESOLVE IN FACING COMMUNISM

OW122036 Taipei CNA in English 1452 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 12 (CNA) -- On behalf of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Chinese, participants in the 1986 military workshop passed a resolution Saturday to cable President Chiang Ching-kuwo pledging their determination to uphold the anti-communist stand and accomplish the mission of national recovery.

Speaking at the closing of the workshop. Defense Minister Wang Tao-yuan said he believes that the nation will be able to weather through difficulties and create a new situation if all the people here and men and women in uniform can insist on their belief and make utmost efforts to attain their goals.

Wang pointed out that the Peiping regime has never given up its attempts to weaken the nation's resistence against communism and military strength, and therefore, the Armed Forces here must insist on their belief, enhance their solidarity, and strengthen their training to cope with any possible challenge for the Chinese Communists.

Chief of the General Staff Hau Pei-tsun, who presided over the workshop over the past five and a half days, mapped out the guidelines for the Armed Forces' work in the coming one year after listening to reports from various panels.

Hau urged all men and women in uniform to follow the directives given by the late President Chiang Kai-shek and President Chiang Ching-kuo to beef up the Armed Forces' combat capability and to fight vigourously to recover the China mainland and thus attain the final goal of the national revolution.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FREE TRADE ZONE WITH U.S. POSSIBLE

OW140319 Taipei CNA in English 0306 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 13, (CNA) -- Wu Ching-tang, deputy director general of the Board of Foreign Trade, said Sunday that the Republic of China and the United States are carefully evaluating the possibility of setting up a free trade area [FTA] agreement between the two nations.

Wu said that the Government of the Republic of China considers an FTA agreement between the two nations would benefit both sides. For the ROC, it would reduce the ever-increasing trade protectionist pressure from the U.S. and for the United States it would effectively resolve the trade imbalance problem now in favor of the ROC, he said.

Wu said that the implementation of the FTA agreement may be divided into several periods with the final goal to reach zero-tariff trade between the two nations.

However, Wu said it is still premature to say when the agreement might be set up since the two nations have not yet decided to make official contact for the purpose.

CSC DEVELOPS SPECIAL STEEL FOR BUILDING SUBMARINES

OW120255 Taipei CNA in English 0231 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 11 (CNA) -- China Steel Corporation [CSC] has succeeded in developing the technology necessary to manufacture steel plates like those used in building submarines.

CSC Chairman King Mao-hui confirmed Friday reports published in a Swedish magazine that specialize in reports of military interest, and in the domestic united monthly, that the state-owned company has been able to produce the HY-80 model steel plates used in building submarines. The CSC's research unit made this breakthrough last year, King said.

Being a government-run company, CSC is obliged to support the research and development programs of selected private enterprises and of national defense units, CSC Vice President Cheng I-lin said. Over recent years, CSC has succeeded in refining about 300 varieties of steel products, of which over 90 percent have been turned over to private firms for commercial use, he pointed out.

CSC approached the manufacture of the HY-80 steel plates at the request of a certain domestic scientific technology agency. The product was developed through CSC tests and a heat process performed by the Taiwan Machinery Manufacturing Corporation, Cheng said.

The successful development demonstrates that CSC has no technical problem in manufacturing such special steel plates. Full-scale production can begin as soon as manufacturing facilities are tooled up for the job, he said.

BRITISH NAVY RESCUES CREW OF SINKING TAIWAN SHIP

HK130524 Hong Kong AFP in English 0505 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Hong Kong, July 13 (AFP) -- A British naval supply boat rescued 15 crewmen from a sinking Taiwan cargo ship on Sunday, a statement issued by the government here said.

The cargo ship Hwa Lie, carrying 121 containers of textiles and various types of products heading for Hong Kong, was reportedly taking in water at dawn some 60 nautical miles east of its destination.

A supply ship of the Royal Fleet Auxiliary passing by the site rescued all crewmen on board later, the statement said.

A spokesman of the cargo ship's Hong Kong agent, Willy Shipping Co., said the 1,411-ton cargo ship had sunk with its cargo.

Total cost of damages had to be worked out by the ship's owner in Taiwan, the Cheng Lie Shipping Co., the spokesman said.

SITUATION IN VIETNAM AFTER LE DUAN'S DEATH

HK130406 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 3

[Editorial: "What has Le Duan Bequeathed to Vietnam?"]

[Excerpts] Le Duan died yesterday. He had held power in Vietnam for 25 years, about a quarter of a century. [passage on history omitted]

Le Duan has now left behind a Vietnam where "there is only war and no hope of peace," a Vietnam that panders to the political requirements of a superpower by providing Cam Ranh Bay as a base for foreign warships, thereby exchanging its sovereignty for rubles; a Vietnam where inflation has risen to 350 percent, where 6 million are unemployed, and where the people have lost hope in the party and government and war weariness fills the air; and a Vietnam that is isolated to an unprecedented extent and has only the Soviet Union for a friend.

In Le Duan's hands, the party founded by Ho Chi Minh, which struggled for national independence and sovereignty, has turned into a party that has strangled an independent and sovereign party in a neighboring country. This is truly shocking!

Where will Vietnam turn following the death of Le Duan? The states and the peace-loving governments and peoples in Southeast Asia are closely watching Vietnamese developments. Only by putting an end to the Le Duan policy of building up armaments and expanding in all directions can the Communist Party of Vietnam [CPV] bring about a change and embark on the path of economic construction. This is beneficial not just for the Vietnamese nation's development, but also for peace and security on the Indochina Peninsula.

International economic activities are intertwined in the world today, and no country can develop its national economy and carry out economic reforms in isolation. So long as Vietnam does not halt its aggression against Cambodia, peace-loving states will not undertake any economic cooperation with it, nor can that country extricate itself from its unprecedented and total isolation.

Before Le Duan's death, a major dispute arose within the CPV on how to deal with the deadlock. As a result, it was rumored that Le Duan, Pham Van Dong, and Le Duc Tho would retire by the end of the year. Two weeks ago, To Huu, a member of the Political Bureau and in charge of economic reforms, resigned, and seven ministers were sacked as sacrificial lambs. Preparations were also made to arrange party and government leading posts for the southern reformists Nguyen Van Linh and Vo Chi Cong. However, the Le Duan forces are deep rooted, and a change in Vietnam's expansionist policy in the near future can hardly be hoped for.

A few people on the international scene advocate bringing about reconciliation with Vietnam by offering it economic aid, and thus encourage it to carry out reforms and open up. This idea is unrealistic and even dangerous. If Vietnam is given a blood transfusion, this will only increase its ability to wage a war of aggression against Cambodia and will not help to make Vietnam abandon its expansionist ambitions.

SURVEY SAYS FOREIGN BUSINESS DISSATISFIED WITH PRC

HK140046 Hong Kong Domestic Service in English 2330 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Dissatisfaction among foreign businessmen with operations in China is apparently becoming so acute it could affect the country's modernization. According to a survey of companies having offices in China, there is a danger of foreign investors trimming back unless business conditions are improved. The report, called "China Strategies -- the Inside Story" was drawn up by the Manchester Business School. Its author, Nigel Campbell, told Bill Barnes what specifically the foreign business community were complaining about.

[Begin recording] [Campbell] I think that many foreign businessmen are upset at the rapidity with which prices are increased and the arbitrariness with which they feel this happens. And foreign firms are now saying that they think this will reduce the willingness of companies to open offices in China and will also cause them, if perhaps they don't decrease their staff, at least they are not likely to expand their staff. I am personally very concerned that China is taking advantage of the sellers' market in a way which may do the country's modernization harm in the future.

[Barnes] But the point is surely that China is seen as potentially a vast and important market, if it isn't already.

[Campbell] It is an important market already, and it is a growing one, and I am personally convinced that the market will continue to grow, but I think that as a result of their experience, both with offices in China and with foreign investments, particularly equity joint ventures, foreign companies are becoming rather cautious and hesitant about expansion both of investment and staffing in China, and this is actually not what China needs. China needs the goodwill of the foreign business community for its modernization program, and I fear that they may be, they are in danger of losing some of that goodwill with which they started.

[Barnes] You say that this may be the fault of the approach that foreign companies take in China. They are treating China as something, as a special place, which they don't really need to. What do you mean by this?

[Campbell] Well, I think there is evidence that some foreign companies, when doing business in China or attempting to do business, are not quite as demanding as they are in some other developing countries, and maybe this has resulted in the Chinese negotiating rather toughly and becoming, having a reputation for difficult conditions. My own recommendation is that foreign companies should expect the China opportunity to be evaluated in the same way as opportunities in Nigeria, Brazil, or any other country, and I think that Chinese would be wrong if they expect foreign companies to continue to give China any special favors.

[Barnes] Now, you note in your survey that Japanese companies appear to be prepared to stay in China for a long time. Does this mean that they are quite happy to put up with the discomforts, the aggravation of actually trying to operate in China at the moment?

[Campbell] Well, as you know, the Japanese, in all their business activities throughout the world, tend to take a longer term perspective than American and Western firms, and this is true of China as it is elsewhere.

However, it does not mean that the Japanese are happy with the situation; on the contrary, the Japanese are quite vociferous, and have been quite vociferous, in complaining about price increases and difficulties of doing business. But they regard China as such as important market to them, particularly given its proximity and its wealth of raw materials, that they seem at the moment to be prepared to stick it out. But I think even they will reduce their rate of growth in China, reduce their commitments, or delay their commitments, if prices and conditions are not improved. [end recording]

HONG KONG RESIDENTS MAY BE ABLE TO TOUR DPRK

HK130336 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 1

[By Pamela Ngai]

[Text] Hong Kong residents may soon be able to travel to North Korea on tours organised by two travel agents in China.

This was announced by the Deputy Director of the Travel and Tourism Bureau of Liaoning, Mr Zhang Shutan, at a recent press conference in Shenyang, China.

Mr Zhang said the Democratic Peoples's Republic of Korea (DPRK) has authorised the Shenyang Branch of the China International Travel Service (CITS) and the China Liaoning Travel Service to organise tours from third countries.

The two agencies are the only ones in China that run the cross-border travel business, he said.

However, tourists holding passports issued by the United States, Japan, Israel, South Africa, Taiwan and South Korea are not entitled to the concession, he said.

Mr Zhang said it was the first time that China has made arrangements for foreign tourists to visit another country.

He said few Western tourists have visited North Korea, and those who join the tours would be enjoying a priviledged experience.

According to a CITS pamphlet, NEW DESTINATION 86/87, those joining the tour will be informed 30 days before the departure their visas have been approved.

Before departure, visitors will have to personally call at the DPRK Embassy in Beijing to collect their visas which will specify the duration of stay in North Korea.

A transit visa is required for the return through China.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

China

Vol I No 135 15 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

- U.S.-USSR Disarmament Talks Difficult A 1
- Shevardnadze's London Trip Warms Relations A 2
- Mitterrand's Moscow Visit Benefits Both Nations A 3
- PRC Makes Formal Application To Rejoin GATT A 5
- RENMIN RIBAO Answers Reader's Query on GATT [12 Jul] A 5
- PRC Receives 13 More Shipbuilding Orders A 6

UNITED STATES

- U.S. Banker Says PRC Becoming Economic Power B 1
- Hu Yaobang, Brzezinski Discuss Ties, Issues B 1
- NPC Vice Chairman Briefs U.S. Visitors on Xizang B 1
- Reagan Reiterates SDI Not Bargaining Chip B 2

NORTHEAST ASIA

- Further Reportage on PRC-DPRK Amity Celebration D 1
  - Deng Speaks on Modernization [KYODO] D 1
  - Wan Li Attends DPRK Banquet D 1
  - Tian Jiyun Addresses Banquet D 2
  - Tian Delegation Concludes Visit D 3
  - Sino-Korean Friendship Lauded [RENMIN RIBAO 11 Jul] D 3
- DPRK Renews Call for Tripartite Military Talks D 4
- Japan May Buy U.S. Nuclear Subs in 5 Years D 5
- Bank of China To Open Overseas Branch in Tokyo D 5
- Ballet Dancer Receives Special Prize in Japan D 5

SOUTHEAST ASIA & PACIFIC

- PRC Offers Condolences to SRV on Le Duan's Death [KYODO] E 1
  - Yan Jici Expresses Condolences E 1
- Truong Chinh Elected CPV General Secretary E 1
- Hong Kong Magazine Reviews Cambodian Resistance E 2
- Burmese Government Delegation Visits Beijing E 3
  - Chen Muhua Hosts Luncheon E 3
  - Meets With Wan Li E 3
  - Hosts Return Banquet E 4
- China Becomes Biggest Buyer of Thai Rice E 4
- Ulanhu, Sihanouk Watch DK Dancers in Beijing E 4

WESTERN EUROPE

Zhao Ziyang Continues Visit to Europe, Africa G 1
- Begins 4-Day Spain Visit G 1
- Issues Arrival Statement G 1
- Welcomed by Spanish Premier G 2
- Holds Talks With Counterpart G 2
- Spanish Premier Hosts Banquet G 3
- Gonzalez Speaks at Banquet G 4
- Premiers Pledge Cooperation G 4

XINHUA Interviews Turkish Prime Minister G 5

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Official Says Typhoon Killed 'At Least 57' [AFP] K 1
RENMIN RIBAO Urges Mass Participation in Reform K 1
GUANGMING RIBAO Views Political Reform Issues [14 Jul] K 3
NONGMIN RIBAO on Situation in Rural Reforms [30 Jun] K 4
BAN YUE TAN Stresses Improving Party Style [25 Jun] K 5
Government Organs Urged To Adopt New Style K 8
LIAOWANG on Party Rectification Results [30 Jun] K 9
GUANGMING RIBAO on Political, Economic Reform [30 Jun] K 11
Li Peng Outlines Reform of Higher Education K 14
'Realistic' Household Industry Development Urged [RENMIN RIBAO 8 Jul] K 15
Official on Cooperation With Foreign Banks K 16
Officials Comment on Renminbi Devaluation [CHINA DAILY 9 Jul] K 17
- Commentary on Devaluation K 19

LIAOWANG Visits Shaanxi Aviation Industry Base [LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION 30 Jun] K 21
LIAOWANG Views Cadre Appointment System [30 Jun] K 24
RENMIN RIBAO on Study of Industrial Policies [7 Jul] K 26
RENMIN RIBAO on Importance of Notary Work [10 Jul] K 30
Price Supervision, Inspection Strengthened K 32
Economic Commission Urges Improved Efficiency K 33
Xi Zhongxun, Others Attend Zhang Shenfu Services K 34
Leaders Attend Memorial Service for Comrade K 35
Qiao Shi Addresses Meeting of Disabled Group K 35

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

Fujian Security Organs Crack KMT Espionage Cases [FUJIAN RIBAO 28 Jun] O 1
Jiangxi's Wan Shaofen at Literary, Art Congress O 2
Zhejiang Cadres Help Rural Party Rectification O 3

NORTH REGION

Hebei Secretary Speaks at Cadre Rally [HEBEI RIBAO 28 Jun] R 1

NORTHEAST REGION

Heilongjiang Secretary on Democracy, Legal System [22 Jun] S 1

TAIWAN

National Development Seminar Opens 14 Jul V 1
    Yu Spells Out Goals V 1
    Chiang Cites 'Blueprint' for Future V 1
    Commentary Praises Seminar V 2
Economics Ministry Cites Foreign Investor Figures V 3

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

PRC Leadership Split Over Daya Bay Nuclear Plant [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 14 Jul] W 1
Hong Kong Antinuclear Petition Signed by 700,000 [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 14 Jul] W 2
PRC Attempts Domination of Hong Kong Gold Market [SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul] W 3
Portugal Forms Interministerial Committee on Macao [SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul] W 4

U.S.-USSR DISARMAMENT TALKS DIFFICULT

OW111230 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1610 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 8 Jul (XINHUA) -- News Analysis: Is There a Turn in U.S.-SOVIET Disarmament Talks?

By XINHUA reporter Cheng Shouheng

At the recently concluded fifth round of U.S.-Soviet arms control talks in Geneva, the Soviet Union put forward a new "interim plan" [zhong jian fang an 0022 7035 2455 1344] for disarmament. The United States, which had always taken a negative attitude toward Soviet proposals, openly welcomed this one. President Reagan even said that he thought "this might become a turning point." Is there really a turn in U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks?

In his speech at Glassboro before the end of the fifth round of disarmament talks, U.S. President Reagan "welcomed" the new Soviet proposal. He believed that the proposal showed that "the Soviet side had begun to make serious efforts" and that "an atmosphere facilitating both sides to hold serious discussions might really exist." After the conclusion of the fifth round of talks, he, on several occasions, expressed optimism about prospects for the talks. The U.S. delegate to the talks also made a similar appraisal of the Soviet proposal.

Why has the United States, contrary to its normal behavior, become interested in a Soviet proposal?

This is mainly because of the unfavorable situation which the Reagan administration has been in since the beginnning of this year. First, the explosion of the space shuttle "Challenger" has left many "star wars" research projects at a standstill, and many American scientists' and political figures' doubts about, and opposition to, the "star wars" program have further increased. As a result, there are greater difficulties in obtaining appropriations for relevant research projects. Second, the Reagan administration recently announced unilaterally that it was prepared to discard SALT II, which gave rise to a series of objections at home and abroad. Even its NATO allies raised objections to this, landing the United States in an isolated position. Moreover, U.S. congressional midterm elections are approaching. Reagan has thus far achieved little in effecting a relaxation of U.S.-Soviet relations and reducing nuclear weapons which he promised to do during his second term. As a result, the Republican Party has found itself at a disadvantage in the elections. In this situation, the Reagan administration has had to adjust its strategy and relax its attitude toward the Soviet Union in order to show that it is not inflexible.

Meanwhile, the Soviet "interim plan" has some new meaning, which the United States can hardly turn down. First, the Soviet Union no longer completely opposes U.S. "star wars" research but only wants it to limit such research to a laboratory level or within the scope of actions already taken by the United States, and the conditions for this is that both sides will not withdraw from the treaty limiting antimissile defense systems for at least 15 years. Second, the new proposal no longer insists on simultaneous reduction of "intermediate-range nuclear weapons that can reach trhe other side" and strategic nuclear weapons but separates them for "individual solution." These two points are new concessions made by the Soviet Union. Thus, the new Soviet proposal has come closer to the U.S. proposition. If the United States turns down this proposal, it would meet with ever sharper criticism at home and abroad.

Of course, the Soviet Union is making these concessions in return for U.S. limitations in the "star wars" program; the program must not go beyond a "laboratory research level" for 15 years. There is not much change in the basic position. In addition, what is noticeable is that the Soviet appraisal of the results of the fifth round of talks is different from that of the United States. The Soviet Union has not been optimistic, and it has repeatedly criticized the United States for "continuing to hinder the progress of the talks and land the talks in an impasse." This is why the United States has "welcomed" the new Soviet proposal but has not yet accepted it. As a matter of fact, in his Glassboro speech, Reagan clearly said that the United States "cannot accept the proposal in its totality." According to the latest news, the U.S. Government has not yet decided on "the timing for a reply and its content." The U.S. counterproposal will not be ready for at least "another few weeks."

In a word, the Soviet Union and the United States each have their own plans despite the fact that the former put forward a new proposal and the latter showed itself to be optimistic about it. What is most fundamental is that the Soviet Union and the United States will never allow the other side to gain military superiroity. Therefore, the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks will continue to be filled with hard bargaining, and it will be very difficult to have a turning point in the talks in the near future.

SHEVARDNADZE'S LONDON TRIP WARMS RELATIONS

OW130034 Beijing XINHUA in English 0003 GMT 13 Jul 86

["News Analysis: Shevardnadze's London Trip Marks Relaxation of Soviet-British Ties" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze's London visit tomorrow is the most important dialogue between the two countries since December 1984 when Mikhail Gorbachev visited Britain as head of a Soviet parliamentary delegation.

During his first official visit to a West European country since succeeding Andrey Gromyko as foreign minister a year ago, Shevardnadze is expected to discuss bilateral relations and the international situation, in particular the issue of disarmament.

Soviet-British relations have experienced a difficult period in the past year. Last November, the two countries made a round of tit-for-tat expulsions of 31 nationals from either capital. Three months later, Britain decided to join the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "star wars" program, and Moscow sharply criticized the British Government for making the decision. Last April, the Soviet Union accused Britain of "complicity" in the U.S. attack on Libya by allowing U.S. bombers to take off from British bases and delayed Shevardnadze's visit to London.

Bilateral relations began to relax only in last May when Gorbvachev met British Deputy Prime Minister William Whitelaw, who was heading a British parliamentary delegation on an official visit to the Soviet Union. Whitelaw handed to Gorbachev a letter from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who expressed in the letter her desire for warmer ties with the Soviet Union despite their differences.

The Kremlin has made a positive response to Thatcher's call. It hopes that Britain will play a more active role in improvng the strained international situation. "There exist great possibilities for the Soviet Union and Britain to conduct successful political dialogues," the Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA has said.

Foreign diplomats here estimate that next week Shevardnadze will ask Britain to put pressure on Washington regarding questions of arms control, seen as crucial to setting up a second summit meeting between Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

Shevardnadze's London trip, following French President Francois Mitterrand's four-day visit to Moscow, has also shown that the Kremlin is now taking Western Europe more seriously than before. It intends to strengthen its position in dealing with Washington by taking advantages of the differences between Western Europe and the United States.

However, the long-standing divergences between Moscow and London will not be ironed out during the 58-year-old Soviet foreign minister's two-day visit. Moscow has asked Britain and France to hold separate talks with the Soviet Union on the issue of nuclear missiles, but both countries have rejected the proposal. Margaret Thatcher has also defended her rejection of Soviet conditions for nuclear arms negotiations and reaffirmed a costly commitment to modernizing Britain's atomic arsenal. She has stated that Moscow's insistence on a freeze on British nuclear capability as a condition for the negotiations on removal of intermediate-range nuclear weapons from Europe is unacceptable. Shevardnadze will probably repeat the Soviet proposals in the talks with his British counterpart Geoffrey Howe and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, but no agreement is expected. The two sides will also discuss trade and economic cooperation. Britain has been one of the Soviet Union's smallest trading partners among developed capitalist countries and running a deficit in the trade since 1982. the two countries have recently expressed their desire to increase trade and cooperation in industry, agriculture and other fields.

MITTERRAND'S MOSCOW VISIT BENEFITS BOTH NATIONS

OW111140 Beijing XINHUA in English 0949 GMT 11 Jul 86

["News Analysis: Mitterrand Stresses France's Independence in Moscow by Shen Yiming" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, July 10 (XINHUA) -- It does not appear likely that a substantive agreement has been reached between France and the Soviet Union on the question of arms control during the 3-day visit of French President Francois Mitterrand to Moscow.

Mitterrand concluded his visit today after three rounds of talks with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on East-West relations, arms control and bilateral relations. Details of their talks have not been revealed.

It is known, however, that the two leaders placed special emphasis on arms reduction, especially nuclear arms control. The Soviet side had hoped that France would make a "parallel", if not "joint", effort with the Soviet Union on the issue of arms control. In his toast at a banquet in honor of the French President, Gorbachev made it clear that he hoped France would coordinate with the Soviet Union on the question of arms control and that France would agree to contribute to the success of the on-going Stockholm Conference on arms reduction in Europe.

The Soviet expectation was based on the fact that France maintains independence in relations with its allies. France has made clear its reluctance to take part in the American "star wars" program and its opposition to extending the arms race to outer space. The French want the SALT II treaty to be observed by the Soviet Union and the United States and advocate East-West arms reduction to the lowest possible level. However, as the Soviet news agency TASS has pointed out, the fact that both the French and the Soviets agree in principle in their approaches to this problem "does not preclude the existence of a number of concrete differences."

In the three statements he made during his visit, Mitterrand stressed the importancce France attaches to its independence and its commitments to its Western allies. He made it clear to the Soviet leader that France is striving to keep its armed forces at the level needed to check enemy aggression, that its nuclear deterrent is the mainstay of the country's independence and security and that only the French can determine the level of its armed forces. As to the nuclear arms reduction, Mitterrand said, the French will cut back their nuclear arms only after the Soviet Union and the United States have taken similar action.

Mitterrand's statements can be regarded as a negative response tc the recent Soviet proposal for a "freeze" of French and British nuclear forces and a halt to nuclear tests. France has also refused to respond positively to a subsequent Soviet proposal for the reduction of conventional weapons and armies in Europe.

The Soviets have described their exchange of views with the French on regional conflicts as "beneficial and open", while Mitterrand endorsed the United Nations' efforts in calling for a halt to military conflicts in Kampuchea and Afghanistan. France respects these people's rights to self-determination and non-interference in their internal affairs, the French president said.

The two leaders expressed their wishes to increase cooperaton in the economic, scientific and technological, and cultural fields and in finding new forms of cooperation in trade, including joint efforts to reduce the large trade deficit France has with the Soviet Union.

Yet the meeting itself may have greater significance than any agreement they may have reached, observers here suggest. Regular contact with the Soviet Union is not only a reflection of France's independent foreign policy, but is beneficial to the Soviet Union, which has always tried to make use of the differences between the United States and its Western allies. In this sense, it can be said the leaders of the two countries in their meeting in Moscow have attained their respective objectives.

PRC MAKES FORMAL APPLICATION TO REJOIN CATT

OW120559 Beijing XINHUA in English 0531 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Geneva, July 11 (XINHUA) -- China today applied to resume its contracting party status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), saying its participation will further the objectives of the body.

Qian Jiadong, representative of the Permanent Mission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations office at Geneva, delivered an official application to GATT Director-General Arthur Dunkel. The document said, "The government of The People's Republic of China, recalling the fact that China was one of the original contracting parties to the GATT, has decided to seek the resumption of its status as a contracting party to the organization."

The government said China is prepared to enter into negotiations on its participation in GATT, an international organization on multilateral trade policy aimed at substantially reducing tariffs and other trade barriers through negotiations.

According to the procedures of the general agreement, all the members will be soon informed about the application and the organization will set up a working group to review it after China reports its economic and trade system.

China's participation will further the objectives of the organization, the application said, adding that China's ongoing economic reform will contribute to the expansion of economic and trade relations with the contracting parties. The application said, "China is a developing country, the Chinese Government expects to receive treatment equivalent to that accorded to other developing contracting parties."

More than 90 countries and regions are members of GATT, which was established in 1948.

RENMIN RIBAO ANSWERS READER'S QUERY ON GATT

HK141013 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jul 86 p 7

["Answers to Readers" column: "The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade"]

[Excerpts] Question: It was reported that China will soon apply to resume its contracting party status in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT]. What is all this about, and what is GATT?

Answer: The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is an international organization on multilateral trade and tariffs policies. Its basic purpose is to reduce tariffs and other trade barriers and to promote free trade through unconditional and multilateral most-favored-nation treatment, so as to make full use of world resources and expand commodity production and exchange. The GATT, the IMF, and the World Bank have been the three pillars of the capitalist economic system since the war. [passage omitted]

China is a founding member of the GATT. On 21 April 1948, the Chinese Government at that time signed a "Temporarily Applicable Protocol." On 21 May the same year, China became a contracting party to the GATT. Since the founding of new China, due to certain historical reasons, China's activity in this organization has been suspended for more than 30 years.

Since the mid-1970's, China has gradually established contacts with the GATT. In 1981, it sent observers for the first time to the international conference for negotiations over the textile trade agreement, which was held by the GATT. In January 1984, it signed the international agreement on textile trade. Since 1982, it has sent observers to several GATT contracting parties' meetings and the meetings of the GATT Council. At present, the volume of trade between China and other contracting parties to the GATT accounts for more than 85 percent of the total volume of import and export trade of our country. Over the past few years, we have been making preparations in various respects for resuming our contracting party status in the GATT. Now the preparatory work has been basically completed. The resumption of China's contracting party status in the GATT will not only be conducive to the further development of economic and trade relations between China and other contracting parties, but will also promote the expansion of the international multilateral trade system.

PRC RECEIVES 13 MORE SHIPBUILDING ORDERS

OW121116 Beijing XINHUA in English 0627 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- Dalian shipyard will build an 118,000 dwt oil tanker, the largest yet undertaken by China, for a Norwegian shipping company, the China State Shipping Corporation announced here today.

This is one of the 13 foreign ships ordered in the first half of this year. The rest include four 18,000-dwt multi-purpose vessels for the China-Poland Shipping Company, three 12,000-dwt container ships for Cuba and five 2,700-dwt freighters for Denmark.

These ships are valued at about 130 million U.S. dollars. The number of tonnage of the ships and the amount of money involved are equivalent to the whole of 1985.

The main engines for the ships will be manufactured by China with imported technology. The biggest is 8,895 horsepower.

Since 1978, the corporation has received orders to build 157 foreign vessels, totalling 1.59 million dwt. Nearly 900,000 dwt have already been delivered. China is now able to build ships up to any international standard and suitable for any navigation conditions, the corporation spokesman said.

U.S. BANKER SAYS PRC BECOMING ECONOMIC POWER

OW111954 Beijing XINHUA in English 1456 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Guangzhou, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Samuel H. Armacost, president of the Bank of America, said here today that he was deeply impressed with China's economic development, adding that China is becoming an economic power. Speaking at a press conference here this afternoon, Armacost said that China's foreign trade has been growing constantly, with the volume of the U.S. -China trade reaching 8.8 billion U.S. dollars last year, a big increase over that of the previous year.

He predicted good prospects for trade between U.S. and China in the coming years. He said that his bank sets great store by its cooperation with China. He expressed willingness to promote economic and technical cooperation between the two countries and provide China with loans for its economic development.

Armacost described the recent adjustment of the exchange rate of the Chinese currency renminbi against foreign currencies as normal, because the increase or decrease in the value of a currency reflects the relationship between the said currency and trade.

The Bank of America has provided loans totaling 13 million U.S. dollars to enterprises in Guangdong Province since it opened an office in the provincial capital of Guangzhou in May of last year. It is planning to provide a 20-million-dollar loan to Chinese brewery in Zhaoqing.

HU YAOBANG, BRZEZINSKI DISCUSS TIES, ISSUES

OW140824 Beijing XINHUA in English 0813 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- General Secretary Hu Yaobang of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met Z. Brzezinski, former assistant to the U.S. President for national security affairs. They exchanged views on issues of Sino-U.S. relations and international issues of common concern. Brzezinski arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs.

NPC VICE CHAIRMAN BRIEFS U.S. VISITORS ON XIZANG

OW030741 Beijing XINHUA in English 0652 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing July 3 (XINHUA) -- Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met here today a U.S. congressional aides delegation headed by Gerald E Connolly.

The vice-chairman welcomed the delegation to visit China, Tibet in particular. He briefed the U.S. visitors on the history of Tibet and its progress over the past three decades and answered their questions.

The delegation, which arrived here June 30 for a two-week visit at the invitation of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, will visit Lhasa, capital of Tibet Autonomous Region, Chengdu, Guangzhou and Shenzhen.

REAGAN REITERATES SDI NOT BARGAINING CHIP

OW130022 Beijing XINHUA in English 2352 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 12 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan today reiterated his long-held stand that the Strategic Defense Initiative Program is "not a bargaining chip" in the arms control talks with the Soviet Union.

In a weekly radio speech, Reagan said that "when we talk about negotiations, let's be clear: our SDI research is not a bargaining chip. It is the number of offensive missiles that need to be reduced, not the effort to find a way to defend mankind against the threat of deadly missiles.

The President's reiteration came at a time when his administration is considering a reply to Moscow's latest arms control proposals put forward by Soviet negotiators at the last round of Geneva talks. The Soviet proposals called for substantial cuts in offensive nuclear weapons in exchange for a U.S. agreement not to withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty which prohibits development, testing and deployment of space-based defense systems. The proposals were hailed by Reagan and other U.S. officials as a "serious effort" on the party of the Soviet Union, which could lead to "a turning point" in the arms control negotiations between the two superpowers.

It was reported earlier that the Reagan administration was considering an idea of a "grand compromise" in which deep cuts in offensive nuclear arsenals would be traded for a U.S. delay in the deployment of a "star wars" missile defense system. But the President's statement today indicated that he has not changed his mind on SDI.

Moscow has repeatedly stated that SDI is the main obstacle to both sides reaching an agreement of reducing offensive nuclear forces. It also said that a positive U.S. response to the latest Soviet arms control proposals is the key to setting a date for a second Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting and a preparatory meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze.

Reagan said that a defense system like SDI "can protect us and our allies against incoming missiles." The program has accomplished much in three years since early 1983 when it was first announced, he added.

He appealed to the Congress not to cut funds for his cherished program. "It would be a tragedy to permit the budget pressures of today to destroy this vital research program and undercut our chances for a safer and more secure tomorrow," he argued. In late June, the House Armed Services Committee approved 3.4 billion U.S. dollars, instead of 5.4 billion as requested by the Reagan administration for the "stars wars" program in the fiscal year starting on October 1.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PRC-DPRK AMITY CELEBRATION

Deng Speaks on Modernization

OW141214 Tokyo KYODO in English 1202 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 KYODO - China's senior leader Deng Xiaoping Monday disclosed that China would delay the schedule for achieving the goals for current modernization from the original target of the end of this century to 2030-2050. Under the two-stage modified modernization program, China plans to boost the national gross income to 1 trillion dollars and per-capita annual income to 800-1,000 dollars in the first stage by the end of this century, Deng said.

China will achieve the goals for the four-point modernization policy and catch up with the advanced nations' level between 2030-2050 in the second stage of the program, he said. China had originally set the target for the achievements at the end of this century.

Deng, chairman of the party Central Advosory Commission, made the disclosure when he met a North Korean delegation led by Yi Chong-ok, vice president and a Politburo member of the Korea Workers (communist) Party. Deng told the North Korean guests that China's economic reforms would be accompanied by reforms in the political structure as well. Whether the current seventh economic program for 1986-90 will succeed will give a vital effect on the future economic construction, Deng was quoted as telling them.

Yi told Deng what impressed him the most strongly during his current China visit is that many young people are playing their leading roles very well in many enterprises. Deng said both China and North Korea are paying much attention to recruite more young leaders.

In addition to Beijing, Yi and his group visited only Shanghai. This contrasted with North Korean leaders' visits to the Shenzhen special economic zone in southern China during their Beijing tours in recent years.

They included party secretary Kim Chong-il, President Kim Il-song's son believed to be his future succesor, who visited here in 1983, Foreign Minister Kim Yong-nam in February 1984 and Prime Minister Kang Song-san in August 1984.

Wan Li Attends DPRK Banquet

OW141358 Beijing XINHUA in English 1341 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Yi Chong-ok, vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), said here today that the celebrations held by China for the 25th anniversary of the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance gave active support to the Korean revolutionary cause. "This is also another powerful demonstration of the unbreakable friendship and solidarity between the two parties and two peoples of Korea and China," he said.

Speaking at a return banquet he hosted here this evening, Yi said he had had a pleasant stay in China and was deeply impressed by the achievements made by the Chinese people in their socialist revolution and construction.

The vice-president paid tribute to the Chinese people for their support for the Korean people in their socialist construction and their just struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland. "Such support is very valuable and is a great encouragement to our people," he added.

Yi, who is also a member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea, said the Korean people will, as always, do their utmost to observe their commitment laid down in the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

Wan Li, Chinese acting premer, said that in the previous few days Yi Chong-ok and Chinese leaders had reviewed satisfactorily the development of friendly cooperation in all fields between the two countries since the signing of the China-Korea treaty 25 years ago. They were looking forward with full confidence, he added, to expanding the cooperation between the two countries in the future. "Practice has proved, and will continue to prove, that the Sino-Korean friendly relations and cooperation, which have a solid foundation, will develop further and produce more fruitful results despite any changes in the international situation," Wan said.

Wan, also a member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, said the Chinese party, government and people will, under new historical conditions, continue to follow the basic spirit of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance, and try their best to consolidate and develop the fraternal and friendly relations, and cooperation between the two countries.

"The Chinese people will forever be trustworthy comrades-in-arms to the Korean people in their socialist construction and in their struggle for the independent and peaceful reunification of their fatherland," the Chinese acting premier pledged. Wan said that though the delegation's visit was a short one, it had made active contributions to the growth of Sino-Korean friendship.

Also present at the banquet were Chinese party and government leaders Xi Zhongxun, Qiao Shi, Wu Xueqian and Chen Pixian. The Korean delegation is scheduled to leave here for home tomorrow.

Tian Jiyun Addresses Banquet

OW141850 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1445 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Pyongyang, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to Korea Zong Kewen gave a banquet at the embassy this evening to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the signing of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance, and to thank the warm hospitality accorded by the Workers Party of Korea [WPK] and the government to the Chinese party and the government delegation. Korean party and government leaders Yon Hyong-muk, Kye Ung-tae, Chon Chun-ki, and Kang Hui-won attended the banquet.

Chinese Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, leader of the Chinese party and government delegation, was the first to speak at the banquet. He described the current visit by the Chinese party and government delegation as very successful. The friendly feelings towards the Chinese people, expressed by the Korean people in various ways, have further convinced comrades of the Chinese delegation that the great friendship cemented with blood between the Chinese and the Korean people is rooted deeply in their hearts and is invincible.

Then Kye Ung-tae, candidate member of the Political Baureau and secretary of the Secretariat of the WPK Central Committee, spoke. He said: With the joy of receiving their own kinsmen, the Korean people warmly welcome the goodwill messengers from the fraternal Chinese people, who have come to deepen the friendship between the Korean and the Chinese people.

He asked the Chinese party and government delegation to convey to the Chinese people the Korean people's intention to continue to consolidate and develop relations between the two countries and to struggle together with the Chinese people in accordance with the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance.

A 50,000-strong mass rally was held in Korea's Nampo City this morning to welcome the Chinese party and government delegation and celebrate the 25th treaty anniversary. [passage omitted]

Tian Delegation Concludes Visit

OW141128 Beijing XINHUA in English 1110 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 14 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese party and state delegation left for home today after a five-day visit to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

The delegation, led by Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and vice premier of the State Council, arrived in Pyongyang July 10 to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance between China and Korea.

In a letter of thanks to Korean President Kim Il-song, Tian said the visit and the celebration will further enhance friendship and cooperation between the countries.

Sino-Korean Friendship Lauded

HK140229 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 7

[Commentary by correspondent Xu Baokang: "Well-Established and Vigorously Developing Friendly Cooperation"]

[Text] The peoples of China and Korea will never forget that China and Korea in the political, economic, cultural, scientific, and technological fields have continuously developed and borne fruitful results. Leaders of the two countries have contacted each other frequently like calling on relatives. The frequent meetings and exchange of visits between the leaders of the two countries in recent years have particularly promoted their relations to a new stage. The profound friendship between the Chinese and Korean parties and leaders of the two countries, fully manifesting the common aspirations of the peoples of the two countries, are the best guarantee for handing down Sino-Korean friendship from generation to generation.

Over the past 25 years or so, economic cooperation between the two countries has developed steadily and the volume of trade has doubled and redoubled. The rapid development of border trade between the two countries in recent years has represented a scene of prosperity. [paragraph continues]

The Shuifeng and Yunfeng power stations, known as "pearls of the Yalu Jiang," are miniatures of Sino-Korean friendly cooperation. The two power stations generated more than 120 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity by the end of 1984. Powerful current has been transmitted in a steady flow to the cities and countryside of the two countries, which has vigorously promoted construction on both sides. Now, the construction of the Weiyuan and Taipingwan power stations is under way. These two stations will be put into operation very soon.

In order to support Korea's construction, China's experts and technical personnel have rushed to various construction sites in turn. The Korean party and government have highly praised them for their hard work in Korea and have commended them on several occasions. Scientific and technological cooperation and exchanges have accelerated the development of economic construction in the two countries.

Pyongyang is a beautiful city. The clusters of buildings, which harmonize national features with modern buildings, present a magnificent sight. China's architecture and design delegation visited Korea and gained a lot of valuable experience for reference.

Cooperation and exchanges between the two countries in cultural and educational fields have also developed rapidly. Beijing University, Qinghua University, and other well-known Chinese institutions of higher learning have established friendly relations in cooperation and exchanges with Kim Il Song University, Kim Chaek Engineering University, and other Korean universities. So far, China has around 200 students studying in Korea. In 1985, the number of exchange visits between the cultural, educational, and sports delegations of the two countries totaled over 80.

With the development of friendly cooperation between the two countries, Shanghai and Hamheung, Korea's "industrial metropolis," became friendly cities. China's Jiangsu, Shandong, and Sichuan also established relations of friendly cooperation with Korea's Kangwon, South Hwanghae, and South Pyongan.

Although time passes by, the fraternal friendship between the peoples of the two countries will remain forever. The fruitful results of Sino-Korean friendship today indicate that there are bright prospect for the future.

DPRK RENEWS CALL FOR TRIPARTITE MILITARY TALKS

OW120650 Beijing XINHUA in English 0621 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 11 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today renewed its call for military talks between the U.N. forces and the two parts of Korea, the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported today. The DPRK today broadcast two letters by O Chin-u, minister of People's Armed Forces, sent on June 9 to William J. Livesey, Commander of the U.N. Forces and Yi Ki-paek, South Korean defense minister, which proposed talks between the military authorities. The proposal was refused. The refusal to the call showed that the U.N. forces and South Korean military authorities do not want detente and peace on the Korean peninsula, the report said.

The agency quoted O Chin-u as saying that the danger of war on the peninsula is due to the presence of U.S. forces, so the United States is one of the parties responsible for easing tension in Korea. O Chin-u said tripartite military talks are "the best way" to relax tension on the peninsula and expressed his hope for a positive answer to the call.

JAPAN MAY BUY U.S. NUCLEAR SUBS IN 5 YEARS

OW141006 Beijing XINHUA in English 0943 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 14 (XINHUA) -- In five years time Japan may purchase nuclear-powered submarines from the United States in a bid to adapt itself to modern sea warfare, the MAINICHI SHIMBUN newspaper reported today. The Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force (MDF), which is studying a newly-designed defense program to be implemented in 1991, has held unofficial exploratory talks with the U.S. Navy on the issue.

Japan, which now has 14 diesel-powered submarines, also plans to build an additional two diesel-powered subs during the 5-year defense program. However, in view of the fact that most subs now operating around Japan are nuclear-powered, and the United States and the Soviet Union regard the Sea of Japan as the "corridor of nuclear submarines", the MDF believes that ordinary submarines, with their low speed and small operating radius, will not enable Japan to adapt itself to future modern wars.

Neverthless, disagreements exist within the Japanese Defense Agency and the MDF, with critics saying that it is "still too early" to import U.S. nuclear-powered submarines. The newspaper suggested that the MDF plan will also evoke anger and opposition from the Japanese people who have refused to allow U.S. nuclear submarines to enter Japanese ports.

BANK OF CHINA TO OPEN OVERSEAS BRANCH IN TOKYO

OW141306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1226 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The Tokyo branch of the Bank of China will open for business with the approval of the Japanese Government July 18, bringing the number of overseas branches of the bank to eight. The State Foreign Exchange Bank used to have a representative office in Tokyo.

The new branch is entitled to handle all business operations available to the Japanese foreign exchange banks, including settlement of imports and exports, negotiation of shipping documents, receiving deposits and issuing loans, discount of bills, international remittance, encashment of foreign currency and bills in foreign currency, bill collection, external guarantee, interbank deposits, and buying and selling of foreign exchange.

The bank also has branches in New York, London, Paris, Luxembourg, Singapore, Sydney, and Hong Kong.

BALLET DANCER RECEIVES SPECIAL PRIZE IN JAPAN

OW141308 Beijing XINHUA in English 1228 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese ballet dancer Yiu Qingguo received a special prize for his performance Sunday in a ballet show of traditional and new dances. The concert was sponsored by the Japan Ballet Association.

Yiu, 26, was the first Chinese invited to take part in the 18th national ballet show, in which more than 200 Japanese ballet performers attended. After watching Yiu's performance, the association decided to honor him with the award. Yiu also visited Japan in June and November at the invitation of two Japanese ballet troupes.

PRC OFFERS CONDOLENCES TO SRV ON LE DUAN'S DEATH

HK120852 Hong Kong AFP in English 0821 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (AFP) -- China said Saturday it would extend "condolences" to Vietnam on the death of Communist Party chief Le Duan in a cool announcement that analysts said highlighted Beijing's estrangement from Hanoi.

"China has diplomatic relations with Vietnam. According to international practice, we express our condolences on the passing away of the Vietnamese leader," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said in a prepared statement released to reporters.

"The Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of China has sent a message of condolences of the State Council of Vietnam," the spokesman said.

Analysts said the statement's phrasing implicitly stressed the absence of party-to-party ties between Beijing and Hanoi and thus highlighted the continued hostility between the two former allies.

China and Vietnam have engaged in regular artillery exchanges along their common border since 1979, when China attacked Vietnam to "teach it a lesson" after Vietnamese troops rolled into Cambodia, ousting the pro-Beijing Khmer Rouge.

China is the main backer of a Cambodian resistance coalition fighting Vietnamese troops in Cambodia and the Hanoi-backed Phnom Penh government of Heng Samrin.

Yan Jici Expresses Condolences

OW140956 Beijing XINHUA in English 0941 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Yan Jici, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress, and leading officials of the departments concerned went to the Vietnamese Embassy here this afternoon to express condolences on the death of Le Duan, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Vietnam.

Le died at the age of 79 on July 10. Wreaths were presented by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

TRUONG CHINH ELECTED CPV GENERAL SECRETARY

OW141220 Beijing XINHUA in English 1216 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Hanoi, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Truong Chinh, chairman of Vietnam's State Council, was elected General Secretary of the Vietnamese Communist Party at an extraordinary meeting of the Central Committee today, Radio Hanoi reported.

Truong, 79, joined the party in 1930.

He assumed the post of Secretary-General of the party from 1941 to 1956. He was Vice Premier between 1958 and 1960. From 1960 to July 1981 he was chairman of the Standing Committee of the National Assembly. Since July, 1981, he has been chairman of the State Council.

He was in charge of the funeral committee for General Secretary Le Duan who died July 10.

HONG KONG MAGAZINE REVIEWS CAMBODIAN RESISTANCE

OW131434 Beijing XINHUA in English 1334 GMT 13 Jul 86

["Kampuchean Resistance Forces Defy Vietnamese Attempts To Close Border, Magazine Says" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, July 13 (XINHUA) -- A small patrol of Kampuchean resistance forces can move relatively freely through large swaths of the Kampuchean heartland, defying Vietnamese attempts to close the Kampuchean-Thai border.

This is the conclusion of Ken Guest, a London-based feeelance photographer and veteran of several Asian wars, who accompanied a guerrilla group of the Sihanouk Nationalist Army as it penetrated the Tonle Sap Lake area, deep in Kampuchea, from the northwest. Guest's report "Mission Into Kampuchea" was published today by the Hong Kong-based "ASIA WEEK" magazine.

The magazine said the seizure of major resistance bases near the Kampuchean-Thai border by Vietnam in 1984-1985 ushered in "a new era of Cambodian guerrilla warfare," forcing the three factions of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Government to take the war into the country's interior.

Guest said the month-long mission of the Sihanouk patrol "to drum up support for the resistance among the rural population and to seek targets of opportunity" discovered that "in more and more instances the local population was the resistance." "The resistance groups also seem to be cooperating more than in the past. Sihanoukists are met by local Khmer Rouge (one of the three resistance movements in Kampuchea) commanders who advise about planned actions," the report said. It said the Sihanouk patrol often adjusted its routes to avoid the selected-area shelling, which is a common Vietnamese response to attack.

It also confirmed close coordination between the National Army of Democratic Kampuchea and the Khmer People's National Liberation Armed Forces units in confronting an 8,000-strong Vietnamese force attempting to pincer the resistance concentration in the Tonle Sap zone, part of Kampuchea's most militarized region.

"Hen Samrin troops (of the Vietnamese-installed Phnom Penh regime) do not relish fighting, and some are actively aiding the resistance. The Heng Samrin side is also suffering from desertions," Guest's report in "ASIA WEEK" quoted sources of the Sihanouk patrol as saying.

Guest has covered wars in Lebanon, Afghanistan and the Iran-Iraq war. He has also reported from Kampuchean battlefields. "ASIA WEEK" published several photographs of the patrol's infiltration, providing a rare glimpse of life and operations of the Kampuchean resistance forces behind enemy lines.

BURMESE GOVERNMENT DELEGATION VISITS BEIJING

Chen Muhua Hosts Luncheon

OW110934 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank of China, met and gave a luncheon for a Burmese Government delegation headed by U Tint Swe, minister of the first industry, at the Beijing Hotel here today.

This is the second meeting between Chen and U Tint Swe. When Presidet Li Xiannian, accompanied by Chen Muhua, visited Burma in March last year, Minister U Tint Swe served as chairman of the Burmese Government reception committee.

Extending her warm welcome to U Tint Swe who is on his third visit to China, Chen said she hoped to see a constant growth of cooperation between the two countries in industrial and financial fields. Present on the occasion were Minister of Textile Industry Wu Wenying and Burmese Ambassador to China U Tin Maung Myint.

Meets With Wan Li

OW121022 Beijing XINHUA in English 1005 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Acting Premier Wan Li met a Burmese Government delegation headed by minister of no. 1 industry U Tint Swe here this afternoon. Wan extended his warm welcome to the delegation on behalf of the Chinese Government. He said that China and Burma are good neighbouring countries and the exchange of visits by their government leaders has enhanced their friendship.

Noting that China and Burma, both developing countries, are seeking ways of developing their countries at faster speed, he said that this requires them to further strengthen their economic and technological cooperation and exchanges in other fields on the basis of mutual benefit.

U Ting Swe said the frequent exchange of visits by leaders of the two countries indicated the very good bilateral relations and cooperation. He told Wan Li that before he came to China he was received by President U San Yu and asked to convey the Burmese leader's greetings to President Li Xiannian and other Chinese leaders and thanks to China for its economic aid to Burma.

Wan Li also asked U Tint Swe to convey the best regards to President U San Yu from President Li Xiannian and Chairman Deng Yingchao of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, who had visited Burma.

Earlier today Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met U Tint Swe and his party in the Great Hall of the People. During the meeting, they briefed each other on the economic development of their respective countries. They also hoped that bilateral cooperation in textile industry would increase further.

Hosts Return Banquet

OW121728 Beijing XINHUA in English 1432 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- U Tint Swe, visiting Burmese minister of no. 1 industry and head of a Burmese Government delegation, gave a return banquet here this evening.

Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and Wu Wenying, Chinese minister of textile industry, attended the banquet.

Speaking at the banquet, U Ting Swe and Wu Wenying agreed that the talks between the Burmese delegation and Chinese departments were fruitful. They also expressed the wish for further growth of the Sino-Burmese friendship and cooperation. The Burmese delegation will leave here tomorrow to tour Changzhou, Shanghai, Guangzhou and Shenzhen in southern China.

CHINA BECOMES BIGGEST BUYER OF THAI RICE

OW141944 Beijing XINHUA in English 1553 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Bangkok, July 14 (XINHUA) -- In the first six months of this year, China became the largest buyer of Thai rice, according to local press reports. China bought 232,683 tons of Thai rice: 200,058 tons from the government and 32,625 tons from private exporters.

Brazil bought 204,750 tons of Thai rice in the first five months of this year. But having made no purchases in June, Brazil fell to the second largest buyer in the first half of 1986.

The Soviet Union retains third place, buying 154,438 tons of Thai rice in the period, with Saudi Arabia in fourth with 126,081 tons, and Singapore in the fifth spot with 125,810 tons.

ULANHU, SIHANOUK WATCH DK DANCERS IN BEIJING

OW141557 Beijing XINHUA in English 1539 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- A troupe of performing artists from Democratic Kampuchea, led by Prince Sihamoni, son of Democratic Kampuchean President Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, entertained a Beijing audience here this evening with colorful Kampuchean dances. Sihamoni, a teacher at a dance school in Paris, created or revised most of the items staged this evening at the Nationalities' Cultural Palace. He combined ancient Cambodian dances with Western dance techniques to produce elegant effects.

The dance, "My Beloved Second Motherland", choreographed and performed by Sihamoni and with music composed by his father, won warm applause from the audience which included Chinese Vice-President Ulanhu, Vice-Chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee Chu Tunan, and Norodom Sihanouk and his wife. Chinese artists also took part in the performance.

The art troupe is mainly composed of exiled Kampuchean youth in France. The troupe came here at the invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Culture and will also give performances in the Chinese cities of Xian and Kunming.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES VISIT TO EUROPE, AFRICA

Begins 4-Day Spain Visit

OW141024 Beijing XINHUA in English 1003 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here at 11:30 a.m. today on a four-day official goodwill visit to Spain. The premier's first visit ever to Spain adds to a series of top-level visits exchanged between leaders of the two countries since 1973 when China and Spain normalized their relation.

King Juan Carlos I visited China in 1978 and Chinese President Li Xiannian paid a return visit to Spain in 1984. Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez visited China last September.

Premier Zhao is now on a six-nation tour, which has already taken him to Romania, Yugoslavia and Greece. He will also visit Turkey and Tunisia.

Issues Arrival Statement

OW141116 Beijing XINHUA in English 1104 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The concern for world peace and common aspirations for developing economic relations link China and Spain together, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today in a statement released at the airport.

The Chinese premier arrived here at 11:30 this morning from the island of Crete, Greece, for a four-day official goodwill visit to Spain at the invitation of Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez.

Premier Zhao said in the statement that he had come with the purpose of deepening friendship and understanding and promoting mutually beneficial cooperation and maintaining world peace. "I hope I shall have an opportunity to see for myself something of your ancient civilization and new achievements in your modernization drive, to get to know the life of the Spanish people and to meet personages from all walks of life," Zhao said.

Spanish Chief of Protocol of State Martinez Correcher met the Chinese premier at the airport. Present at the airport were also Chinese Ambassador to Spain Cao Yuanxin, other diplomats and staff members of the Chinese embassy, as well as Chinese residents here.

Premier Zhao is expected to be given a welcome ceremony at the Moncloa Palace by Prime Minister Gonzalez and to have a meeting and talks with his Spanish counterpart this evening before attending a banquet in his honour.

Premier Zhao is now on a six-nation tour, which has already taken him to Romania, Yugoslavia and Greece. He will also visit Turkey and Tunisia.

Welcomed by Spanish Premier

OW142346 Beijing XINHUA in English 2334 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang was given a grand welcome by Prime Minister of Spain Felipe Gonzalez at Moncloa Palace here this evening.

Premier Zhao arrived here by special plane at noontime for a four-day official visit to Spain, the first ever to be paid by a Chinese Premier to this south European country.

Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez gave Zhao a warm handshake. After the playing of the national anthems of both countries. Premier Zhao reviewed a guard of honour accompanied by his Spanish counterpart. After the ceremony, which took about ten minutes, the two leaders had a private meeting before they proceed to the first round of official talks. Prime Minister Gonzalez is expected to host a dinner in honour of Zhao right after the talks.

The Chinese Premier is paying a return visit to Sapin at the invitation of Felipe Gonzalez, who visited China last September. In 1984, President of the People's Republic of China Li Xiannian paid a state visit to Spain in return for the China visit by Spanish King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia in 1978.

China and Spain established diplomatic relations in 1973.

Holds Talks With Counterpart

OW140013 Beijing XINHUA in English 2354 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang assured his Spanish counter-part this evening that to develop economic and technological cooperation and trade relations with Spain is the unshakable policy of the Chinese Government.

Zhao, who arrived here at noontime today, had a restricted session of talks with Prime Minister Felip Gonzalez this evening, which lasted about two hours, before he attended a banquet hosted by the latter.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official told the press that during their talks Zhao and Gonzalez briefed each other on the political and economic progress each country has made since the Spanish prime minister visited China last September. They also exchanged views on the new developments of the international situation and reached a broad identity of similarity of views on the issues they discussed, the official said.

Gonzalez was quoted as saying that he was fully confident of the prospect of increasingly closer Spanish-Chinese friendly cooperation in future.

The Chinese premier is in Spain on the fourth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour, paying a return visit to the China tour by the Spanish prime minister.

Zhao in the talks this evening described the China visit by Gonzalez as "having given a vigorous impetus to the growth of links between the two countries in various fields." He said he appreciated Gonzalez's personal enthusiastic efforts in reinforcing these links.

Premier Zhao also thanked the Spanish Government for extending loans to China on favorable terms.

The talks were attended on the Chinese side by Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen and Ambassador Cao Yuanzxin and on the Spanish side by Foreign Minister Francisco Fernandez-Ordonez and Ambassador to China Mariano Ucelay de Montero.

Meanwhile, Chinese Minister in charge of the State Economic Commission Lu Dong met Spanish economy, finance and trade minister Carlos Solchaga when they discuss economic and trade issues between the two countries.

Spanish Premier Hosts Banquet

OW150030 Beijing XINHUA in English 0013 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today committed himself to bringing Sino-Spanish relations of friendship and cooperation a big step forward and making them more fruitful. He made the statement at a banquet given in his honor here this evening by Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez Marquez.

Premier Zhao flew in here this morning after a tour of the Greek island of Crete on an official visit to Spain at the invitation of the Spanish Prime Minister. This is the fourth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

Premier Zhao reassured the Spanish prime minister of China's commitment to developing a long-term, stable relationship of friendship and cooperation, which he described as "having developed smoothly and steadily" since the two countries established diplomatic relations in 1973.

In 1984, Chinese President Li Xiannian visited Spain and the following year, Spanish Prime Minister Gonzalez paid a successful visit to China. This has given a great impetus to the development of Sino-Spanish relations, the Chinese premier said.

Two-way trade between the two countries last year doubled from 1984 and progress was also made in economic and technical cooperation between the two countries, he noted. Premier Zhao predicted that bilateral economic cooperation would be further expanded in both scope and scale as the economies of the two countries grew. "It is inevitable for the two countries to meet temporary difficulties of one kind or another in the course of their cooperation," he stressed. "But so long as we approach and handle problems from a long-term point of view and constantly open up new avenues, the areas for cooperation are sure to be increased continuously,"

He expressed his appreciation of the Spanish prime minister's foresight and the sagacity he displayed in personally promoting the development of the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries. He said it was his hope that the existing good relations between the two countries would make a big stride forward and become more fruitful.

Prior to the banquet, the Chinese premier was warmly welcomed at a grand ceremony at the Moncloa Palace, the Spanish prime minister's official residence, which was followed by official talks between the two prime ministers.

Gonzalez Speaks at Banquet

OW150058 Beijing XINHUA in English 0036 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez Marquez reaffirmed his confidence today in the future of bilateral cooperation between Spain and China. Speaking at a banquet he gave in honor of visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here this evening, he said he would work determinedly and pragmatically together with his Chinese counterpart to promote the bilateral cooperation in the interests of the Spanish and Chinese people.

Premier Zhao arrived here this morning on an official visit to Spain at the invitation of Prime Minister Gonzalez. This is the fourth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

Prior to the banquet, the Spanish prime minister gave an official welcoming ceremony at the Moncloa Palace, the prime minister's official residence, and held talks with the Chinese premier.

In his toast, the Spanish prime minister described the relations of friendship and cooperation between China and Spain as "growing and maturing." "We should explore ambitiously and pragmatically into the potential of such relations to see what we can do and what we should expect of them so that neither side would be disappointed," Gonzalez said.

Since the normalization of relations between the two countries in 1973, the relations between Spain and China have grown harmoniously with major progress made in all fields of endeavour although unevenly, he noted. The two countries have had no frictions or political disputes, he continued. They have identical or similar views on many international issues and exchange of visits and materials have made it possible to realize a qualitative leap in the bilateral relations.

He said that Spain, with a wide range of technology of advanced or intermediate level, is willing and in a position to contribute to China's modernization efforts, which, he said, the whole world is closely watching with interest and respect. He expressed the hope that the Chinese people's just aspirations would be materialized under the conditions of peace, harmony and respect for human dignity and freedom.

Premiers Pledge Cooperation

OW150104 Beijing XINHUA in English 0050 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and his Spanish counterpart Fellipe Gonzalez Marquez tonight pledged to better relations between the two countries and work together for a lasting world peace.

Speaking at a banquet in honor of Zhao, who arrived here this morning from Greece for a four-day official visit, the Spanish prime minister expressed satisfaction with China's efforts to strengthen its ties with Western Europe and Latin America.

Gonzalez said that he is very glad to see that the two countries have identical views on many international issues such as detente, arms race, the situation in southern Africa, Afghanistan and Kampuchea.

As a full member of the European Economic Community, he noted, Spain will help solve the problems in developing countries. Spain is willing to conduct a dialogue with East European countries, he added.

In reply, Premier Zhao paid high tribute to the Spanish people, who have contributed greatly to human progress. He pointed out that world stability is threatened by arms race, South-North imbalance and the spread of regional conflicts. But, China is not pessimistic about the future of the world and the destiny of mankind, he said.

"Factors to safeguard world peace and prevent the outbreak of a war are increasing," Zhao said, adding, "more and more countries and people are determined to hold their destinies in their own hands and are waging resolute struggles to stop arms race and prevent a nuclear war".

He said that China will not form allies with any superpower or participating in arms race. "Though China's military expenditure and armament remain at a far lower level than those in other big countries," he said, "it has resolutely cut its military expenditure and the number of military personnel."

Reiterating that China is for a total ban on the use of nuclear weapons and their thorough destruction, Zhao expressed appreciation of the efforts by Spain and other West European countries to promote disarmament between the Soviet Union and the United States. Zhao said, "All countries, big or small, strong or weak, rich or poor, have a say and all have a useful role to play in safeguarding peace".

XINHUA INTERVIEWS TURKISH PRIME MINISTER

OW142352 Beijing XINHUA in English 2337 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said today that the relations between Turkey and China are growing fast and the two countries share common views over many international issues. In an exclusive interview with XINHUA on the eve of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Turkey scheduled for July 17, Ozal said he attached great impotance to Zhao's visit, the first by a Chinese premier since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1971 between the two countries.

It will provide an opportunity for Chinese and Turkish leaders to learn from each other the experiences achieved especially in the economic development of both countries, he added. He expressed his hope that Turkey's trade with China would increase to 500 million U.S. dollars this year from 100 million dollars in 1985.

He said he would discuss with the Chinese premier on ways of increasing trade and promoting cooperation in bidding building contracts in other countries.

On Turkey's foreign policy, Ozal said Turkey pursues actively a peaceful foreign policy and sincerely hoes to have friendly relations with all neighbouring countries and to settle disputes with neighbours through dialogues.

OFFICIAL SAYS TYPHOON KILLED 'AT LEAST 57'

HK141016 Hong Kong AFP in English 1009 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (AFP) -- Typhoon Peggy was responsible for at least 57 deaths in China and over 800 injuries, Chinese officials said.

A Civil Affairs Ministry official told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE Monday that "Typhoon Number Seven" as Peggy was known here killed 21 people in the southern province of Guangdong and five in neighboring Fujian. A further 297 people were injured.

Chinese emergency relief officials said over the weekend that a tornado spawned by the typhoon killed at least 31 people and injured 552 in outlying districts of Shanghai.

Meanwhile, a newspaper in Hong Kong reported Monday that Typhoon Peggy had left more than 60 people dead and 680 injured in Guangdong Province alone.

(More than 30 Guangdong cities and counties were hit by the Typhoon, causing total losses estimated at over 600 million yuan (about 162 million U.S. dollars), Hong Kong leftwing newspapers TA KUNG PAO and WEN WEI PO reported.)

An evening newspaper in the southern city of Canton, the YANCHENG WANBAO, said Monday that the typhoon killed 31 people and injured 132 in Fengchun District alone, 14 in the collapse of a secondary school.

The Civil Affairs Ministry official said Monday that nine districts in Fujian Province and the city of Zhangzhou were hit by the typhoon, causing a still unknown number of injuries.

The official said 10,000 hectares (24,700 acres) of rice paddy were destroyed in Fujian Province and 390,000 hectares (960,000 acres) in Guangdong Province.

Some 12,000 homes were destroyed and another 100,000 damaged, the official said, adding that 682 bridges were wiped out and 4,000 kilometers (2,480 miles) of electrical lines downed in Guangdong Province.

In the city of Shantou, 30,000 people were stranded by flood waters, the official said, adding that the government had allocated three million yuan (810,000 U.S. dollars) to the province for emergency relief.

(Earlier in its course, Typhoon Peggy left 95 people dead or missing in the Philippines and damaged 89.3 million pesos (4.49 million U.S. dollars) worth of property in northern and central Luzon, according to official figures.)

RENMIN RIBAO URGES MASS PARTICIPATION IN REFORM

HK130635 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Reform Does Not Provide for a 'Spectator's Stand'"]

[Text] "If reform is a stage drama, then all of us will be actors playing different parts rather than just spectators." Tianjin Mayor Li Ruihuan's figure of speech is quite reasonable. Reform is a public concern, and it does not provide for a "spectator's stand."

Some people misunderstand things. Once people mention reformers, they immediately think about factory directors and managers. It seems that the masses are not included in the ranks of reformers. Due to the position of enterprise leaders, their outstanding representatives are indeed influential among the masses. However, they are only a small number of such outstanding enterprise leaders. Reformers are not limited to the ranks of enterprise leaders, and reform is not merely the prerogative of the enterprise leaders. To support reform, it is not enough for the masses to merely applaud in the capacity of audience. The greatest support is to take an active part in the reform and to concern oneself with reform.

To promote the reform, the masses should first realize their master position and master role so as to treat reform as their own cause. Marx and Engel pointed out more than 140 years ago: "Historical activities are the cause of the masses. With the in-depth development of historical activities, the ranks of the masses will certainly expand." Reform is really a great activity of the people in creating history. It serves the purpose of developing the productive forces. It not only extensively involves political life, economic life, and social life as a whole, but also profoundly touches people's mentalities, values, and thinking methods. No person can stand aloof from reform. As the masters of the reform, the masses should link their future and destiny with reform and regard reform as their own duty. This has been realized by more and more people. With the in-depth development of reform, the scale of the masses participating in reform will certainly continue to expand. Shi Feng, a worker in the Anshan iron and steel complex, encouraged himself to make contributions to reform in his plant, saying: "I may become rich if the plant does good business, or I may become poor if the plant's business fails." He investigated the state of production, business operation, management, and political work in his plant and wrote a lengthy proposal which contained original and useful ideas. Zhou Lianke and five other comrades in the State Economic Commission, in the course of rectifying party style, bravely put forth their opinions on reforming office work procedures in order to raise work efficiency and overcome red tape. These examples show that once the masses realize their historical misson, they will display profound wisdom and great courage, will dare to break all trammels, and will make remarkable contributions to reform.

Of course, leaders' enthusiastic support is a necessary condition for the masses to display their master spirit. If leaders show an indifferent attitude, or do not let the masses freely air their opinions, it will not be easy to arouse the masses' enthusiasm, and people's enthusiasm will achieve nothing. Therefore, leading cadres at all levels should acknowledge that reform is a cause of the masses and should realize the importance of the masses' master position in the reform. Great potentials for initiative and creativity exist among the masses. If the masses are not allowed to play a main role, the leaders will not succeed in the drama performance no matter how capable they are, and the reform will lack momentum. Therefore, leaders should give full play to democracy, and should be eager to draw on collective wisdom and absorb all useful ideas. In particular, after the reform of the leadership system, enterprise leaders will have greater power, and it will be more necessary to strengthen democratic management, to guarantee the masses' democratic rights, and to show respect for the masses' creative initiative. Leaders should seriously listen to the opinions. Those sensible parts of opinions which are not completely correct and sensible should also be accepted. [paragraph continues].

When facing erroneous opinions, leaders should make calm analyses and give patient explanations, and should not blame the people concerned. Only thus can the leaders show a clear-cut attitude of support for the reform-minded people among the masses. Zhang Lin, who works in a valve plant in Wafangdian city, Liaoning Province, wrote four proposal letters to the leaders of his plant because he felt that he was also responsible for the poor business results of the plant. However, the plant leaders only gave him the cold shoulder. Only when new leaders took office in his plant could his opinion be highly valued. It is not unusual for some leaders to ignore the opinions of the masses as they think that "people in a lower position do not make weighty remarks." It is certain that we need more broad-minded leaders. More importantly, we should create a harmonious environment to institutionalize the democratic practice. Only thus can we ensure that the masses can exercise their master rights.

On this great arena of reform, only when the masses and leaders make joint efforts with one heart and one mind can reform be advanced vigorously and can a magnificent situation be created. let us all play our parts well!

GUANGMING RIBAO VIEWS POLITICAL REFORM ISSUES

HK150107 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0711 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Today's GUANGMING RIBAO carries a signed article holding that the general goal of the reform of China's political structure should be to oppose and eliminate bureaucratism and achieve democratization of the party and state leadership setup, thus strengthening democratic management over the country's entire economic life.

Bao Xinjian, the author of the article, is director of the theoretical research center of the Shandong Provincial Social Science Academy. According to Bao, the general goal of reforming and perfecting the people's congress system as the organ of state power should be to truly realize and guarantee the people's democratic status in state political life, to truly ensure that the people's congress and its permanent organs have inseparable ties with the people -- ties that are easy to inspect and renovate -- and to integrate the legislative and executive legal functions in the persons of the elected people's delegates.

The author points out that, to attain this general goal, it is currently necessary o solve three practical problems: 1) Properly handle the relationship between strengthening the united leadership of the ruling party and practically exercising the people's superme rights. 2) Ensure that the people's congresses at all levels can truly become state power organs representing the popular will. 3) Solve the problems of the election, supervision, and dismissal of people's delegates by the people.

On the reform of the political setup in the state executive organs, the author says that the general goal here should be to build executive organs that are historically the most capable, the most responsible, and the most effective in carrying out the popular will and serving the people.

The author also says that the various defects in China's current political structure are all closely linked to feudalist ideology.

The concentrated expression of bureaucratism and abuse of power, which are two defects in the political structure, is directly rooted in the bad habit of grave feudalism among a small number of people. Hence, in reforming China's political structure, it is essential to regard eliminating feudalist ideology as a general target of reform. This is an important component part of the general goal of democratizing party and state political life.

NONGMIN RIBAO ON SITUATION IN RURAL REFORMS

HK111351 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Continue to Push the Rural Reform"]

[Text] Our reform of the economic structure started in the rural areas and has now focused on the cities. Does this mean that the rural reforms have been accomplished and everything goes off without a hitch? Not, it is of course not so.

It has been 6 years since we began restructuring our economy in the rural areas in 1980. Over the past 6 years, what have we done for the rural reforms? In short, we have done two major things: One is the improvement of the mode of production; the other is the improvement of the method of curculation. Moreover, we have also readjusted the structure of production. Why should we grasp these two things? It is because the previous modes of both production and circulation have many shortcomings and hinder the development of the productive forces. To invigorate the rural economy and speed up agricultural modernization, we must correct the shortcomings in the economic structure and create a situation favorable to the development of the productive forces. So far we have not accomplished the two things and there are still many deficiencies. We should therefore continue to push the rural reforms and keep working hard for several years to attain the fixed targets.

The first thing we have done in the rural reforms is referred to as reform of the mode of production. Concretely speaking, we have introduced the system of contracting responsibilities on the household basis with payment linked to output, and achieved marvelous successes in this respect. The system has manifested its tremendous strength. With the introduction of the system, we have disrupted the system of "rushing headlong into mass action" in agricultural production and abandoned the practice of "eating from the same big pot" prevailing in the distribution system. As a result, agricultural producers and dealers are unified and responsibility, authority, and benefit are combined, thus bringing into full play the initiative and enthusiasm of the peasants in production and emancipating and developing the most active productive forces in the countryside. The system of contracting responsibilities on the household basis with payment linked to output played in important role in the vigorous development of our agriculture in the past few years, and it will maintain its great vitality of a considerably long time to come. However, like all other systems of business and operations, household-run enterprises also have their limitations. The major problems now facing them are: The scope of their operations is not wide enough. It is therefore difficult for them to cope with various and complicated economic activities in the development of the commodity economy. For this reason, they need different kinds of service and support such as capital, information, technology, transport, and marketing, and they need to expand the scope of their operations, especially the scope of their land operations, through combination and cooperation. [pargraph continues]

In order to keep with the development of the commodity economy, it is therefore necessary to make further efforts to improve the mode of production in the rural areas. Because of different degrees of economic development, no doubt we should not impose uniformity on their expansion of the scope of operations and on their cooperation and combination. Different conditions in different areas -- such as the areas in which the commodity economy is well-developed, economically under-developed areas, and poverty-stricken areas -- ask for different forms of cooperation and combination, and it is impossible for them to begin with these things simultaneously.

The second thing we have done in the rural reforms is the improvement of the circulation system. That is say, we must straighten out market relations, promote free purchase and marketing under the guidance of state plans, and build up a planned market mechanism that is compatible with the development of the rural commodity economy. The second thing is more complicated and difficult than the first. It can be said that we have just begun this work. With regard to the commodity economy, we kept dark about it for a long time. Consequently, our farm product market was controlled by the state mandatory planes, the exchange of farm products was bound by extra economic administrative forces, and the prices of farm products could not correctly reflect the society's needs. Such a circulation system seriously hinders the development of the commodity economy. Viewing the world history of agricultural development, we may see that the rural economy must start with large-scale commodity production. When the large-scale commodity production of agriculture develops to a certain degree, a trend of using modern science and technology will appear, and the rural economy will then gradually move toward modernization in the course of promoting progress in agricultural science and technology and building up the market mechanism of agricultural commodity. The key to modernization of our agriculture lies in changing the self-supporting and semi-self-supporting agricultural economy into the commodity agricultural economy, and promoting large-scale commodity production. Therefore, what should be done in the second step in the rural reforms is mainly to straighten out market relations and build up a good market mechanism, and let it spontaneously regulate the relationship between production and consumption, readjust the production structure, and promote the circulation of labor power, land, capital, technology, and other important factors in agricultural production. When this is achieved in the rural reforms, the rural productive forces will make great progress and the rural economy will be more prosperous. Of course, this step involves a wide range of work such as reforming the system of state commerce and the price system. All this is very complicated and needs our painstaking efforts.

Reform is a tough job. What we have done is just the beginning, but everything is hard in the beginning and well begun is half done. However, what we have done performs only a small part of the job. We still have a long way to go before we ultimately accomplish the tough job. Therefore, we must redouble our efforts to work hard to further push the rural refors.

BAN YUE TAN STRESSES IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK110711 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 12, 25 Jun 86 pp 4-7

[Commentator's article: "On the Party Style While Commemorating '1 July'"]

[Text] "1 July" will soon come, and we will greet the party's 65th anniversary while in the process of carrying on reform and rectifying party style.

Now, reform and party style rectification complement each other and have been integrated into an inseparable entity. To succeed in reform, we must have a good party style; and only with a good party style can we ensure the successes in reform.

In the final analysis, party style is an issue of serving the people wholeheartedly. Why are the people willing to follow the Communist Party? Before liberation, the people followed the Communist Party to seek liberation; after the founding of the People's Republic, the people followed the Communist Party to seek a wealthy and happy life. Why do the people support the party's line and policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee? Because our party is leading the people to take the road of making the nation and the people rich. Therefore, the party's basic principle of serving the people must always be observed by all grass-roots party organizations and all party members.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, while leading the people to carry out reform, our party has also been carrying out a firm struggle to rectify party style and strive for a fundamental turn for the better in party style. The results are obvious to all: The realistic spirit, mass line, democratic style, and the practice of criticism and self-criticism of the CPC have all been carried forward. Through party rectification and the leading role of the central state organs in straigthening out the party style, the people have strengthened their confidence in a fundamental turn for the better in the party style.

However, we do not deny that some inner-party unhealthy tendencies still exist in many localities, departments, and units, and sometimes develop to a serious degree. Some party members, especially a small number of party cadres, are seriously tainted with egoism, bureaucratism, liberalism, and various bad ideas, and are involved in all kinds of malpractice of using official functions to seek private gains. This has aroused the people's resentment, seriously harmed the flesh-and-blood ties between the party and the people, injured the party's image among the people, and hindered the smooth development of reform.

People may list 10 or even dozens of facts which demonstrate that some party members and cadres are using their power to seek private gains. We will not mention these examples in detail here. However, we should clearly realize the root cause of the disease of using power in pursuit of private gains so as to suite the remedy to the case and rescue the "sick people." As we see it, some party members and cadres use their power to seek private gains, because they have forgotten the party's basic principle of serving the people. They have let down the people who trust them and let down the party which entrusted the authority to them. They do not use the power they hold to serve the people, but merely use the power to seek benefit for individuals or their small groups. They have forgotten or betrayed the sacred principle of serving the people wholeheartedly that they pledged to observe when they joined the party and which they once practiced. In their eyes, the grand objective of communism has become obscure to them; while the small, egoist goal has loomed large. In view of this, it is necessary to warn them once again: They must not forget their standing as Communist Party members, and must not cast aside the party's principle of serving the people wholeheartedly.

The reform we are now carrying out is the "second revolution" under the party's leadership. It has a bearing on the nation's prosperity and the people's prosperity and happiness in the future. [paragraph continues)

This is an arduous task of far-reaching significance. In order to strive for success in reform, we must fully arouse the initiative and creativity of hundreds of millions of people in our country. The party is the leader of the reform. In order to win the people's trust, the most important conditions are: First, the party has a correct line, principles, and policies; and second, all party members take enthusiastic and concrete actions to serve the people wholeheartedly and dedicate themselves to the reform. When celebrating the party's birthday, all party members should light the fire of ideals in their minds and cherish a sense of urgency to promote the reform. They should take responsibiltiy for uniting the masses, should be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, and should always be eager to meet the needs of the people. Only then can we lead the masses to fulfill our historical mission.

Today, an important criterion for judging whether a party member measures up to requirements or whether a leading cadre is competent, is to see whether he has the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly. The BAN YUE TAN Editorial Department and the Organizational Affairs Bureau of the CPC Central Organization Department jointly recommended 10 outstanding party members, who are examples of such qualified party members. They are engaged in different trades and work under different circumstances, but they all serve the people wholeheartedly and enjoy the love and esteem of the people. All of our party members should learn from their noble moral character.

Reform and opening up mark a new historical period in China. On the one hand, we should exert ourselves to fulfill the reform tasks and bring about rapid economic development; on the other hand, we must effectively set aright the style of our party which is now in a ruling position. Under the conditions of opening up ot the outside world, we must not relax our vigilance against the corrosive influence of the decadent capitalist ideology. When enlivening the economy, we should not try to line our pockets by going beyond the limits of policies and laws when implementing the principle of distribution according to work, we should not forget our duty to lead the masses to get rich together; when developing the socialist commodity economy, we should not bring the principle of exchanging goods of equal value to the inner-party polticial life; when allowing some people to become rich ahead of others, we should not do anything harmful to the collective interests and to other people's interests; when giving play to local advantages, we should not abet any unhealthy trend in a trade; when making the people's cultural life more colorful, we should ensure the social effects of our cultural products. All Communist Party members must strengthen their party spirit and set aright their style. They must not try to seek private gains b; adopting any foul means or under any pretexts. This is a basic requirement for all party members according to the party's basic principle.

The banner raised by our party since its founding is to serve the people wholeheartedly. All party members must endeavor to safeguard this banner and add splendor to it.

With the party serving the public interests and the government serving the people, the party and government will enjoy popular support, and the reform will certainly be successful.

GOVERNMENT ORGANS URGED TO ADOPT NEW STYLE

OW120309 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0023 GMT 10 Jul 86

[XINHUA commentator: Government Organs Should Operate With a New Work Style During the New Period]

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jul (XINHUA) -- Not long ago, the State Economic Commission and four other ministries and departments dispatched a group of personnel to conduct official duties in Henan. On the basis of its investigation and study, and by offering advice, the group promptly helped the enterprises there solve a number of practical problems which had impeded their production growth. This was a new approach following the 8,000-strong meeting of the central organs last January.

Improving government organs' work style calls for two requirments: First, government organs must correct unpopular misconduct. Currently, this means that they must correct misconduct in six areas, in accordance with the circular issued by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. Second, on the basis of inheriting and carrying forward the party's fine tradition, they must operate with a good style in keeping with the needs of the new period. If the first requirement means destruction, then the second means construction, the latter being essential after the former. Thus, while making efforts to correct their misconduct, our government organs should strive to operate with a new style, just as the State Economic Commission and four other ministries and departments have done.

It is very significant to stress that government organs must operate with a good work style in order to keep up with the needs of the new period. this is because our party, government and military organs play a pivotal role in all aspects of our work, and whether they can operate successfully has a close bearing on the success of failure of our cause. In our society, people act according to the example set by government organs. If leading organs at various levels operate with a good and new work style, they will effectively improve conduct in all social sectors.

In the course of the long period of revolution and construction, our party has developed a fine work style which guides conduct in many areas. Government organs, while promoting a good style in keeping with the needs of the new period, should integrate the need to inherit and carry forward our party's fine style with various reform and construction projects during the new period. Currently, we should work hard in the following areas, to say the least:

Supporting and giving impetus to reform. We should be good at summing up experiences in carrying out reform and at discovering the new issues appearing in the course of reform to actively create conditions for reform at basic-level units and remove obstacles in their way.

Serving basic-level units. Under the new situation of streamlining the administration, transferring power to lower departments, and separating the responsibilities of government organs and enterprises, we must thoroughly change the long-standing situation where leading organs, instead of providing services, simply let basic-level units and enterprises move around them. Each government organ must realize that leadership means service. This is a basic responsibility of government organs, as well as a basic guiding thought for their operation.

Conducting investigation and study. Not only should government organs conduct investigation and study in easily accessible and economically developed areas; more importantly, they should do so in remote and impoverished areas, and make every effort to eliminate any "forgotten corner" in the areas under their control.

Working creatively. This means two things: First, they must flexibly implement the central authorities' policies and measures in accordance with the actual situation in their regions and departments, in order to achieve practical results; second, they should replenish, improve, and develop the central authorities' policies and measures in accordance with the new situation and new problems at basic-level units.

LIAOWANG ON PARTY RECTIFICATION RESULTS

HK130541 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 26, 30 Jun 86 pp 13-14

[Article by Xin Xing: "Realistically Evaluate the Results of Party Rectification"]

[Excerpts] Party rectification throughout the entire party has now been in progress for more than 2 years. At present, the party central leading organs, state department, and institutions and units at the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal level, and institutions and units at and above the county level have basically completed their party rectification. The ongoing party rectification at the district and township levels is expected to be completed by June or July this year. The party rectification at the village level in most localities will be completed between autumn this year and spring next year. the entire process of the party rectification is rather smooth and has achieved marked results due to the whole party. The present situation of the village-level party rectification is also rather good.

The party rectification was started after our party reestablished the Marxist line following the 3d Plenary Session of the CPC Central Committee, shifted the focus of the work of the party and the state to economic development and socialist modernization construction, and has been carried out in depth under the situation in which reform and economic work are advancing rapidly. The party rectification is a major step taken by the party for winning a great victory in the new historical period, and it also represents the party's main practice for consolidating itself in the new historical period. It has played a significant role in our real life, and will certainly produce far-reaching influence.

The party rectification has achieved results in the four aspects of effecting ideological unity, rectifying party style, strengthening discipline, and purifying party organizations. The first-stage party rectification beginning in November 1983 was focused on setting aright the guiding principles for the work of the party central organs, state organs, and leading organs of provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities and eliminating the "leftist" influence in the guiding principles. Through the party rectification in this stage, party cadres and party members further emancipated their minds and more clearly understood reform's significance and orientation. This ensured that the focus of our work was really shifted to socialist modernization construction. At present, the ideological results in this regard have gradually been turned into the material results of reform and economic development through the concrete work of the leading organs and leading cadres.

Of course, there were also defects in the first-stage party rectification. For example, we did not pay sufficient attention to dealing with the major and serious cases, and did not effectively set aright the party style in general. Earlier this year, the party central leadership held a meeting attended by some 8,000 cadres from all central organs. A leading group was set up to guide the rectification of party style and to handle major and serious cases. Now the work in this regard has achieved definite results. From mid-May to early June this year, the Central Leading Group for Guiding Party Rectification held a series of forums on party rectificatin work with secretaries of the provinicial, autonomous regional, and municipal party committees in various major regions, and emphatically pointed out: All units in which party rectification has been completed must continue to consolidate and develop the results of the party rectification, and should focus their efforts on seriously handling the major and serious cases and effectively setting aright the party style.

In the second stage of rectification which was conducted in units and institutions at the prefectural and county levels, party spirit education among the party members was conducted rather successfully, and achieved marked results in raising the party members' ideological and political quality. At the same time, the work of handling major and serious cases and setting aright party style was also strengthened.

We should particularly notice that in the few years before party rectification, party organizations in many units and localities did not handle party affairs, relaxed the policial and ideological work inside the party organizations, and neglected the work of consolidating party orgnizations and building socialist spiritual civilization. Such deviations have been effectively corrected in the course of party rectification, especially in party rectification at the prefectural (city) and county level. Many primary and secondary leaders of the prefectural (city) and country party committeees personally took up matters concerning party rectification and placed this work in an important position. At the same time, a large number of party cadres were sent to the grass-roots units. They maintained close ties with the masses and directly handled actual affairs. They worked hard in the forefront of party rectification and cultivated a number of model party members and party branches with strong party spirit. They helped link the party's political work with the work of developing the "two civilizations." In practical work, they also became more competent and capable, and formed a backbone force for the party's political work. This was a major result of the party rectification. For a party which is leading the modernization cause, this is of great immediate and far-reaching significance which must not be underestimated. [passage omitted]

In this party rectification, achievements form the main aspect, although there are also some defects. The main problem is unevenness. Some units and localities did not effectively conduct party rectification and did not achieve satisfactory results. In a small number of units and localities, party rectification was carried out in a perfunctory way and did not achieve any result at all. However, some comrades say that this party rectification "has not solved any major problem," or regard it as "too mild" and "not exciting enough," as they approach it as if it was a political movement in the past. Some comrades set unrealistic requirements for party rectification and hope that it will solve all problems. This attitude is not realistic and scientific. [paragraph continues]

We should use a dialectical, all-round, and realistic viewpoint to view the achievements, mainstream, and non-essential problems of party rectification and to evaluate the overall situation of party rectification. We should not deny the achievements of party rectification when seeing some problems in party rectification in some units and localities, still less can we use a "leftist" viewpoint to evaluate the results of party rectification. At the same time, we should notice that with the in-depth development of reform and economic construction and with the further implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the economy, new problems will continue to appear. Our task of consolidating party organizations will be long and arduous. We should completely fulfill party rectification from start to finish, and use the experience we gain in party rectification in our routine work of consolidating party organizations.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON POLITICAL ECONOMIC REFORM

HK111039 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 3

[Article by Xu Hongwu and Li Jingde: "The reform of the Political Structure Is a Guarantee for the Reform of the Economic Structure" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] China has achieved remarkable results in the reform of the economic structure. However, the smooth progress and final accomplishment of this great undertaking calls not only for exploring the law of the reform of the economic structure, but also for creating good external conditions. Carrying out reform of the socialist political structure is an important political condition for guaranteeing the smooth progress of the reform of the economic structure.

Socialist political structure is a summation of the concrete reflection of the basic socialist political structure. It is a political and social system comprising various concrete political structures and setups and treats distribution of political powers as its focus and the administration of the state and society as its main function. The basic political structure of socialism is a new democratic structure that guarantees that the working class and laboring people hold state power and can genuinely administer the state and society. In theory, the socialist political structure must and can meet the requirement of this basic political structure. In practice, however, due to the influence of dogmatism and foreign things, people have not yet established a political structure beneficial to economic development. As a result, many defects in China's current political structure cannot meet this requirement, thus seriously affecting us in giving full play to the superiorities of socialism and directly hampering the in-depth development of reform of the economic structure. Under this situation, if we merely carry out reform of the economic structure but fail to simultaneously reform and perfect the political structure, it is impossible to make success in reform of the eocnomic structure. An Eastern European economist has put it well: If there is only reform of the economic structure but no reform of the political structure, the economic structure would become a "fish in the net" and could not be enlivened. It would be restricted in many fields, at least.

Reform of the socialist political structure must be closely integrated with reform of the economic structure. They must adapt to and promote each other. As the superstructure of socialism, the socialist political system must serve the purpose of consolidating and developing the socialist economic foundation. The reform of the socialist structure must be suited to the reform of the economic structure and ensure and promote the reform of the economic structure. Therefore, special attention should be paid to the following fields in the current reform of the political structure.

1. IT IS NECESSARY TO REFORM AND PERFECT THE CURRENT LEADERSHIP STRUCTURE, TO CORRECTLY HANDLE THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE PARTY AND GOVERNMENT, AND TO EFFECTIVELY STRENGTHEN THE PARTY'S CORRECT LEADERSHIP OVER THE REFORM OF THE ECONOMIC STRUCTURE. In the political structure of a socialist country, the ruling Communist Party is in a leading position and exercises leadership over the life of the country. This allows no doubt. However, a serious problem has been existing for a long time on how to exercise the party's leadership, the most prominent being overconcentration of power, failure to separate the party and government, and replacement of government by the party. Party organizations often "grow others' land while wasting their own land." They do this in the name of "strengthening both party and government," but are in reality undermining both. They have not only seriously affected state organs in bringing into play their effective roles, but have also undermined the political and ideological leadership of the party. The ongoing reform of the economic structure urgently needs strengthened party leadership. On the one hand, this reform is a very complicated and profound social transformation which should properly handle the relationships of various parties and correctly resolve various complicated social contradictions. On the other hand, only by strengthening the party's leadership over reform is it possible to adhere to the correct orientation in reform and to truly establish a new structure that meets the requirement for the development of socialist commodity economy and that is different than both the previous rigid pattern in which the state imposed too many and rigid restrictions and the capitalist pattern. To meet the requirement of the reform of the economic structure, it is necessary to reform the current leadership structure. The basic aim of the reform is to clearly define the functions and powers of party and government organs, to impose strict division of party and government organs, and to seriously change the previous practice of the party taking on everything and party leading cadres concurrently holding administrative leading posts. Through reform, the previous mistake of "undermining the function of state organs and the party's political and ideological leadership" has been genuinely changed to the present practice of strengthening the party's political and ideological leadership and fully guaranteeing the functional role of goverment organs.

2. ACCORDING TO THE PRINCIPLE OF COMBINING DEMOCRACY AND CONCENTRATION, AND CONCENTRATION AND DECONCENTRATION OF POWER, WE MUST REFORM AND PERFECT STATE ORGANS TO ENSURE AND PROMOTE THE ESTABLISHMENT AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE NEW ECONOMIC STRUCTURE. The economic structure we are to establish through reform is a structure that combines in a proper and organic way planning and market, macro management and micro flexibility, and concentration and deconcentration.

To meet the requirement that the political structure must be suited to the economic structure and economic development, the reform of state organs must adhere to the principle of reaching unanimity between democracy and concentration and combining concentration and deconcentration of power. First, we must correctly define the functions and powers of central organs and local organs. The basic requirement is that on the premise of ensuring the unified leadership of central authorities, we must reasonably expand the functions and powers of local administrative organs and bring into play their initiative and enthusiasm. Second, we must correctly handle the relationship between the state and enterprises. The basic requirement is to separate the duty and functions of government organs and enterprises, and to reasonably expand the decision-making power of enterprises on the premise of ensuring the state's indirect macromangement over enterprises. Third, we must reform and perfect state power organs; improve cultural technical, and management level and reduce the age of people's deputies at all levels; and perfect the system of establishing ties between people's deputies and voters, so that "deputies" can become veritable working posts. It is necessary to vigorously perfect the work system of holding congresses, to strengthen economic legistlation work, and to bring into full play the role of the legal system in promoting and ensuring reform in cooperation with administration and judicial organs. We must reform and perfect state administrative organs, strengthen scientific management, raise efficiency, and overcome bureaucratism. Along with the shift from direct control to indirect control in the state's business management on enterprises, the functions of state organs in business management must also change accordingly.

3. WE MUST REFORM AND PERFECT THE STATE'S CADRES SYSTEM TO HELP SELECT TALENTED PEOPLE WHO HAVE BOTH ABILITY AND POLITICAL INTEGRITY FOR LEADING POSTS AT ALL LEVELS AND PROVIDE A RELIABLE GUARANTEE FOR THE REFORM OF THE ECONOMIC STRUCTURE. We have carried out some reforms in our political structure over the past few years. Our party has reformed the cadres system according to the principle of making cadres more revolutionary, younger, better educated, and more professional, achieving some results. However, due to the lack of effective and concrete measures, we have not yet carried out reform in a coordinated way, the cadre system has not yet been throughly reformed, and we lack a sound democratic procedure in selecting and promoting cadres. Therefore, the cadres issue is still affecting the smooth progress of the reform of the economic structure.

The reform and improvement of the cadre system must be closely linked with the reform of state administrative organs, and the principle of adhering to "four requirements" for cadres must be integrated with the principle of adhering to socialist democracy. We must vigorously promote the cadres election and recruitment system and restrict and belittle the appointment system. We must institute the cadres office tenure system, the shift system, and the retirement system, and further abolish the existing leading cadres lifetime tenure system. We must establish various democratic supervision systems from low to high levels, and eliminate cadres' priviliges and bureaucratism. In the meantime, we must take effective measures to strengthen cardres' training and do our best to build a contingent of economic, management, and technical cadres of various kinds.

4. WE MUST IMPROVE DEMOCRATIC LIFE, PERFECT THE DEMOCRACY SYSTEM, AND BRING INTO FULL PLAY THE INITIATIVE AND CREATIVENESS OF THE BROAD MASSES SO AS TO PROVIDE INEXHAUSTIBLE STRENGTH TO THE REFORM OF THE ECONOMIC STRUCTURE. The essence of the reform of the socialist political structure is to develop socialist democracy in an all-round way and to bring about democratization in state administration, economic management, and social life. With the success in reform of the political structure, we can establish and protect the role of laboring people as their own masters in the state and enterprises through the systematization and legalization of democracy, and bring into full play the role of mass organizations, such as trade union federations, CYL organizations, women's federations, in state administration, economic management, and social life, so that democratic channels will become more smooth and leaders' ideas can be integrated with people's desires. If an enterprise can bring into play the power and role of trade union organizations and workers' congresses in examining and approving its important policy decisions, in supervising administrative leaders, and in protecting the legitimate rights and interests of its staff and workers, through reform, perfecting the system of holding workers' congresses and various democratic systems, it can effectively strength democratic management of the enterprise and combine the authority of its leaders and the masters' role, initiative, and creativeness of laborers.

LI PENG OUTLINES REFORM OF HIGHER EDUCATION

HK140849 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0355 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council and minister of the State Education Commission, recently voiced some important opinions on the reform of China's higher education.

Li Peng disclosed that emphasis would be placed on the following reform projects this year regarding higher education:

-- It is necessary to reform the student recruitment system and the graduate distribution system, to reform the grant-in-aid system, and to introduce the scholarship system. The project was initiated last year and is to be modified this year based on the experience accumulated so far. Since there are quite a few students whose families are faced with economic difficulties, the authorities concerned are going to try out the method of loan extension. In this connection, a few specialities of some institutions will be selected to launch pilot projects this year, and the method will be gradually popularized later.

-- It is necessary to improve the postgraduate student recruitment and training system. From now on, different specialities will observe different requirements in recruiting postgraduate students from among fresh graduates and employees who have some working experience. This sytem should first be introduced on a trial basis particularly in such specialities as social sciences, finance and economics, and engineering subjects.

-- It is necessary to gradually improve and perfect the postgraduate student training system. Dissertation topics must parallel as closely as possible the needs of the socialist construction.

-- It is necessary to gradually explore, through experimentation, more approaches to doctoral training, so that those employees who have accumulated rich experience in practical work will have access to higher degrees. It is suggested that courses for such degrees as "Doctor of Engineering" and "Doctor of Clinical Medicine" be offered so that practitioners with high standards will have more channels to gain higher degrees.

Li Peng suggested that from now on the readjustment of the higher education structure should follow the principle of rational division of labor according to the society's varying demands for qualified personnel. In light of the experience of different countries and the present conditions of institutes of higher learning in China, our universities and colleges should in general be divided into three types: 1) A small number of schools with greater potential in both teaching and scientific research should undertake the training of students enrolled in masters and doctoral programs while offering undergraduate courses. They should gradually develop into education and scientific research centers whose goal is to foster high standard qualified personnel. 2) The majority of schools must concentrate their attention on undergraduate education. At the same time, they should also carry out scientific research and participate in other academic activities centering on improvement of teaching quality. They should promote research in applied sciences, and provide scientific and technological services. 3) All kinds of professional training colleges should take teaching their key task. While teaching professional knowledge, they should also equip their students with some professional techniques.

Li Peng said: Our institutes of higher learning should create a political environment and an academic atmosphere featuring a high degree of civilization and democracy. It is necessary to encourage and allow young students to think and explore. But their behavior should be bound by discipline. Out of love for our students, we must treat them equally and sincerely, convince them by reasoning, and move them with true feelings. While being aware of their shortcomings and deficiencies, we must pay more attention to their strong points.

These views of Li Peng will be carried in the July issue of ZHONGGUO GAODENG JIAOYU [CHINA'S HIGHER EDUCATION] which is going to be published soon.

'REALISTIC' HOUSEHOLD INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT URGED

HK141221 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jul 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Only by Being 'Realistic' Can There Be Development -- Enlightenment Gained From the Development of Household Industry and Commerce in Wenzhou City"]

[Text] Contracts for land were transferred. Purchase and sales workers transferred their contracts among themselves. A bank introduced floating interest rates. Though many documents did not affirm these practices and had even clearly called for prohibition, the Wenzhou CPC Committee and the city government saw clearly that these things were conducive to the development of socialist commodity production. Assuming an attitude that called for "not being bound by upper-level restrictions and by what is written in the books, but simply being realistic," they gave the "green light" to these practices.

As a result, the development of household industry and commerce in Wenzhou was stimulated. New experiences were also provided for the relevant party and state policy-making departments, thus stimulating the development of reform.

In our approach to new things, should we be "bound by upper-level restrictions and by what is written in the books," or should we be "realistic" in practice? This is not only a problem on a Marxist-Leninist level but also one of work style. Documents based on conditions as a whole do not and cannot possibly take the peculiar conditions of all areas into consideration. Therefore, it is necessary for various areas to creatively enforce these documents in line with their own conditions. In developing the socialist economy, the masses have created many new things. So long as these new things are conducive to the development of social productive forces, they should be given energetic support. Only in this way can our party's policies be continuously developed and perfected through practice. Now some comrades stick to upper-level documents. If something is not specified in the documents they do not dare to do it. They also vigorously oppose what has been done by the masses and been proved by facts to be correct. This is a kind of harmful "bookishness." Some comrades are not unaware that "being realistic" is a dialectical-materialist attitude. But they think that conformity with the "higher levels" and with the "book" not only means "saving trouble" but also provides "insurance." They are unwilling to face up to reality and to work hard on investigation and study. As a result, they are often away from the masses and divorced from reality, reducing economic work to a lifeless state.

Being obsessed with the "higher levels" and with the "book" is the cause of several left mistakes in the history of our party. It is also one of the important factors why some areas have always failed to create a new situation in some aspects of economic reform work. Economic reform is a brand new subject of study confronting us and is a tremendous task involving the social economic system. We must not only do away with the old system but also establish new mechanisms, new rules and a new order, over a wide area. Therefore, we cannot assume an idealist attitude toward this reform. Nor can we sit waiting for a "pattern" suited for every case to come from the higher levels. (There is no such "pattern.") We must advocate the study of Marxist-Leninist works in practice. We must also study practices and experiences in the capitalist development of the commodity economy that are useful to us. We must call for investigation and study and foster the spirit of showing courage for exploration.

In developing the socialist commodity economy, we must follow a new path of our own. Whether this path can be a success depends on whether our pace is compatible with reality. Therefore, in our approach to anything at any time, we must "seek truth from facts." Only by being "realistic" in creation can there be development.

OFFICIAL ON COOPERATION WITH FOREIGN BANKS

OW141440 Beijing XINHUA in English 1333 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Nanning, July 14 (XINHUA) -- China's willingness to expand its cooperation with foreign banks has again been affirmed by Bu Ming, board chairman of the Bank of China -- the country's sole foreign exchange bank.

Speaking at the 1986 annual conference of the Guangzhou international finance society held in Guilin, Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, he said 19 foreign banks, one joint-venture bank and 152 representative offices had been set up in China by the end of last year.

China has selectively and in a planned way allowed some foreign banks to open business in China, and at the same time safeguards their legitimate rights and intrests, Bu said. As early as October 1980, he said, the State Council promulgated the provisinal regulations on the control of resident representative offices of foreign enterprises in China. The regulations are intended to promote China's economic exchanges and trade with the rest of the world, he added.

In February 1983, he said, the People's Bank of China -- the country's central bank -- issued China's first rules governing foreign banks, that is, the provisional regulations for the establishment of representative offices in China by Overseas Chinese and foreign financial institutions. In April last year, the State Council issued regulations governing the setting up of branches by foreign and joint-venture banks in China's special economic zones.

All these regulations, Bu said, have demonstrated that China is equipped with effective legislation governing the business of foreign banks in China. Since the Xiamen International Bank -- China's first banking joint venture with foreigners -- in the Xiamen Special Economic Zone in Fujian Province started business in 1984, six foreign banks have set up branches in Xiamen, and another three have opened representative offices there. The Xiamen International Bank has loaned 100 million U.S. dollars to 15 projects sponsored by the city in light industry, chemicals, tourism and trade.

In Shenzhen, industrial enterprises using foreign and Overseas Chinese investment and joint venture enterprises, accounting for 18 percent of the total, generated 62.4 percent of the city's total industrial output value in 1985. By the end of last year, Shenzhen had absorbed foreign investment totalling 924 million U.S. dolars, and part of this was collected from foreign banks.

Apart from their direct investment in China, Bu said, foreign banks can also conduct hard currency business including depositing, loaning, trade accounting and bill cashing, in line with related Chinese laws and regulations.

OFFICIALS COMMENT ON RENMINBI DEVALUATION

HK140940 Beijing CHINA DAILY (BUSINESS WEEKLY supplement) in English 9 Jul 86 p 1

[By staff reporters]

[Text] The Chinese yuan tumbled in value 15.8 per cent against foreign currencies over the weekend in the single largest devaluation in five years.

The yuan's value against the U.S. dollar dropped to 3.71 from Friday's 3.20 yuan. Against 100.000 Japanese yen, the yuan dropped to 2,303 yuan from 1,989; against 100 Hong Kong dollars, from 41 yuan to 47 yuan; against the British pound, from 4.94 yuan to 5.74 yuan.

A People's Bank of China spokesman said the devaluation is intended to promote exports and to more realistically reflect changes in domestic prices the past couple years. He called it a "necessary and normal business step."

Responding to the devaluation, the Great Wall Hotel raised its rate by 3.7 per cent. Other economic sectors depending on imported materials will sooner or later respond to the devaluation, said economists here.

Zhao Haikuan, head of the Financial Institute of the People's Bank of China, told BUSINESS WEEKLY the devaluation will not trigger a domestic price rise as some people feared.

"A lower renminbi will promote exports and reduce imports," he said. "That is a good thing for China."

The China Textile Import and Export Corporation, China's No 1 foreign currency earner, said it hasn't yet determined what effect the devaluation will have on the company's business. The devaluations did not come by complete surprise. Wang Benzhou, an economist with the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, told BUSINESS WEEKLY that the adjustment of exchange rates is a necessity as China continues to pursue policies of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world.

"The exchange rate is the kissing point between China's domestic price system and the international price system," Wang said "China's domestic price system was not tightly linked to the international prices system.

"China," he said, "overvalued the renminbi on the one hand while allocating State subsidies to support exports. In other words, the old exchange rate system bolstered the value of the renminbi at the expense of State finances."

Ban090 [as published] devaluation of the renminbi started in 1982 after it reached a peak of 1.5 yuan to $1 in 1981. In five years, the renminbi has dropped 146 per cent.

Disagreement emerged among Chinese economists over the issue of devaluation. Wang Zhenzhong, an asssistant researcher with the Economic Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, represents one school of thought.

Writing earlier in the Beijing-based ECONOMIC STUDY magazine, Wang said that further devaluation of the yuan will not necessarily help China in its quest for enhanced export earnings.

He noted that China's foreign trade surplus slid from $4.2 billion in 1982 to $14 million in 1984. In 1985, foreign trade registered a deficit. During that same period, the yuan officially fell from 1.5 yuan against the dollar to 3.2 yuan.

Wang Benzhou takes a different view.

"To promote exports is not the only purpose of the present devaluation of renminbi. The ultimate purpose is to adjust China's foreign trade system from a strategic point of view.

"In the process of economic reforms, the government should reduce its subsidy of export goods. Instead, it should correctly value the renminbi to give foreign trade business a more realistic base," he said.

Commentary on Devaluation

HK140249 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1056 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Commentary by Shi Fu: "Increase of Export Volume and Decline of Exchange Rate"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 10 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- It was reported that from January to May this year, the export volume of Mainland China reached $10.3 billion, an increase of 15.1 percent over same period last year. Before the publication of the news, on 5 July the banks on the mainland announced the readjustment of the exchange rate of the renminbi against currencies of various countries. The average margin of decrease is 15.8 percent. The increase of 15 percent and the decrease of 15 percent seem to be coincident. But they are bound to be interrelated. The common aim is to earn more foreign exchange to make up the deficits in foreign trade for 3 years in succession.

The deficit in China's foreign trade last year was terrifying. According to statistics issued by the foreign trade ministry, last year's total deficit was $7.61 billion. However, according to statitics issued by the State Statistical Bureau based on the figures provided by the customs, the deficit was $14.9 billion. In spite of the fact that the export volume for the first 5 months of this year increased, the foreign trade gap has still been expanding, rather than being reduced. According to figures issued by the Chinese Customs, during the first 4 months of this year the foreign trade deficit of the mainland was $4.4 billion, an increase of 13 percent over same period last year. In addition, foreign investment and the number of foreign tourists also dropped. This led to a sustained decline in China's foreign exchange reserves. By the end of last year, China's foreign exchange reserves were $11.91 billion, 17 percent lower than in the same period of 1984. By the end of March this year, the foreign exchange reserves had dropped again to $10.35 billion. In other words, China's foreign exchange reserves dropped by 13 percent within a period of 3 months.

In view of the situation described above, the Chinese authorities could not but take drastic measures to reduce the exchange rate of the renminbi by a big margin. The purpose in so doing was to enhance the competitiveness of export commodities, and to attract more tourists from abroad and investments by foreign businessmen.

Of mainland export products, crude oil and textile products are the most important. The export volumes of these two kinds of products account for 50 to 60 percent of the total export volume.

Due to the fact that oil prices have dropped, and that it is impossible to increase its export volume, profits earned from oil will not go up. They might even drop. The export volume of textile products and light industrial products during the first half of this year increased by $1.22 billion (46 percent) over the same period last year. However, due to the restrictions imposed by protectionism in the United States on the import of textile products, China can only seek more outlets in Europe and other places, because it is difficult to have a larger margin of increase.

During the first half of this year, the margin of increase in the export of coal was the largest. Coal exports totaled 5 million tons, an increase of more than 50 percent over same period last year. It is expected that coal exports will top 10 million tons this year. However, the coal market is closely related to the oil market. When oil prices are declining, the export of coal will be affected.

It is obvious that although measures taken by the mainland to lower its exchange rate will promote exports, they are not too useful because of the restrictions of various conditions. In the meantime, we should also realize that due to the fall in the exchange rate, the mainland must export more products to make up for the losses caused by the fall.

The fall in the exchange rate is, of course, useful in increasing tourist income and attracting foreign capital. A reaction has been produced in Hong Kong, which borders the mainland. As for those Hong Kong businessmen who invest in the mainland, the devaluation of the renminbi is both good and bad news. It is good news because workers' wages and other expenses, which are paid in renminbi, will be reduced. However, the prices of goods they sell on the mainland will also drop accordingly. Therefore, their profits will be reduced. It is only through increasing exports that they can make profits.

Another advantage of the fall in the foreign exchange rate is that imports will be restricted. The devaluation of the renminbi means the revaluation of foreign currencies. In other words, the prices of imported goods will increase. This will compel enterprises and consumers at home to use more China-made goods. This is beneficial to promoting economic development. However, with regard to advanced equipment and facilities which still cannot be produced domestically, China still relies on foreign countries.

China's noted economist Qian Jiaju believes that the fall in the exchange rate will restrict imports and benefit exports, and that this will be useful to solving the problem of the adverse balance of trade. However, to what extent is it useful? Are there no side effects? Sufficient time is needed to test the measure in practice before a correct answer can be given.

LIAOWANG VISITS SHAANXI AVIATION INDUSTRY BASE

HK100259 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 26, 30 Jun 86 pp 13-14

[Article by Quan Zong: "China's Large-Scale Aviation Industry Base Deep in the Mountains -- a Visit to the 012 Enterprise Group"]

[Test] Not long ago, at the "China Civil Airplane Exhibition" in Beijing, the Yun-8 multipurpose medium-range, medium-sized transport airplanes which gave a flying display among the white clouds, attracted much attention. It is produced by a third-line enterprise of the Chinese Ministry of Aviation Industry -- the 012 Enterprise Group. Recently, I visited the group.

Carry out Research Into, and Manufacture Medium-Sized Transport Airplanes

The 012 enterprise group is a large aviation industrial base that was set up in Hanzhong Prefecture, Shaanxi Province in the mid-1960's.

At that time, several thousand engineering troops and engineers, technicians and workers came from east China to help in the construction of the third line in that mountainous area, set up camps and began to build the base. By 1967, the construction of the base was basically completed. However, the "Great Cultural Revolution" seriously disrupted the normal construction and production in this large aviation industrial enterprise group. It was not until 29 December 1975, that a prototype of the Yun-8 airplane finally appeared, like a baby born after a difficult labor. Only then did China have its first self-designed and -manufactured medium-range and medium-sized transport airplane, comparable to the U.S. C-130 and Soviet An-2 transports.

Abundant Technological Force

Over 20 subordiante factories and companies of the group are scattered in the river valleys among the mountains of Nanzheng, Libua, Yangxian, Foping and three other countries, Hanzhong Area. Since 1964, the state has invested a total of 700 million yuan in this group.

Now, this enteprise group employs over 30,000 staff and workers, among them over 4,100 engineers and technicians. It has about 10,000 pieces of equipment including metal-cutting machine tools, forging presses and power plants. Above the ground, under it, and in mountain caves in this area with a diameter of about 100 kilometers, were built over 700,000 square meters of factory floor space. The large assembly workshop, 72 meters wide, ranks among the largest for this type of industry in Asia.

I visited Chief Engineer Xu Peilin there. Xu graduated from Shanghai's Jiaotong University in late 1940's, majoring in mechanical engineering. He has been employed in new China's aviation industry for over 30 years, and has worked with fighter planes as well as in research and manufacturing transports and rendered outstanding service there. Last year, he was praised by Zhao Ziyang and other state leaders as one of the 20 specialists in aviation circles. In the workshop that assembles Yun-8 airplanes, he told me that the Yun-8 had flown for over 10,000 hours and logged over 5.2 million kilometers without any accidents.

They have flown to all provinces and regions in the country except for Taiwan and have undergone various kinds of complicated environmental tests such as very cold and hot weather and the great height on plateaus and have functioned well. Its load capacity is 20 metric tons and it can carry 96 fully armed soldiers on one flight. Large bales of cargo, trucks, and artillery trucks can enter its fuselage through the rear door.

At present, the 012 Enterprise Group is moving toward making a series of Yun-8 airplanes. It has already successfully developed a Yun-8 plane specially for carrying "Heiying" helicopters. Relevant video records show that when a snowslide occurred in Lhasa Prefecture, Xizang last year, Yun-8 planes carried large amounts of relief materials and goods and "Heiying" helicopters across the world's roof -- the Himalayas -- and thus saved time in relief work. Moreover, the group has already successfully developed a Yun-8 marine patrol and other kinds of planes for special purposes.

Develop Its Strong Points and Develop Civilian Products

In late 1970's, as the state economy was undergoing readjustment, the orders for military products for the 012 enterprise group dropped substantially. Giving play to its strong points and developing civilian products became an indispensable way for the enterprise group to maintain its survival and seek development.

As the enterprise group's major product, the Yun-8 was the first to be considered as a product to be transferred for civilian use. At the Shaanxi Airplane Manufacturing Plant airstrip, we saw a Yun-8 with a dragon insignia painted on it. This plane was purchased by the "Flying Dragon" Aviation Company, which was very satisfied with its performance. Xizang, Yunnan and other areas have also sent people to discuss purchasing the plane.

Chief Engineer Zhu Peilin showed us into the fuselage of the Yun-8 and told us that the work to refit the airplane and turn it into a passenger plane was underway. If the fuselage was made airtight, the transport could be turned into a feeder airline with about 80 seats. This transformation project has already been included in the state plan for the development of domestic medium- and short-range passenger airliners for the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

While developing civilian products, the 012 Enterprise Group paid attention to giving play to its comprehensive strong points and researched and developed high-grade, precision and advanced products. In the past, the Wuhan iron and steel complex imported spare parts for the cylinders of the hydraulic pressure systems of its rolling mills. The No 572 factory under the 012 Enterprise Group undertook the task of the research and manufacture of the R2 Main Shaft Balance Cylinder. The balance cylinders it produced have been installed for trial use and proved to have a life of over 3 years, far longer than the 6 months life of the imported ones. The complex was very satisfied and has signed a 10-year contract with the No 572 factory, assigning the factory sole responsibility for maintaining and manufacturing the cylinders for it.

In order to develop civilian products in the light of market demand, some of the factories uner the 012 Enterprise Group have specially set up relevant functional organs to collect market information and establish an information network. The Shaanxi Airplane Landing Gear Factory successfully developed a Xerox machine for large projects in the light of market demand. This machine can xerox No 0 engineering blueprints of any length and has thus filled a need at home. The cost was 80 percent lower than similar products abroad; therefore, it was very well received by customers and over 200 of them have been sold in the past few years. The state has already designated this product as a "key project of military-civilian technological transformation" in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

According to Ling Yongbiao, deputy chief engineer of the Enterprise Group, the 012 Enterprise Group has already developed 10 major categories of civilian products including aviation industrial products, mini-cars and their spare parts, light industrial products, processing machinery, instruments, meters, home electrical appliances and motors, tools and measuring tools, special equipment, and farm machinery. There are over 100 major products in these categories. In 1985, the 912 Enterprise Group's output value of civilian products reached over 99 million yuan, accounting for 43.5 percent of its total output value and being an increase of more than 400 percent over the year 1984. This enabled the enterprise to gradually overcome its difficulties.

Through the production of civilian products, the various factories under the 012 Enterprise improved their qualities. They improved the war industrial technology and equipment and improved the design and production capacity of the factories that produced components; turned the enterprise from a production only type into one that combined production and business and defense and civil industrial production; paid even closer attention to market demand; trained a number of modern management personnel; and thus facilitated improving the management in the factories.

Develop Lateral Relations with Various Areas

While developing civilian products, the enterprise group strengthened its lateral relations with various areas. It cooperated with over 100 enterprises in Xian, Baoji, Lanzhou, Yinchuan, and other areas in northwest China to tackle problems and jointly produce new textile machinery and light industrial machinery for processing plastic and for food packaging. It has also established production joint ventures with Fujian's Futian and Xiamen. In Guangzhou and Shenzhen, one by one, the factories under the enterprise group set up "windows" to monitor market demand. They have also established an information network throughout the country.

Last year, they held discussions with the No 2 automobile plant on producing "SW.121" mini-cars. Now they have produced over 700 of these cars.

Since its establishment, the 012 enterprise group has played a satisfactory role in giving impetus to the economic development in Hanzhong prefecture. In the early 1960's when the factories were being built, the streets in the towns and cities there were narrow and rough and there was no bus service or running water throughout the prefecture. According to relevant statistics, in 1964, there were only nine highways in the prefecture with a total length of only 1,500 kilometers, half of which was often unusable when it rained. [paragraph continues]

There was no highway bridge on the Han Jiang and vehicles had to cross it by ferry. While the 012 enterprise group was being built, highway bridges were built across the Han Jiang. Highways with a total length of over 3,000 kilometers were built one after another and the Yangpingguan-Ankang railway was built through the prefecture. This enabled the prefecture to send out its abundant Chinese herbal medicines and agricultural and sideline products. Local cement, brick, and limestone factories were built one after another to serve the needs of the production of the enterprise group. In 1983, the Hanzhong Prefecture's gross industrial output value rose by 1,120 percent over that in 1964. Around the factories under the 012 Enterprise Group, rural trade markets and various kinds of service trade gradually developed and in some areas, small towns with a population of several thousand people have emerged. The various factories recruited a certain percentage of their workers from among local peasants, thus providing some job opportunities for rural surplus labor. The enterprises also paid a certain amount of tax to local governments every year.

Over the past few years, the 012 Enterprise Group has also exploited its financial and technological strong points to help localities build some cement, beverage, and cigarette factories. The factories under the group also established fixed relations with local enterprises to provide them with advisory and technological services and helped them train several hundred enterprise management personnel.

LIAOWANG VIEWS CADRE APPOINTMENT SYSTEM

HK110421 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 26, 30 Jun 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Perfect the Cadre Assessment, Appointment, Removal, and Supervision System"]

[Text] An important task for us now is to reform and improve the system for assessing, appointing, removing, and supervising cadres.

At present, our country is carrying out a modernization program and reforming the economic structure so as to perfect the socialist production relations and superstructure. This naturally includes the further improvement of the cadre management system. Only thus can the cadre system be adapted to the requirements of the modernized economy and can it better serve the economic foundation.

Some people say that after a political line is laid down, cadres become the key factor. This is rather reasonable, because the line must be implemented by people. Cultivating and promoting hundreds of thousands of cadres who can adhere to the party's political and ideological line and can firmly maintain the party spirit is an organizational guarantee for fulfilling the party's general task. During the democratic revolution, tens of thousands of cadres armed with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought shared weal and woe with the masses and fought selflessly and fearlessly, with one stepping into the breach as another fell. They made immortal contributions to the founding of the people's republic. Today, the process of realizing the four modernizations and the economic structural reform under the party's leadership constitute a greater revolution, which also needs hundreds of thousands of dedicated cadres who are willing to fight all their lives for the party's cause.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, party organizations and governments at all levels have seriously carried out the principle of making the ranks of our cadres more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and more professional in their work; have actively reformed the cadre system; and have promoted a large number of young and middle-aged cadres, who have both ability and political integrity, to leading posts at various levels. Many old comrades have taken concrete action to promote the supersession of the old with the new and have taken the initiative in changing the system of lifelong tenure of office. All this has consolidated our cadre contingent and improved the quality of leading bodies at all levels. This is also a basic reason for the major progress we have made in our socialist modernization construction and in various reforms in recent years.

Are there still problems in the system of selecting and appointing cadres? Yes. Although there are not too many problems in this regard, we still have to pay close attention to them. For example, some people still appoint cadres according to their personal feelings, personal relations, or personal interests. They even proceed from feudalist, clan, and factional mentalities when selecting cadre candidates. They are eager to appoint their former schoolmates or their fellow townsmen. Some people even go so far as to appoint their children or relatives to higher posts. Some people exchange favors by offering leading posts to the children of their friends. Some people disregard the established policies and vie for quotas of promotions for cadres in their departments and units. Some leading bodies raise their subordinate units to a higher level without authoritization. A very small number of comrades in charge of personnel affairs even use their power to seek private gains for themselves and involve themselves in all kinds of malpractices. Although only a few people are involved in such evil things, they have produced a harmful influence, corrupted the ranks of cadres, and hurt the party's prestige among the people. Such evil things completely go against our party's fine tradition in the field of cadre management.

Undoubtedly, we must check and prevent such phenomena.

Personnel appointment is a major policy issue that we must not take lightly. We should continuously perfect the system for assessing, appointing, removing, and supervising cadres. Leading cadres must adhere to the principle of appointing cadres according to their ability and political integrity and must be honest, impartial, and aboveboard in the handling of personnel affairs. Leading cadres at all levels have a duty to recommend cadre candidates to the party according to normal organizational procedures. However, they have no authority to seek private gains in violation of the policies.

The appointment of cadres must strictly follow the established procedures: Cadre candidates should be determined through democratic recommendations and on the basis of widely canvassing people's comments; then decisions should be made by the organizational and personnel department within its cadre management jurisdiction; finally, the appointment decision should be examined and approved by the organizational and personnel department at the higher level. When conducting democratic recommendation or public opinion polls, we must not merely do this for show; instead, we should be serious and strict in handling these things and should fully respect the opinion of the majority.

Candidates for promotion must be strictly observed and assessed in light of the political and professional requirements of the posts they will hold. The candidates' ability and political integrity as well as their previous performances and work results should all be examined. Attention should be mainly directed to their recent work performances, although their previous records should also be considered. When assessing cadres, we must not hold a one-sided viewpoint. Our attitude should be realistic and responsible to the party, and we must not have any prejudice. Our judgment must not be influenced by people's gossip. We should discover and appoint cadres who can creatively carry out the party's policies, effectively make new breakthroughs in their work, and bring benefit to the people in a down-to-earth manner.

Our practice over many years shows that it is more reliable to promote cadres level by level under ordinary conditions. Cadres being promoted to a higher post should first gain practical experience in working at the lower level and make marked achievements. In addition, effective measures should be taken to supervise the work of the cadres who have been promoted to the leading posts. Cadres who are proved incompetent in their present posts and who are seriously criticized by the masses should be promptly removed to other posts.

There is one other point that we should mention. The organization and personnel departments at all levels should not only be institutions for examining and approving cadre appointments, but should also ensure the implementation of the party's cadre policy in an all-round way and shoulder the heavy task of building and consolidating the cadre contingent. Cadres in the organizational and personnel departments should first exemplarily observe party discipline and implement the party's principles, should be faithful to their duties, should dare to report the actual state of affairs to the upper authorities, dare to uphold principles, and dare to resist all actions which violate the party's cadre appointment principles and violate personnel discipline. People who cannot adhere to the principles, abuse their power, and act deviously and dishonestly must not be assigned to handle personnel affairs.

RENMIN RIBAO ON STUDY OF INDUSTRIAL POLICIES

HK110400 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 5

[Article by Zhou Shulian: "We must Attach Importance to the Study of Industrial Policies" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] In the previous period, many comrades in many units talked about the necessity of studying industrial policies. This was not a coincidence but a topic set forth by the practice of socialist economic construction. In light of my own experience, I particularly feel that the solution to at least the following major issues depends on the formulation of correct industrial policies.

FIRST, KEEPING THE SCALE OF INVESTMENT IN FIXED ASSETS UNDER CONTROL AND READJUSTING THE STRUCTURE OF INVESTMENT IN FIXED ASSETS:

For a long time, the scale of investment in fixed assets has been overexpanded in China. Although we have repeatedly called for control of the scale of investment in fixed assets, so far this problem has not yet been properly solved.

While trying to bring the scale of investment under control, one will have to deal with the distribution of investment among different economic sectors. A common case is that every sector always asks for as much investment funds as possible, complaining that other sectors have obtained more investment than it has. This shows that the issue of investment scale is in fact closely related to that of investment structure. As there have been many unreasonable practices regarding the investment structure, the control of the scale of investment in fixed assets must be effected along with the readjustment of the stucture of investment in fixed assets. Thus there arises the necessity of a correct policy on the industrial structure which will guide the control of investment in fixed assets and the readjustment of the structure of investment in fixed assets.

SECOND, STEPPING UP THE PROCESS OF TECHNOLOGY TRANSFORMATION OF THE EXISTING ENTERPRISES:

To fulfill the goal of modernization we need to speed up technological progress. At present, one of the major tasks in economic development is to step up the technological transformation of the existing enterprises. Every enterprise should take up the technological transformation as its own business. However, even if the technological transformation plan seems reasonable for an economic sector as a whole. What is more, the arrangements for every sector will have a bearing on the arrangements for the whole national economy. Take the case of the automobile industry as an example: Without the overall planning for technological progress, we can hardly judge whether the plan for technological progress of an automobile plant is rational. The formulation of the plan for technological progress of the automobile industry is conditional on the weight of the development of the automobile industry, thus is must be considered in light of the whole national economy. Our national conditions determine that the process of technological progress will set different requirements not only on different types of enterprises, but also on different economic sectors. Some enterprises or sectors are required to adopt the most sophisticated technology, some others are comparatively advanced technology, and the rest the generally applicable technology. All these must be decided in drawing up the national technological transformation plan and the technological transformation plans for different sectors. The formulation of a scientifically well-rounded plan for technological transformation must, in turn, be based on a correct policy for the industrial structure.

THIRD, ENSURING FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN AND TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISES ALONG THE RIGHT TRACK:

The rapid development of town and township enterprises is a natural trend in the modernization of China. Town and township enterprises have been booming in the past few years and will surely further develop in the days to come. But a lot of problems have yet to be dealt with and solved in order to keep these town and township enterprises further developing along the right track. With regard to the development of industry in towns and townships, we have to properly deal with their internal industrial structure as well as the relationship between industrial enterprises in towns and townships and cities. The town and township industrial setup is not sound enough both in terms of its internal structure and its relationship with its urban counterpart. [paragraph continues]

For example, according to a survey, of the gross output value of the town and township enterprises in a certain area of southern Jiangsu, the industrial enterprises serving agriculture share about 9 percent, the food industry accounts for only 2.16 percent, while the light and textile industries, with the chemical fiber textile industry as their key link, share 63 percent, and the machine-building and building materials industries share 26 percent. Such a structure is perhaps unreasonable. Generally speaking, in the vast rural areas of China, one of the focal points of the development of town and township enterprises should be the preliminary processing of agriculture products and the services prior to and after production. Much work has to be done to implement this guideline. In brief, in order to actively support and conscientiously guide the development of town and township enterprises and to properly handle the internal and external relations of the rural industrial structure, we must enhance the study of industrial policies.

FOURTH, PROMOTING FOREIGN TRADE AND RAISING FOREIGN EXCHANGE EARNING:

Promoting foreign trade is one of the essential conditions for modernization. In the "Report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan," Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: "Earning more foreign exchange by increasing exports is the key to expanding economic trade and technological exchange with foreign countries." This principle is completely correct. In order to earn more foreign exchange by expanding foreign trade and export, we must try our best to improve the export commodity mix. As China's staple export commodities are primary and rough processed products, it is necessary to gradually shift our stress from the export of primary products to that of finished products, and from that of rough processed products to that of fine processed products. It is evident that the improvement of the export commodity mix must be based on the improvement of the industrial structure and, therefore, it is necessary to study industrial policies. China's import commodity mix must be modified as well. For example, excessively high quality consumer goods were imported in the past few years. The solution to this issue demands that the improvement of the import commodity mix be linked to the study of the policy on the industrial structure.

In saying that it is necessary to strengthen the study of industrial policies, we do not mean that we had no industrial policy in the past. China's first 5-Year Plan did clearly define a whole set of industrial policies. The country achieved tremendous sucesses that astonished the whole world in its socialist economic construction during that period. This showed that the industrial policies practiced at that time, which generally conformed with objective circumstances, were correct or basically correct. Our country has also accumulated much experience in formulating and implementing industrial policies since the First 5-Year Plan period and has scored conspicuous results in the study of industrial policies in the past few years. Both the gradual rationalization of China's industrial structure during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period and the stipulations concerning industrial policies embodied in the Seventh 5-Year Plan have fully demonstrated our achievements in this regard.

Such being the case, why do we reiterate the necessity of enhancing the study of industrial policies now? In my opinion, there are several major reasons.

First of all, China had made serious mistakes over a long period. For example, in placing undue emphasis on the growth rate of industrial and agricultural production, we put forth the wrong principle of raising the growth rate at the expenses of the balance between different economic sectors, which led to disproportions in the development of various economic sectors and poor economic results. Overemphasizing industry at the expense of agriculture, and overemphasizing heavy industry at the expense of light industry led to the disproportions between agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry. The implementation of the policies of taking grain as the key link for agriculture and taking steel as the key link for industry not only obstructs the overall development of agriculture and industry, but also the development of grain and steel production. Moreover, since we ignored commodity circulation while attaching sole importance to production and failed to let commerce and service trades play their due roles, commerce and services trades remained underdeveloped over a long period. Although most of these mistakes have been overcome and the rest are now being corrected, we still have to make a more thorough study so as to handle in a more appropriate way all these relations and certain complicated issues.

Second, some past mistakes were due to deeply rooted theoretical and methodological factors. For example, as a result of the one-sided understanding of the law of priority in the growth in production means, heavy industry was overexpanded at the expense of agriculture and light industry. Since the labor involved in commodity circulation was regarded without exception as nonproductive labor which does not create any value, the importance of commercial service was ignored. It was true that we had to concentrate in the past our attention on the relations between the two major economic sectors and between agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry in the study of the industrial structure in the past. Actually, not only did we fail to attach importance to the study of the relations between the primary, secondary, and tertiary industries. This made it difficult for us to have a comprehensive understanding of the law of development of the industrial structure and gave rise to biased or even wrong policies. Of these theoretical and methodological problems, some have been noted or resolved, and the others have not been brought to the attention of most people. There even exist some old conventions restraining people's minds. For this reason, we must boldly blaze new trails and emancipate our minds.

Third, the theory of socialist product economy was the guiding ideology for our industrial policies in the past, but from now on, the theory of socialist commodity economy should be taken as the guiding ideology for our industrial policies. The traditional product economy theory was not only the theorectical basis of the traditional economic administrative structure, but also the theoretical basis of the economic development strategy and the industrial policies in the past. It is within the frame of reference of the subjective and objective qmphwoions in the First 5-Year Plan period that we have made the above statement that our country's industrial policy for that period was, on the whole, correct or basicallly correct. In fact, the industrial policy for that period was not geared to the needs of development of the socialist commodity economy. [paragraph continues]

It failed to give full play to the regulatory role of the market mechanism, but rather emphasized and actively sought the expanded influence of the mandatory plan and the unified distribution of products. Such a policy, based on the product economy theory, may not meet the needs of the development of a planned commodity economy. Much has yet to be further explored in the future in formulating industrial policies to meet the needs of the socialist commodity economy.

Finally, we are still facing some other new circumstances and new problems in the study of industrial policies. For example, as the masses' living standard is improving due to increase in income, China is in the transition from the stage of just sufficient food and clothing to the well-off stage, and the residents' consumption pattern is undergoing rapid changes. Therefore, ensuring that the industrial structure will keep up with the rational changes in the consumption pattern is a very complicated problem. The new technolgical revolution which is now on the upsurge throughout the world will certainly have an important influence on the industrial structure. Under such a circumstance, it is by no means easy for China as an economically backward developing country to build up in light of its national conditions an industrial structure which will be readily adaptable to the new technological resolution. Moreover, as our country is now in the midst of the reform of economic structure, we can no longer copy indiscriminately those policies which were proved effective in the past. Although the industrial policies currently practices by foreign countries should used for reference, we should not indiscriminately copy them either. As the economic structure is in the process of reform, some industrial policies still have to be readjusted or modified along with the reform. All the above circumstances and issues required us to enhance the study of industrial policies.

Through the study of industrial policies, we are to formulate a set of scientifically well-grounded and feasible industrial policies which suit our national conditions (including the policies on the industrial structure, industrial organizations, industrial technology, and so on). To achieve this goal, we must also study the factors conditioning and the law governing the development of the industrial structure. At the same time, we must study the fundamental tenets, principles, methods, and theoretical basis that guide the formulations of the industrial policies and we must make use of the experience of our country and foreign countries in formulating industrial policies. Thus it can be seen that the study of industrial policies, which covers a log of ground, is a complicated and arduous task.

RENMIN RIBAO ON IMPORTANCE OF NOTARY WORK

HK130420 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 10 Jul 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Seriously and Conscientiously Do a Good Job in Notarization and Authentication Work"]

[Text] The notarization and authentication of economic contracts is a glorious task entrusted by law to state notary organs and to industrial and commercial administrative organs. It is an important job which helps protect socialist economic order and promote the healthy development of the commodity economy by legal means.

Since the "PRC Provisional Ordinances on Notarization" came into force, state notary organs and industrial and commercial administrative departments in various parts of the country have done a great deal of work in notarizing and authenticating economic contracts according to the relevant provisions of state laws and policies under the principle of voluntary participation. They have played a positive role in protecting the legal rights and interests of citizens and legal entities, in reducing invalid contracts, in preventing and exposing economic crimes, in ensuring the implementation of state plans, and in promoting lateral economic relationships.

Notarizing contracts means that state notary organs prove the veracity of economic contracts according to legal procedures. This is state supervision over the signing and implementing of economic contracts. Authenticating contracts means that the contract management departments of industrial and commercial administrative organs are responsible for examing whether the persons concerned are qualified to sign contracts and whether what is included in contracts is true and legal. In short, in notarizing and authenticating economic contracts, they must strictly examine the veracity and legality of contracts, whether the two sides concerned are qualified to sign contracts, and whether the contents of the contracts correspond with state laws, policies, and plans, for the sake of ensuring the quality of notarization and authentication.

Following the deepening of economic structural reform, the development of the commodity economy, and the constant improvement of the application of legal means to economic management work, more and more people in various fields in society have demanded the notarization and authentication of economic contracts. Their demands on the quality of this work are becoming more strict. Therefore, governments at all levels are required to strengthen the ranks of notaries and authenticators, and notary and authentication organs in various localities should strive to improve work efficiency and quality. Notaries and authenticators should straighten out their guiding principles for work, devote more efforts to the study of policies and legal knowledge, pay attention to professional ethics, improve the quality of their vocational work, and resist and overcome unhealthy conduct. They should resolutely not notarize or authenticate economic contracts which violate state laws and policies. A small number of notaries and authenticators who notarize and authenticate economic contracts at will without examination or do so for the sake of obtaining fees must be seriously criticized and given education, as this practice will lead to the issuance of wrong or counterfeit certificates. Those involved in serious cases must be given the necessary punishment.

Notary and authentication organs are law enforcement organs of the state. Cadres of notary and authentication organs must strictly follow the law in their work and provide excellent legal services for economic reform and construction. In the course of notarizing and authenticating economic contracts, if notaries and authenticators find that the economic contracts being handled violate laws and policies, or if they discover some operational problems with the legal entities of certain enterprises, they should promptly report this to the leading organs concerned and make suggestions on straightening out the problems found, so that notarization and authentication organs can play their role in exercising legal supervision over economic contracts.

China's economic structural reform is at present developing profoundly. Notarization and authentication work faces many new situations and problems. [paragraph continues]

Contracts containing terms and conditions with no laws or regulations to refer to, but which urgently need notarization and authentication, should be handled in the spirit of promoting reforms and the implementation of the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the economy, under the principle of protecting the legal rights and interests of the legal entities and civilians concerned, by carrying out investigations and studies, and in reference to the relevant legal provisions and policies, so as to ensure the smooth carrying out of economic structural reform.

PRICE SUPERVISION, INSPECTION STRENGTHENED

HK140431 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0319 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Report by Reporter Zhang Liang: "China Strengthens Supervision and Inspection of Prices"]

[Text] Beijing, 1 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- More than 28,000 part-time commodity price inspectors are actively working in the markets of over 260 cities in China. Under the guidance of the commodity price departments, they put stress on inspecting the prices of the commodities in the "vegetable baskets" of city residents and various service charges. Therefore, they are called by the city residents "Bao Gong in the markets." [Bao Gong is an upright magistrate in some Chinese traditional dramas] While giving an exclusive interview to this ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE reporter, Xu Kangmin, director of the Commodity Price Inspection Department of the State Administration for Commodity Prices, said that the result of the commodity price supervision and inspection by the masses in recent years has been very good. Up until February of this year, over 500,000 large and small cases in violation of discipline had been investigated and handled in the whole country, involving fines of over six million yuan. In order to strengthen the supervision and inspection of commodity prices, in 1984 the State Administration of Commodity Prices set up a special commodity price inspection department and commodity price inspection units in localities at or above the county level, employing over 20,000 permanent inspectors responsible for stabilizing retail commodity prices in markets and controlling the means of production prices. In 1985, over 440 million yuan in fines was collected for violation of commodity price discipline.

While talking about the significance of commodity price inspection, director Xu said that in 1985 China took the first step in the reform of the commodity price system, namely, and basically harmonized the price of grain in the rural areas, gradually removed control over the price of non-staple food like pork, vegetables, and so on, readjusted short-distance railroad freight and further removed control over the prices of small commodities. These most sensitive areas are the most difficult aspects to reform. Some producers and managers often hike prices indiscriminately and in a disguised form, affecting the markets and disturbing public feelings. Therefore, strengthening commodity price management, supervision and inspection work after the reform is very important in stabilizing the markets. In order to consolidate, digest, replenish and improve those adopted measures for commodity price reform and to continue to strengthen the work of supervision and inspection, departments concerned are revising the "provisions for commodity price management" and enacting the "provisions for commodity price supervision and inspection," so as to perfect the means of enforcing the law and to gradually accomplish the enactmentment of the "commodity price law."

ECONOMIC COMMISSION URGES IMPROVED EFFICIENCY

OW120445 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1204 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 9 Jul (XINHUA) -- At today's meeting on general office work for production, a responsible person of the State Economic Commission said: Low economic efficiency is an outstanding problem. During the second half of this year, various districts and departments must exert strenuous efforts to change this situation.

According to the meeting, China witnessed an extremely high growth rate in industry and communications in the first half of 1984, and it still maintained a definite rate of growth in the corresponding period this year. The economic situation in the entire country is indeed fine. The encouraging signs are: Light and heavy industries have developed in a coordinated way. Energy and raw material production is steadily rising. Light industrial, textile, and readily marketable products are greatly increasing. The market is brisk, while the volume of export merchandise has markedly increased. China has also overfulfilled its targets in communications and transportation. Currently, our major problems are: Our economic efficiency is not ideal. Production costs are high, while profits and tax payments to the state are dropping. Revenues are lower than the production growth rate. Particularly, the quality of some of the products remains low. For example, the quality of one-third of the 75 categories of products checked by the state was poor. One-third of the products spot-checked by the state failed to meet standards. It is for the is reason that, during the second half of this year, we must pay attention to improving production quality, reducing energy and material consumption, and making up deficits, while increasing profits.

Comrade Deng Xiaoping recently pointed out: We cannot only stress production quantity. We must also pay attention to production quality. In order to open our export market, the key issue is quality when production quality is low, the products will become less cmpetitive. In the past, we only stressed output value and quantity instead of quality. Actually, the most important issue is production quality. The responsible person of the State Economic Commission called on various districts and departments to earnestly study Comrade Deng Xiaoping's view, truly adhere to the principle of "quality first", quicken their pace in meeting international standards, and strengthen quality control in an overall manner. [passage omitted]

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission said: To reduce energy and material consumption, we must boldly rely on the masses, develop technical innovations with emphasis on "increasing production, practicing economy, and lowering energy and material consumption," and try our best to save and rationally use energy. We must actively apply scientific and technial achievements in saving energy and raw materials, encourage workers and staff members to make rational proposals, and adopt measures to combat energy and material waste. Various enterprises must set up and improve the system to assess proficiency in reducing material consumption. [passage omitted]

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission said: In dealing with the continual increases in losses on a large scale among enterprises suffering deficits, the various departments in charge of this matter must treat this as a significant problem. All enterprises which have suffered loss, particularly those under poor management, must be dealt with individually and instructed to adopt effective measures to make up the deficit within a given period. [passage omitted]

The responsible person of the State Economic Commission emphatically pointed out: In carrying out industrial production during the second half of this year, various departments and districts must persistently make reforms, strengthen management, invigorate various enterprises, further develop production in industry, communcations, and commodity circulation, simultaneously increase economic efficiency and industrial production, and link production speed with efficiency.

Attending the meeting were responsible persons of the departments concerned under the State Council. Comrades from the Ministry of Metallurgical Industry, the Ministry of Railways, and the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power reported on the production situation in their respective ministries. Vice Ministers of the State Economic Commission, Yuan Baohua and Lin Zongtang, also addressed the meetin.

XI ZHONGXUN, OTHERS ATTEND ZHANG SHENFU SERVICES

OW130941 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1336 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 Jul (XINHUA) -- A ceremony for paying the last tribute to Zhang Shenfu, well-known democratic personage and old friend of the Chinese Communist Party, was held at the Babaoshan Cemetery for Revolutionaries this afternoon. Comrade Zhang Shenfu died in Beijing on 20 June 1986 at the age of 93.

Comrade Zhang Shenfu's remains were placed among fresh flowers and green cypress branches. In the auditorium were flower baskets sent by Comrades Deng Xiaoping, Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Xu Xiangqian, Nie Rongzhen, Hu Qiaomu, Deng Liqun, Wang Zhaoguo, Cheng Zihua, Xu Deheng, Peng Chong, Zhou Gucheng, Chu Tunan, Yang Jingren, Kang Keqing, Ji Fang, and Yang Chengwu and by the State Council, the CPPC National Committee, the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, the General Office of the CPC Central Committee, the Propaganda and United Front Work Departments of the CPC Central Committee, the Ministry of Culture, the Bejing Library, and the Hebei Provincial People's Government.

Over 200 people attended the ceremony for paying the last tribute to Zhang Shenfu. They included Xi Zhongxu, Yao Yilin, Bo Yibo, and Huang Hua; responsible persons of departments concerned including Zhu Houze, Yan Mingfu, Wang Meng, and Zhou Shaozheng; members of the Standing Committee and members of the CPPCC National Committee who were in Beijing at the time; members and alternate members of the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party who were in Beijing at the time; representatives of the staff and workers of the Beijing Library; and comrade Zhang Shenfu's friends.

Comrade Zhang Shenfu hailed from Xian County, Hebei. He died as a member of the Sixth CPPCC National Committee, adviser to the Central Committee of the Chinese Peasants and Workers Democratic Party, and researcher of the Beijing Library. [passage omitted]

He helped Comrade Li Dazhao prepare the formation of the Communist Cell in Beijing in 1920, worked for the founding of the CPC, and was one of the earliest CPC members. [passage omitted]

LEADERS ATTEND MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR COMRADE

OW122015 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1223 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Comrade Yang Shiming, former deputy commander of the Nei Monggol Production and Construction Corps, died of illness in Beijing on 29 June at the age of 79. A ceremony to pay last homage to Comrade Yang Shiming's remains was held today in the auditorium of the Babaoshan Cemetery for Revolutionaries. Nei Rongzhen, Yang Dezhi, Qin Jiwei, Wang Zhen, Song Renqiong, Wang Ping, Xiao Ke, Cheng Zihua, Zhang Aiping, Dong Giwu, and Yang Chengwu sent wreaths to the ceremony.

Qin Jiwei, Wang Ping, and Yang Baibing were among those attending the ceremony. [passage omitted] Comrade Yang Shiming was a fine member of our party and an outstanding military commander and political worker in our Army.

QIAO SHI ADDRESSES MEETING OF DISABLED GROUP

OW121424 Beijing XINHUA in English 1206 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 12 (XINHUA) -- The government and society should care the handicapped people, paying more heed to their life, employment, education, medical care and recreational activities, Chinese Vice-Premier Qiao Shi said here today.

Addressing a meeting of the China Organization Commission of the United Nations "Decade of Disabled Persons" (1983-92), Qiao urged concerete measures to be taken to improve the welfare of the handicapped and ensure their participation in social life. He suggested that the Ministry of Labor and Personnel and State Education Commission work out special policies to protect the handicapped in education and employment.

The State Planning and Economic Commissions and the Ministry of Finance should also support the factories run by the handicapped in technology, materials and personnel training, he said.

"The work for the handicapped could make progress only with the help of the government, but it should be well coordinated with the country's economic development," he stated. The vice-premier promised that his government will support the U.N. activities. He also called government departments to cooperate with the China Organization Commission in this respect.

FUJIAN SECURITY ORGANS CRACK KMT ESPIONAGE CASES

OW090627 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jun 86 p 1

[By correspondent Lin Guang and reporter Rao Shanghao]

[Text] (FUJIAN RIBAO report) Fuzhou's state security organs recently cracked three cases concerning hidden secret agents serving Taiwan's Kuomintang [KMT]. The four secret agents -- Zheng Chengyun, Shi Xijun, Liu Xinzhuo, and Huang Chuanrong -- have been arrested according to law.

Taiwan KMT secret agent Zheng Chengyun, 45, used to be secretary of the Fuqing County Knitwear Plant party branch. Poisoned by reactionary ideas spread by secret agents sent from Taiwan and lured by material benefits and money, he betrayed the party and the people, submitted an "application," and joined Taiwan's secret service in March 1985. Later he was appointed by the Taiwan KMT Military Intelligence Bureau to be a "special correspondent in the Fuqing area" responsible for collecting information about Fuqing County's party, government, and military affairs at the instruction of Taiwan's secret service. Taiwan's KMT secret service dispatched secret agents into Fujian to contact Zheng on many occasions and gave him training in using invisible ink and secret codes, as well as $1,450 and equipment for carrying espionage activities. At the agents' instruction, on two occasions Zheng secretly delivered our party's classified documents to Taiwan's KMT secret service, and received an "award" of $500.

Taiwan KMT special agent Shi Xijun, 41, used to be a cadre of the Fujian Technical Art Industrial Corporation. Obsessed with the desire for money, Shi, while engaged in trade with Taiwan, expressed his intention to write against communism and gave his father's picture and biographical notes, as well as a letter of his own, to the Taiwan authorities through a special agent. Later Shi was recruited to be a member of the Taiwan KMT secret service. In his application to be an agent Shi pledged to work for "reunifying China under the three principles of the people," received $300 for espionage activities, and was appointed by the Taiwan KMT Military Intelligence Bureau as chief of the Fuzhou "66035" unit. After joining the secret service Shi began to carry out espionage activities such as collecting intelligence and stealing secret information. He sold important classified documents of the central and provincial authorities to the Taiwan KMT secret service for a price of $1,000.

Taiwan KMT secret agent Liu Xinzhuo, 27, is a native of Tantou town in Changle County. Disguised as a carpenter, he travelled from place to place to engage in speculative business. Pursuing the decadent living style of the bourgeoisie, he made it a regular practice to show and watch videotaped pornographic movies. In June 1983, Taiwan's secret service decided to recruit Liu to be one of its personnel. In May 1985, after filing an "application" to join the secret service, he became a member of the Fuzhou "66035" unit under the Taiwan KMT's Military Intelligence Bureau and was given the duty of establishing liaison and recruiting secret service personnel. As a secret agent he was trained to transmit information with invisible ink and he received money for carrying out espionage activities. On many occasions he used invisible ink to report China's military and economic intelligence and the main points of classified documents to Taiwan's secret service. He was also responsible for establishing contacts with Shi Xijun, another hidden secret agent in Fuzhou, recruiting two other people to join their secret organization, and reestablishing connections for two former KMT armed secret agents who had been released after being reformed through labor. Because of his work he was "commended" by the Taiwan KMT secret service. Last March he got a lump sum of $6,000 for carrying out espionage activities.

Taiwan KMT special agent Huang Chuanrong, 30, was a fisherman of Dinghai village in Lianjiang County. While engaging in smuggling activities at sea in July 1985 he was lured by the Taiwan KMT secret service with money and material benefits. Subsequently he joined the secret service, became chief of the "3037" hidden group, and received the secret service's training in recruiting new members and collecting intelligence. Following secret codes, Huang and four other local fishermen that he had drawn to this side at one time or another secretly went to the designated area on the sea to contact the Taiwan KMT secret service, thus accomplishing all the procedures of joining the KMT secret service. At the Taiwan secret service's instruction the gang operated extensively, gathering military and political intelligence and large numbers of journals for inner distribution by buying, swindling, and stealing, and delivered them to the secret service via the sea. Because of his active service Huang was twice "commended" by the secret service and was given nearly 20,000 yuan for carrying out activities. Last March Huang secretly went to Mazu and had a private "audience" with a chieftain of the Taiwan KMT secret service. The secret service also planned to send him to Taiwan for more espionage training, but he was captured by the state security organ just as he was about to leave.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN AT LITERARY, ART CONGRESS

OW101347 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The fifth congress of Jiangxi literary and art workers opened in Nanchang today. Provincial party, government, and military leaders, including Wan Shaofen, Xu Qin, Jiang Zhuping, Wang Baotian, (Wu Xuezhen), and Wang Shufeng, and leaders of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department, the provincial Cultural Department, and the Jiangxi and Nanchang Federations of Literary and Art Circles attended the congress. [passage omitted]

In his congratulatory speech, Xu Qin, deputy secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, said: Representatives of literary and art workers from all localities of the province have gathered here to sum up the basic experince in literary and art work since the last congress and to study ways to further improve this work in the new historical period. [passage omitted]

Xu Qin said: Six years have passed since the fourth congress of Jiangxi literary and art workers. Thanks to the concerted efforts of our province's literary and art workers, our literature and art have progressed and flourished under the guidance of the party's policy of literature and art. The various societies under the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles and such federations in the various prefectures, cities, and counties have initially developed into a fairly comprehensive networks of literary and art organizations, which have assisted the party in guiding literary and art work. Party committees at all levels should continue to improve their leadership in this work, continue to eliminate "left" ideas, refrain from labeling or persecuting any body, and avoid interference in this work by issuing excessive administrative orders. Party committees should dispatch a number of comrades who are versed in literature and art to literary and art departments and units to make friends with writers and artists, for this will promote closer ties between the party and literary and art workers and further develop literature and art in our provinces.

Xu Qin said: Being an old revolutionary base area, Jiangxi has a glorious historical and cultural tradition. Although we have made some achievements in literary and art work, we still lag behind in some respects. We should rid ourselves of complacency, but we should not underestimate our own capabilities.

We should note that there are favorable conditions, as well as great potential, for developing literature and art in our province. We earnestly hope that literary and art workers throughout the province will continue to follow the guidelines of the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, the National Conference of Party Delegates, and the second enlarged plenary session of the eighth provincial CPC Committee, and make new contributions to invigorating Jiangxi and its literature and art. [passage omitted]

The China Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the Chinese Writers Association, and Comrade Fang Zhichun sent congratulatory cables and letters to the current congress.

ZHEJIANG CADRES HELP RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW140359 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0026 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Hangzhou, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- When party and government offices at various levels in Zhejiang recently assigned cadres to help conduct party rectification in the countryside, a pleasant situation arose -- party-member cadres vied for the chance to go to the countryside.

Party rectification at the basic level in Zhejiang's countryside will fully unfold by the end of this month. In view of the fact that the number of units to conduct party rectification is currently huge, conditions are quite complex, and problems to be tackled are many, the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee decided to have offices at all levels send certain cadres to the countryside to guide party rectification and do liaison work. Shortly after the document was issued, all offices completed the mission. A crack contingent was thus formed.

"Volunteers" featured prominently in this contingent. According to a survey by a department concerned, of the more than 40,000 cadres going to the countryside, a large proportion took the initiative in volunteering for the assignment, rather than being assigned. [passage omitted]

In some units, the top two leaders volunteered for the job, or both husband and wife applied. Some old retired comrades also volunteered. They had not been included in the assignment. Of the 500-odd cadres sent by provincial-level units, over 160, or 32 percent, were leading cadres at the bureau, division, or section level. [passage omitted]

Of its own accord, the General Office of the provincial government not only sent its cadres to Panan County, where conditions are less favorable, but planned to send cadres to this county on a regular basis to help it after the party rectification task is completed.

HEBEI SECRETARY SPEAKS AT CADRE RALLY

SK120050 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[Text] On the morning of 27 June, Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech entitled "Uphold Reform, Revitalize the Provincial Capital, and Lead the Provincial Economic Development" at a rally of cadres at and above the township level held by the Shijiazhuang City CPC Committee and government. Comrade Xing Chongzhi said: As the provincial capital and the political, economic, cultural, and scientific and technological center of the whole province, Shijiazhuang City should take the lead in reform and construction in the province. The provincial CPC Committee hopes that under the leadership of the city CPC Committee and government, workers, peasants, intellectuals and the masses of cadres throughout the city will unite closely, exert concerted efforts in reform along the course charted by the CPC Central Committee, work diligently and in a down-to-earth manner, make the work of the provincial capital successful to take the lead in the province, and make greater contributions to the revitalization of Hebei.

Comrade Xing Chongzhi put forward four opinions.

1. We should persistently give top priority to reform and strive to create more and better new experiences. Proceeding from the objective demand of China's economic and social development, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have placed reform above everything else during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. As Shijiazhuang City is one of the selected cities of the country and the province in piloting the overall reform, continuously pushing reform forward is all the more significant. Since 1984 it has gained an experience in the "collision and rebound style" of overall reform, thus playing a leading role in thr province, and favorably influencing other provinces. With the impetus of reform, the economic development of the city has been fairly rapid over the past 2 years. Following this, we hope that it will exert unremitting efforts, actively make progress, and continue to win new successes. We should note that the urban reform is only at its initial stage, and the future tasks remain very arduous. As a pilot city for reform, Shijiazhuang should develop ahead of others and play a guiding role. In line with the requirements of developing situation, it should transform single-item reform into coordinated reforms in all fields and partial reform into overall reform, and continuously make new explorations. We hope that the masses of cadres and people of Shijiazhuang City will take the lead in making explorations on such questions as what the new economic structural pattern with the characteristics of our country is; how we should carry out the three major reforms to invigorate enterprises, improve the market system, and establish and perfect the indirect macroeconomic control system as set forth in the state's Seventh 5-Year Plan; how we should change the functions of governments in economic management, and then reform the administrative organizations successfully; how we should "consolidate, assmiliate, supplement and improve" the reforms that have already been carried out and make good preparations for the advancement of next year's reform; how central cities should develop lateral economic cooperation and perfect the system of having cities lead the surrounding countries; and how the reforms in political, cultural and other fields should be conducted in coordinated with economic structural reform.

To push reform forward, we should properly handle the overall relationship between reform and construction. This year the province should guarantee an 8-percent and strive for a 10-percent increase in its industrial growth rate, which should be realistic without exaggeration. This means that the growth rate, profits and taxes, and revenues should increase simultaneously on the premise that economic results are improved, labor consumption is reduced, production quality is upgraded, and products are marketable. A very important way to achieve this is to carry out reform persistently and successfully. We should always pay attention to placing reform above all other work and, through it, push forward the national economy to achieve good economic results.

2. Under the new situation in which macroeconomic guidance and control have been enhanced, efforts should be made to further enliven enterprises. Macroeconomic control and microeconomic flexibility represent the inner demand of the work of developing the commodity economy, are interdependent, and complement each other. Macroeconomic control means that the state conducts guidance and adjustment among the economic activities of enterprises in order to enable their business activities and orientation to be suitable to the demand of developing the national economy. Of course, the work of conducting macroeconomic control should be carried out in an adequate manner. The current major problem cropping up in economic work is not to fully enliven the economy and also not to enliven the economy excessively. We must clearly note that enlivening enterprises is both the starting point and end result of the drive to conduct reforms in the economic systems in urban areas. Therefore, the effectiveness of the work of conducting macroeconomic control should be the important sign of reinforcing the vitality of enterprises. Cadres at all levels, particularly the cadres of the economic departments, should master the method of integrating macroeconomic control with microeconomic flexibility in an organic way and should open a new road. While applying the necessary administrative measures, efforts should be made to concentrate on mastering the method of applying economic and legal measures in order to upgrade the strength of macroeconomic indirect controls. We should inspect enterprises one by one concerning the work of delegating power to them. As for the power that deserves to be delegated, that has been held or withdrawn, and that has been delegated in a false way, we should resolutely return it to the enterprises. We should also resolutely delegate the power that has not been delegated to the enterprises in line with the documents in this regard. Efforts should be made to continuously consolidate the administrative companies and to eliminate "intermediate obstacles" in delegating power to enterprises. We should also conduct earnest inspection over the problem of apportioning expenses to enterprises arbitrarily in order to lighten their burdens and to improve their business circumstances.

In enlivening enterprises, external conditions are necessary and internal efforts are also inevitable. Each enterprise should persistently pay attention to their internal efforts, do a good job in using the self-determination power, and should concentrate on establishing internal associations, conducting technical renovations, and on enhancing management. At present a good job should be done in vigorously enforcing the system of having the plant chief (manager) assume full responsibility, improving various economic responsibility systems, enhancing the quality control of enterprises in an all-round way, readjusting the product structure, actively increasing the variety of new products, and in tapping the latent power of enterprises in order to upgrade the quality of enterprises in an overall way. The key to successfully conducting reforms and enhancing management among 1the enterprises lies on the unity displayed by the leading bodies and on the concerted efforts exerted by the party committees, the administrative departments, and the trade unions. [paragraph continues]

Plant chiefs who represent the legal persons of enterprises are the principal leaders of the plants. Various social circles should actively support or conduct coordination with them in order to enable them to fully exercise their power and to realistically assume overall responsibility for leading the enterprises to conduct reforms and to promote production and business.

3. Efforts should be made to sum up the experience gained in work in a timely manner in order to achieve new developments in establishing lateral economic associations. Accelerating the pace of establishing lateral economic associations is the important content of the current drive to conduct reforms in the economic systems. Over the past 2 years Shijiazhuang City has scored marked achievements and has achieved rapid development in establishing lateral economic associations. These associations should be established on the basis of exploiting strong points and avoiding shortcomings, adopting various styles, and of achieving mutual benefit and development. "Voluntariness" is the basis and premise of establishing lateral economic associations. We should prohibit anyone from establishing lateral economic associations in a high-handed way and by "seeking partial interests and insisting on their own selection." The principle of "exploiting strong points and avoiding shortcomings and of adopting various styles" is aimed at proceeding from reality, meeting the needs of local areas and enterprises, bringing into play the strong points in various fields, organizing the association of various categories, and at achieving the best group benefits. The principle of "achieving mutual benefits and development" is the criterion of dealing with the relationship among the economic interests earned in the joint operation and also is the purpose of our tasks to develop economic associations. Now, some enterprises dare not to join the associations and do not know how to join the associations, thus, resulting in a closed situation. Some have paid much attention to their own interests and less to others' interests, and have paid much attention to enterprises benefits and less to social benefits. They have always attempted to gain extra advantages. Some have actively engaged in establishing economic associations while being hard up in both production and business. They have attempted to "suppress or merge others" as soon as they have achieved a better turn in business, or have refused to honor the agreements signed in establishing the economic associations. All of these practices are not favorable to consolidating and developing such economic associations.

We should fully understand kthat the lateral economic cooperation which we have advocated is sincere cooperation among the economic entities with the status of legal persons. On the basis of voluntary participation, equality, and mutual benefits, the economic entities may carry out production, operations, and scientific research. In economic cooperation, the saving of profits must be rational and the partners must take risks jointly and share the benefits equally. The economic associations must firmly keep their credit, keep themselves within the bounds of the cooperation rules and lthe economic contracts on their own initiative, and actively fulfill their obligations. The judicial departments should safeguard their legal rights and interests in terms of the law. Only thus can they establish steady and long-term cooperative ties and attain the goal of common development.

4. We should further promote the spirit of blazing new trails and seeking truth from facts and continue to deepen reform. Presently, in order to deepen reform, our cadres at all levels should continue to maintain a mental state of vigorously forging ahead, boldly blazing new trails, being firm and indomitable, and pioneering the road of advance. Leading cadres, in particular, should all the more do the same. Under the new situation of carrying out reforms in all fields, those persons who do not have the spirit of reform and blazing new trails should not assume leadership work or be put in important positions. [paragraph continues]

One thing worthy of our attention is that some comrades have slackened their efforts in displaying the spirit of daring to blaze new trails. They are overcautious while handling some things which should be popularized or reformed. It has been learned that such a situation should be attributed to their fear of taking risks, making mistakes, being targets of criticism and punishment, and so forth. Such an ideological sentiment merits our attention. Our reform is a new great cause and an extensive and profound great change; therefore, it requires our efforts to make bold exploration. It is hard to avoid risks, obstacles, and defects in the cause of exploration. It is all the more unavoidable to have problems and contradictions of one type or another, particularly under the current situation in which the coexistence of the old and new systems and the replacement of the old with the new has emerged. Some comrades said that they have become panic-stricken at certain news. In this regard, we should analyze the situation and carefully study where the news comes from and to which nature it belongs. Generally speaking, the trend of firmly carrying out reform from the higher to the lower levels is playing a dominant role, stimulating the people to participate in reform. There are also evil trends incompatible with reform or disrupting reform; however, they will not get anywhere. Regarding the evil trends, first, we must resist them, and second, we must check them. It is no use to fear these evil trends, for there is no way for retreat. A correct attitude will enable us to resist pressure, to eliminate obstacles, and to persist in carrying out reform with an indomitable will.

To promote the spirit of blazing new trails, we should combine the directives of the central authorities and the higher levels with the specific situation in our own localities and units and carry out our work creatively. As I have just mentioned above, the coexistence of two economic systems and the replacement of the old with the new as well as the gradual transition of the old system to the new one are one of the important features emerging in the current situation of structural reform. Under such a situation, the coexistence of the two operational mechanisms (the planning mechanism and the market mechanism), two prices (state fixed price and market price), and two organizational structures (vertical and lateral structures) and the imbalances in reform have made us encounter a very complicated situation. Therefore, it is all the more necessary for us to proceed in our work from the actual situation in our own localities and units, and to make the directives of the central authorities and the higher levels our definite goal. It is impossible for us to do our work well by just copying the directives mechanically. Some problems may be handled flexibly within the prescribed limits of the macroeconomic policies issued by the central authorities and the higher levels. We may also experiment with those things on which the central authorities and the higher levels have not issued directives, provided that these things are beneficial to the country and the people. We should allow the pilot units to continue to try out those controversial issues in the course of reform in accordance with their original reform plans provided that these issues do not go against the overall policies and principles stipulated by the central authorities and the higher levels and that they are beneficial to the development of production. All localities, particularly the central cities, should have more flexibility in organizing, regulating, and managing the economy. We should be good at using these issues to promote reform and to develop the economy.

To protect the enthusiasm of the cadres and people for reform, party and government leaders at all levels should stand in the forefront of reform and support and encourage it with a clear-cut stand. We should adhere to the following principles. First, we should commend the advanced examples who have the courage to create the new with an enterprising spirit, criticize and educate those who suppress and obstruct reform, and strictly deal with those who slander the people engaged in reform. [paragraph continues]

Second, we should adopt the method of "one dividing into two" when making appraisals of the units and persons engaged in reform to distinguish the essentials from the nonessentials. We should not give up out of fear our support to reform whenever problems, even minor ones, arise, and even blame the people who conduct reform. With regard to their mistakes in work, we should warmly help them sum up experiences and lessons and refrain from adopting an oversimplified method to make unwarranted charges against them. Mistakes in reform are permitted, but refusing to carry out reform or setting obstacles are not. Third, pertinent departments should obtain the approval of local CPC committees before they send investigation groups to ascertain the problems of the enterprises and their major responsible persons that are advanced in reform. They should first talk with directors (managers) and secretaries who are involved, and should not send investigation groups when they have basically made a clean breast of their problems. When the investigation group is necessary to clarify important problems, departments should cooperate in the investigation instead of sending investigation groups individually. When problems are clarified, they should be made known to cadres and people within a certain scope. Fourth, with regard to anonymous letters which expose problems, we should not publish them in restricted publications, or conduct investigations on them. When investigations are deemed necessary, we should first transfer the letters to the persons whose problems are exposed, listen to their appeals, and then organize personnel to conduct investigations and verification when we think that problems do exist. With regard to signed letters, we should investigate to make sure that the signed persons do exist at certain units. If the signatures are false, the letters should be treated as anonymous letters. Fifth, slanders, when investigated and verified, should be strictly dealt with. Those guilty of slander should have their criminal liabilities pursued. If the above-mentioned five principles are followed, people active in reform will have more courage to do their work.

Our advocation of and support to the enterprising spirit in reform does not mean that we can do whatever we wish. We should combine the enterprising spirit with a realistic approach. Strategically speaking, we should be brave in creating the new and fear no risks. Tactically speaking, we should be prudent, give meticulous guidance, and take sure steps to advance. When working out every plan for reform, we should conduct investigations and study and give detailed arguments. When implementing the plan, we should carry out meticulous and painstaking work, solve problems in a down-to-earth manner, and ensure realistic results. In this way, we will be able to avoid major mistakes in reform, minimize the minor ones, and guarantee the sound development of reform.

This rally is a follow-up to Shijiazhuang City's relay and implementation of the guidelines of the provincial forum on developing lateral economic cooperation, and Comrade Xing Chongzhi's speech. At this rally, Jia Ran, secretary of the Shijiazhuang City CPC Committee, gave a speech to dwell on five issues: understanding the major contradictions in the economic activities of Shijiazhuang City and enhancing the sense of urgency in eliminating poverty and achieving affluence; persistently giving top priority to reform, and mustering a powerful force to promote reform; greatly developing lateral economic cooperation; deepening the "collision and rebound style" of overall reform, continuing explorations and creating the new, and further invigorating enterprises; and proceeding from reality in doing work in a creative manner.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ON DEMOCRACY, LEGAL SYSTEM

SK080901 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 22 Jun 86 pp 1, 3

[Article by Sun Weiben, secretary of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee: "Strengthen Democracy and the Legal System and Fully Perform the Functions of Organs of State Power"]

[Text] To build socialism with Chinese characteristics in the economic field we should not only conduct reform, open to the outside world and enliven the economy but also, in the political field, we should develop socialist democracy and improve the socialist legal system. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the CPC Central Committee has adopted a series of major measures to strengthen democracy and the legal system for the purpose of both summing up and drawing lessons from the historical experiences gained since the founding of the country, and suiting the urgent needs in the new situation of reform, opening to the outside world and the four modernizations. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "Without democracy, there would be no socialism or socialist modernization." He also pointed out: "To accomplish the four modernizations, we must attend to two fields because attending to only one field will not do. Attending to two fields means that we should grasp construction with one hand, and the legal system with the other." These strategic ideas put forward by Comrade Xiaoping represent a concrete combination of the universal truth of Marxism with the practice of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, and also are an important development of the theory of the people's democratic dictatorship in new historical conditions.

In developing socialist democracy and improving the socialist legal system, the concerted efforts of the whole party and whole society are indispensable. The most essential content of socialist democracy is that "all powers belong to the people," and that the people manage the country as masters. It is necessary to perfect the socialist legal system and systematize and legalize democracy if we are to safeguard the people's democracy. The core of systematizing and legalizing democracy is to uphold the system of the People's Congress. In this sense, to improve the People's Congress system, strengthen the organization and work of the People's Congress standing committees, and fully perform the functions of the organs of the state power is the key to strengthening democracy and the legal system.

The People's Congress system is the basic political system of our country, and a democratic system to ensure that the people are masters of their own affairs, and take the destiny of the state, the nation and their own into their hands. The National People's Congress is the supreme organ of state power, and the local people's congresses at various levels are local organs of state power. It is one of our party's important tasks to strengthen the organs of state power and give full play to the role of the people's congresses and their standing committees. The People's Congress standing committees at various levels of our province have been established for more than 6 years. Generally speaking, the CPC committees in most localities have attached importance to the work of the people's congresses. Since they implemented the instructions of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee on strengthening the work of people's congresses, they have reinforced the People's Congress standing committees ideologically and organizationally and supported the local organs of state power in carrying out their work according to law.

Last winter and spring, many city, prefectural and county CPC committees held special meetings on the work of people's congresses to relay the guidelines of the provincial forum of chairmen of city and country People's Congress standing committees; study anew the relevant instructions of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee; discuss such issues as strengthening democracy and the legal system, bringing into better balance the relations between the organs of power on the one hand, and executive and judicial organs on the other, and further performing the functions of the People's Congress standing committees; sum up and exchange some good experiences; and discover where they lagged behind in ideology and work. They reached the view that due to the influence of the vestiges of feudal ideas, "leftist" ideas, and the forces of old habits, the problems of making no distinction between the administraton of party and government, replacing government administration with party administration, replacing the law with words, and replacing the law with power had yet to be completely solved; the outdated thinking, leadership, and work methods had not been completely changed; and some comrades had a weak sense of respect for democracy, the legal system, and the state and, therefore, failed to meet the needs in reform, the four modernizations, and building socialism with highly developed civilization and democracy. This fully showed that strengthening democracy and the legal system, improving the People's Congress system and fully performing the functions of the people's congresses and their standing committees are arduous long-term tasks requiring continuous hard work of the whole party. At present, we should emphasize the following five issues:

First, we should continue to properly solve ideological problems. As has been proved in the practice of various localities, whether or not the functions of local organs of state power are successfully performed is decided, to a very great extent, by whether or not we have a clear understanding of the nature, status, and functions of people's congresses and their standing committees, and, in particular, whether or not CPC committees at all levels have a clear understanding of them. At present some comrades, some leading comrades in particular, fail to note the developing trend of socialist democracy and the legal system, and agree only in words that the People's Congress work is important but in deeds do not place it in their agenda. In view of such confused ideas, therefore, we should continuously publicize the legal status of people's congresses and their standing committees and, by integrating theory with practice and citing the characteristics of the state system and the political system of our country, explain that the establishment of local People's Congress standing committees at various levels is an important reform of the state's political system and leadership system, represents a need in running the country according to law, and reflects the inexorable law of the development of the history of our country. We should make the masses of cadres and people understand clearer that building local organs of state power successfully and giving full play to their functional role have a very important significance in developing socialist democracy and improving the socialist legal system, in discussing and deciding on the major issues in various fields of their administrative areas and managing the state affairs, in strengthening the people's supervision over the personnel of state organs and eliminating bureaucracy, and in arousing and developing the people's enthusiasm and promoting the four modernizations.

Second, we should support the people's congresses and their standing committees to perform their duties according to law. Issues that should be submitted to the people's congresses and their standing committees for discussions in line with the stipulations of the Constitution and the law should be submitted to them for discussions and decisions so as to ensure their functions, powers, and responsibilities. Last year's National Party Congress put forward the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan on the basis of this proposal and submitted it to the fourth session of the Sixth NPC for discussion and approval. [paragraph continues]

In this way, the Seventh 5-Year Plan would have legal effect, and we would be more able to mobilize the people of various nationalities throughout the country to implement it. The fourth session of the sixth provincial people's congress, which concluded not long ago, also discussed and approved the draft Seventh 5-Year Plan put forward by the provincial government. The process of having the party put forward proposals, the government formulate draft plans, and the organs of state power discuss and approve them fully embodies the people's democratic right of being the masters of their own affairs and administering the state. Supporting the people's congresses and their standing committees to perform their duties according to law is an important aspect of perfecting the state system and changing the sole reliance on policies in doing work into dual reliance on policies and laws, an important measure to solve the problems of making no distinction between party and government administration and replacing government administration with party administration, and also an important means for realizing the party's political leadership in the new historical period.

Third, we should further reinforce the People's Congress standing committees organizationally. Local People's Congress standing committees at various levels are local organs of state power, and also work organs, which shoulder very heavy tasks. Therefore, we should do a good job in electing members of their leading bodies according to law. We should pay attention to electing veteran comrades with noble character, high prestige and rich experiences, and young and middle-aged cadres in the prime of life who understand and ardently love People's Congress work in order to gradually realize the ladder-shaped structure of leading bodies and maintain consistency in work. Work personnel of the organs of the People's Congress standing committees should also meet the requirement for being more revolutionary, younger, better educated and more professionally competent, and should be treated equally as the cadres of party committee and government organs in training and employment. The staffing of the organs of some city, county, and district People's Congress standing committees is not perfect enough and fails to meet the needs in work, and therefore should be replenished.

Fourth, we should attach importance and give play to the role of the people's deputies. The people's congresses are composed of the elected people's deputies. Attaching importance and giving play to the role of the people's deputies is important for the people to exercise their power of managing their own affairs and administering the country. The people's deputies are different from ordinary citizens and ordinary personnel of state organs, and the title of "people's deputy" is not honorary title. They are component members of the organs of state power at various levels, and honorable envoys of citizens for exercising the power of masters and managing important state and local affairs. In a word, the most essential characteristic that "all powers belong to the people" as stipulated in the Constitution should be embodied through the activities of the people's deputies. Because the people's deputies possess such a status, every one of them should always be aware of his responsibility entrusted by such specific legal status, and actively participate in the various activities of People's Congress organizations with a strong sense of responsibility as masters. The activities should not be limitd to meetings but should cover rich pre- and post-meeting activities, such as conducting inspections, maintaining contacts with electors, conducting investigations and study, soliciting opinions, giving publicity to the resolutions of congresses, and assisting the governments in doing work. Pre-meeting activities are preparations for the activities at the meetings, and post-meeting activities are the continuation of them. The post-meeting activities of one meeting also represent the pre-meeting activities of the next. For this reason, the activities at a meeting and those outside the meeting are supplementary to each other and consistent, and should be carried out regularly during the entire enture. [paragraph continues]

To strengthen democracy and the legal system and peform the functions of the organs of state power, the people's congresses and their standing committees at various levels have to carry out their work in many fields, of which the core is to organize well the regular activities of the people's deputies and help them exercise their duties and powers in their own election districts and units. The deputies' right to vote at congresses is based on the great amount of investigations and study and the opinions of the masses of various fields conducted and solicited before the congress, and is exercised according to the electors' will. The regular activities of the deputies are very important to ensuring the accuracy of the policy decisions of every congress. When the quality of the activities of the deputies improves, the people's congresses will play an increasingly prominent and greater role in strengthening democracy and the legal system. These two are directly proportioned. Party and government organizations at all levels should provide the necessary guarantee and convenience for the regular activities of the deputies. The first is the legal guarantee, such as that for the personal rights, freedom of speech and full expression of the will of the deputies. The second is to provide necessary material conditions for the deputies to exercise their responsibility and duties. The third is that the personnel of state organs, social organizations, enterprises and establishments should regard it as their obligation to actively provide the actual situations to the people's deputies. In this way, the people's deputies will be able to fully and accurately report the actual situation in the work of various fields, reflect at the congresses the people's true desires and demands, and ensure the accuracy and the feasibility of the policy decisions of the congresses. Throughout the province there are more than 120,000 people's deputies who are distributed over all fronts and living among the masses. They are the people who have the clearest understanding of whether or not the party policies, state laws, and People's Congress resolutions are implemented at the grass roots, and of the people's opinions and desires. With their role fully played, we will be able to throb with the pulse of the masses in a timely manner, reduce mistakes in our work, and make all our undertakings more successful in line with the people's will.

Fifth, party organizations, the party's leading cadres, and party members should take the lead in enforcing the law and acting according to law. The Constitution stipulates: "The people of various nationalities throughout the country, all state organs and armed forces, all political parties and social organizations, and all enterprises and establishments should regard the Constitution as the basic criterion for their activities, and they shoulder the responsibility for safegarding the dignity of the Constitution and ensuring its implementation." The party Constitution stipulates: "The party should carry out its activities within the framework of the Constitution and the law," and party members should "take the initiative in abiding by party discipline and state law." Ours is a ruling party. If party organizations at all levels, the party's leading cadres, and every party member act according to such requirements, there will be a guarantee for socialist democracy and legal system. The present problem is that in our actual life, the phenomena that the law is not abided by and strictly enforced and that lawbreakers are not duly punished are not few, and violations of legal procedures in appointing and removing cadres also occur frequently. This dampens the enthusiasm of the people's deputies and committee members for discussing politics, impedes the performance of the functions of local organs of state power, and damages the prestige of local organs of state power. Party and government organs at all levels should attach importance to such problems and resolutely solve them. Party leadership is totally in keeping with, instead of being against, acting according to law, which will not weaken party leadership but will improve and strengthen party leadership. Comrade Peng Zhen recently pointed out: Some people ask "whether it is the party or the law which is more powerful." The answer to this question is actually very clear. The party leads the people in formulating the Constitutions and the law, it again leads the people in abiding by and enforcing the Constitution and the law, and it should also carry out its activities within the framework of the Constitution and the law. If the situation is otherwise in China, socialist democracy and legal system will be out of the question.

NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT SEMINAR OPENS 14 JUL

Yu Spells Out Goals

OW142117 Taipei CNA in English 1031 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hwa said Monday the Republic of China [ROC] aims at more than becoming a developed nation before the turn of the century.

"What we are after is not limited to quadrupling over per capita income in the next 14 years. More importantly, we want to develop a higher quality of life," Yu said at the opening session of the 1986 National Development Seminar.

The theme of this year's development seminar is "Marching toward the rank of developed nations."

Yu said the Republic of China will march toward the goal of a modern society across the board in a rational and orderly manner.

Vowing not to let Peiping challenge the survival of free China, the premier declared, "On the contrary, we will share the fruits of development with our 1 billion compatriots on the mainland."

Yu recalled that the ROC was called "backward country" only three decades ago. From that lowly position it rose to become a "developing nation" and is now termed one of the "newly industrializing nations." Furthermore, Yu noted, the Republic of China has been singled out as one of the major targets of trade protectionism, revealing the extent of progress here.

Yu said progress was achieved here not because the nation has rich resources but because it has a free, democratic and stable political system, because its 19 million people are hard working patriots and because the country has the support of Overseas Chinese communities all over the world.

President Chiang Ching-kuo also sent a message to the opening meeting of the seminar hailing the participants for their achievements in their respective fields. Chiang said that as the nation is entering a new stage of development, the government needs their advice in carrying out development programs. The president urged them to take advantage of the meeting to play an part in the great tasks facing the nation.

Discussions at this year's seminar will center on drawing up a blueprint for economic development up to the year 2000.

Of the 215 participants to the seminar, 134 are from overseas and 81 are local scholars and experts. Among the overseas participants, 107 are from the United States, 11 from Europe, 5 from Canada, 8 from Japan, and one each from South Korea, Hong Kong and the Philippines.

The government started sponsoring the annual seminar in 1972.

Chiang Cites 'Blueprint' for Future

OW142123 Taipei CNA in English 1354 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo of the Republic of China said Monday that now is the time for this nation to step up efforts to bring the three principles of the people to the Chinese mainland.

In a written message read at the opening ceremony of the 1986 National Development Seminar at the Asiaworld Plaza Hotel in downtown Taipei, President Chiang said that the government based in the national recovery bastion of Taiwan has made vigorous efforts to promote national development in the past 30-odd years and "has created a bueprint for the future of China."

"Judging from the achievements we have made, the nation is capable of placing itself in the ranks of the developed countries in the near future," President Chiang said.

This year's seminar, with the theme of "advancing into the ranks of the developed nations," is aimed at pooling together the wisdom of domestic and Overseas Chinese experts and scholars to map out the modernization of the nation, President Chiang said.

In addition to lauding the patriotism of the participants in the meeting, President Chiang praised the achievements of the last several national development seminars, saying they have made great contributions to the development of the nation.

President Chiang said that he hopes that the participants will offer still more concrete suggestions in the next few days of discussions to make this seminar a success.

Commentary Praises Seminar

OW142140 Taipei CNA in English 1427 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- The following is a commentary by the Broadcasting Corporation of China (BCC) in Taipei entitled "Collective Wisdom for Nat'l Development":

The 1986 National Development Seminar opened in Taipei today with 215 Chinese scholars attending. The theme of the meeting is "Marching toward the rank of developed nations." It is a pertinent theme, as the Republic of China [ROC] on Taiwan is well on its way to becoming a developed nation.

During the next 12 days, the discussants will deliberate on these topics -- strategies for development in agriculture, industry and services, education and manpower, society and culture, technology, capital and money market development, regional development, planning of an overall transportation system on Taiwan and the information industry and telecommunications.

The participants, including 194 men and 21 women, are well equipped for the tasks assigned to them. This is evident in the fact that all of them have received postgraduate training, including 155 PH.D's. Nearly two thirds of the participants are expatriates residing in the United States. They all hold teaching or research posts abroad. Some of them are senior executives in foreign companies. Their participation in the seminar testifies that they have not forgot their mother country.

The expertise of the seminar participants is very much needed in the Republic of China, which is a front-runner among the newly industrializing countries [NIC] racing to join the rank of developed countries. The topmost task of the nation at this moment is to solve the problems resulting from the transition from the NIC status to that of a fully developed economy.

The National Development Seminar, initiated in 1979 following the U.S. derecognition of free China, has been held annually. By pooling the collective wisdom of Chinese scholars at home and abroad for the sake of national development, the ROC Government has acquired a huge think tank.

Until 1985, the annual meeting had dealt with all aspects of national affairs ranging from diplomacy to public health. As most of the problems discussed have been attended to, the emphasis was shifted to national economy last year.

A strong economy is the kind of stuff that gives impetus to progress on all fronts. According to a long-range official projection, free China will have decidedly become a developed nation with a per capita annual income of 13,000 U.S. dollars by the end of the century.

The attainment of this goal will not only ensure free China's continued survival in freedom but will also have a profound impact on the future of China as a whole, as the Taiwan success story will surely inspire the people on the Chinese mainland to adopt the democratic system of free China in place of the bankrupt Marxist-Leninist model.

ECONOMICS MINISTRY CITES FOREIGN INVESTOR FIGURES

OW142150 Taipei CNA in English 1511 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- The Ministry of Economic Affairs of the Republic of China has approved 99 investment applications by Overseas Chinese and foreigners in the first half of this year, with total investment summing up to U.S. dollar 245 million, Economics Ministry officials said Monday.

The officials quoted the statistics compiled by the Investment Commission under the ministry as showing that the electronics and electric appliances manufacturing industries were at the lead of the investment applications, followed by machinery equipment, metal manufacturing, sefvices, and chemical manufacturing.

Japanese investment applications topped U.S. dollar 92 million, the biggest group among all the investors, the officials said.

Trying to seize the opportunity presented by the Japanese yen's appreciation against the U.S. dollar, a mission headed by Hsu Kuo-an, director of the Industrial Development Bureau under the ministry will leave here for Japan in late July to invite more Japanese investments here.

PRC LEADERSHIP SPLIT OVER DAYA BAY NUCLEAR PLANT

HK140242 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 14 Jul 86 p 1

["Exclusive" by David Chen]

[Text] Serious differences have broken out in China's top leadership over the Daya Bay nuclear plant issue, with one vice-premier fully committed to it and another firmly opposed, according to diplomatic circles.

Outwardly, China has given the impression that the project, less than 50 kilometres from Hong Kong, is to proceed as planned, in spite of widespread opposition from the Hong Kong community.

However, it is understood that the two vice-premiers, Mr Li Peng and Mr Tian Jiyun, hold opposing views on whether the plant should be built at Daya Bay.

As yet, the differences have not come into the open. Analysts believe both Mr Li and Mr Tian are in the running for the premiership and Daya Bay, as well as another colossal energy project, the Three Gorges hydro-electric complex, have become controversial issues on which they base their political arguments.

Mr Li and those in the energy field are strongly in favour of the nuclear plant, arguing that three years of survey work proved that the site was suitable, and that with Chinese expertise and foreign help, safety is fully ensured.

They argue that to back down from the project would be bad for China's prestige.

Mr Li has visited Daya Bay on several occasions to lend his personal support to the project.

But Mr Tian -- a financial expert more attuned to the country's rural and urban reforms -- and his supporters hold the opposing view, arguing that China has adequate energy sources to meet its modernisation programs.

He is, however, less vocal, sources said, and gives his views only in closed-door sessions.

Those supporting Mr Li are mostly technologists, plus those who champion speedy economic reforms.

Support for the nuclear stations received a major morale boost at a recent national conference on science and technology, when scientists stressed that nuclear stations, particularly those designed by China, are safe.

Those who oppose the plant appear to be a mixed group, offering varying reasons for their position.

Indications of the rift became public last week when the local leftwing magazine, MIRROR, suggested in an editorial that China might reconsider relocating the nuclear plant at Daya Bay.

The editorial summarised the arguments both for and against the siting of the plant at Daya Bay, but called on the Chinese authorities to examine the issue "with the greatest caution.'At a time when the antinuclear wave is raging throughout advanced countries, it would be most unwise to show interest in the claim that "French technology is safer than Soviets'," it said.

If such a plant was built with French technology and if an accident did occur, this argument would mean that the superiority of French technology was without question -- so the fault might lie in China's poor management skill.

The editorial said while there should not be arguments as to the establishment of nuclear power stations, this should not be the decisive factor in establishing a plant at Daya Bay.

The editorial advised the Chinese leadership not to overlook the views of Hong Kong people when making the Daya Bay plant decision.

HONG KONG ANTINUCLEAR PETITION SIGNED BY 700,000

HK140250 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 14 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] An unprecedented 700,000 Hong Kong people have signed a petition against the construction of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant, a campaigner said last night.

In the second wave of a massive signature campaign yesterday, 300,000 people added their names, said a spokesman for the Joint Conference for the Shelving of the Daya Bay Nuclear Plant.

Mr Lau Chin-shek said the signatures would be presented, together with 400,000 gathered in an earlier campaign, to the Chinese Government, the Hong Kong Government and the China Light and Power Company.

These signatures would put great pressure on the authorities concerned to make them give the nuclear project second thoughts.

"This is the first time in Hong Kong history that more than 700,000 people have signed up to support a campaign," he said.

"The signatories come from all strata of society and represent the common wish of Hong Kong people," he added.

Mr Lau pointed out that 700,000 was only an initial figure. There would be more in the next few days when signatures returned through the post.

The joint conference, which organised the signature campaigns, comprises more than 100 labour, environmental, education and religious organisations.

About 1,000 members went to all the Mass Transit Railway and Kowloon-Canton Railway stations at 9 am yesterday to collect signatures.

They brought along banners and posters which called for a safe and unpolluted living environment.

Stickers with the words "We want sunshine, not nuclear power" were also handed out to passers-by.

The campaign ended at 10 pm yesterday.

Meanwhile, an Eastern District Board member is planning to conduct a large-scale survey to find out how Hong Kong people view the construction of the nuclear plant.

PRC ATTEMPTS DOMINATION OF HONG KONG GOLD MARKET

HK130334 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 1

[By Stephen Morgan]

[Text] China unloaded more than 10 tonnes of gold bullion, valued at over $850 million, in the first four months of this year in what some bullion dealers see as a covert attempt to dominate the local gold market.

This year's imports are a dramatic 375-fold increase over the insignificant $2.27 million worth exported to Hong Kong in the whole of last year.

Some local observers believe the gold sell-off is directly related to the poor state of China's foreign exchange reserves, which are just above the psychological US$10 billion barrier.

Most of the gold bullion or bar arrived in March ($157.81 million) and April ($692.59 million). The May trade statistics, to be released shortly, are expected to show China's gold exports to Hong Kong reaching $1 billion.

These are the largest amounts of gold brought into Hong Kong from China since the bullion trade began to grow in the 1980's: nothing was imported in 1980, and in 1981 there was a mere 15 kg, valued at $1.34 million.

Observers in the bullion and banking industry here are startled by the sudden and massive increase in gold bullion coming from China into a local market already oversupplied.

Although opinions are divided on what China is trying to do -- none wanted to be quoted for fear of jeopardising their relations with China -- much of the gold is believed to have orginated from small, new mines in the Guangdong and Guizhou provinces.

Gold production has been expanded rapidly in an attempt to earn hard currency needed for China's modernisation. Recent press reports state the government has allocated more than 300 million yuan to boost mining this year.

Taking over the Hoing Kong gold market, say some bullion dealers, would enable China to make deals away from prying eyes in the major markets of Europe and North America.

Moreover, it is well known that China has been unloading a lot of gold on the London and Zurich gold markets to raise foreign exchange to meet its huge trade deficit -- variously put at US$7 billion to US$14 billion, depending on whether trade or customs statistics are used.

"We know that China's gold production has increased, and given that they are desperate for foreign exchange it makes sense for them to export gold to any hard currency area," said economics professor YC Yao of the University of Hong Kong.

Added a bullion dealer: "Coming into Hong Kong can be a discreet way of marketing that new gold without anyone knowing. If they go into a market in the States or Europoe, everyone knows."

None of the China gold has been touched by any of the major international bullion houses contacted by the SUNDAY STANDARD. It seems to be firmly in the hands of the Po Sang Bank.

One dealer said that Po Sang had invested in new mines in Guangdong and had a shipment of gold into Hong Kong every week.

He described the Bank of China in its gold dealings as "a very sophisticated outfit" of which the Po Sang Bank is the Local Marketing arm.

This specialisation is directly behind Po Sang's good performance last year which saw earnings up 22.6 percent to $60.6 million and deposits more than double to $3.74 billion.

The managing director of Po Sang, Mr Fong Chi-king, said he had no knowledge of the source of the gold. "Hong Kong is an international gold market and just because we are major dealers that doesn't mean we control the gold from China," he told the SUNDAY STANDARD.

A spokesman for the Bank of China referred any enquiry to the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, but the propaganda department was sheltering from Typhoon Peggy and not available for comment.

PORTUGAL FORMS INTERMINISTERIAL COMMITTEE ON MACAO

HK130332 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 2

[By Leonel Borralho]

[Text] Following a meeting of the National Council of Ministers, in Lisbon, on matters relating to Macao, the Portuguese government has decided to form an "interministerial committee" under the President, Dr Mario Soares, to follow the talks on the territory of Macao.

The committee, according to a document available to THE STANDARD, "will be flexible enough to permit it to adopt, instantaneously, the emergency necessities during the talks".

The new committee is, according to the document, under the Foreign Ministry, but it can be also come under any other ministry and organ that have a connection with the "territory of Macao".

The body comes under the "orientation of the Foreign Ministry" to coordinate and adopt measures during the talks on the future of Macao.

Prof Rui Medina, the leader of the Portuguese team that held the first round of talks in Beijing recently, told THE STANDARD in the Chinese capital, that an "ad hoc committee" will be formed to look into Macao's affairs and to follow closely the talks on its future.

"There are more than ample reasons for us to be optimistic regarding the future of Macao," Prof Pinto Machado, the Governor of Macao, said in Lisbon after talking to the Portuguese Prime Minister, Mr Cavaco e Silva.

He added: "There are favourable indications that China recognises the importance of the Portuguese administration in Macao".

Prof Machado raised some optimism among the Macanese population when he assured them, in Lisbon, that "the future of Macao will be rightly orientated and with care".

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

China

Vol I No 136 16 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

Foreign Ministry Holds Weekly News Briefing A 1
    No Direct Comment on SRV's New Leader [AFP] A 1
    Denies Indian 'Incursion' Charges A 1
    Japanese Textbook 'Hardly Satisfactory' A 2
    Nepal Foreign Minister To Visit A 2
BEIJING REVIEW on U.S.-Soviet Arms Talks [14 Jul] A 3

UNITED STATES

Brzezinski on Closer Sino-U.S. Relations B 1
    Talks With Li Peng B 2
Sino-American Yangtze River Expedition Sets Out B 2
PRC-U.S. Jointly-Produced Film Premieres in U.S. B 2
U.S. Agreement To Discuss SALT II 'Conditional' B 3
Fang Yi Meets With U.S. University President B 3

SOVIET UNION

Soviet Union Agrees to Nuclear Test Monitoring C 1
Soviet Scientists on Nuclear Test Verification C 1

NORTHEAST ASIA

DPRK Delegation Ends Treaty Celebration Visit D 1
CPPCC Official Meets Japanese Youth Delegation D 1

SOUTH ASIA

India To Acquire Soviet MiG-29 Fighters F 1
Zhao Ziyang Greets New Bangladesh Prime Minister F 1
Fang Yi Meets Indian Scientists Delegation F 1

WESTERN EUROPE

Further Reportage on Zhao Ziyang's European, Africa Tour G 1
    No Nuclear First Strike by PRC [CHINA DAILY 16 Jul] G 1
    Visits Spanish Royal Palace G 2
    Spain's King, Queen Host Luncheon G 2
    Meets Spanish Business Leader G 3

- XINHUA Reports UK Naval Visit to Shanghai G 4
  - PRC, UK Naval Officers Meet G 4
  - British Warships End Visit G 5
- XINHUA on Turkey's Five U.S. Nuclear Bases G 5
- Qiao Shi Receives Austrian Interior Minister G 5

EASTERN EUROPE

- SFRY Foreign Minister Forecasts Nonaligned Summit H 1
- Poland To Carry Out Further Economic Reforms H 1

MIDDLE EAST & AFRICA

- Oman Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Visits PRC I 1
  - Interviewed on Visit I 1
  - Holds Talks With Wu Xueqian I 1
  - Meets With Wan Li I 2
  - Hosts Return Banquet I 2
- Lebanese President, PRC Envoy Discuss UNIFIL I 3
- Lebanese Official To Visit PRC, E. Europe I 3
- Olympic Committee Fetes PDRY Sports Delegation I 3
- Soviet Union Provides Military Aid to YAR I 3
- Analysis on Jordan's Closing PLO Offices I 4

WESTERN HEMISPHERE

- Deputy Foreign Minister Zhu Qizhen in Cuba J 1
  - Ends Visit, Leaves for Home J 1
- Hu Qili Meets Bolivian 'Left Revolution' Leader J 1
- PRC, Canada Develop Agricultural Cooperation J 2

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

- 'Political Bureau' Member Wang Zhen Writes Inscription K 1
- Typhoon Kills 172, Injures 1,250 in Guangdong K 1
- Threat From 'Secret Societies' Examined [NONGMIN RIBAO 27 Jun] K 1
- HONGQI Denies Split Between Reformers, Conservatives K 4
- RENMIN RIBAO on Household Industry in Wenzhou [8 Jul] K 5
- GUANGMING RIBAO on Reform, Political Structure [30 Jun] K 9
- JINGJI RIBAO on Enterprise Bankruptcy System [5 Jul] K 13
  - Bankruptcy Law Urged [JINGJI RIBAO 5 Jul] K 16
- Commentator on Role of Certified Accountants [RENMIN RIBAO 11 Jul] K 17
- BAN YUE TAN on Major Construction Projects [25 Jun] K 18
- BAN YUE TAN Views Grain Purchase Contracts [25 Jun] K 21
- Ministers Exchange Views on Cooperation K 22
  - RENMIN RIBAO Urges Consultation [12 Jul] K 23

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

- Chen Guangyi Attends Fujian CYL Meeting O 1
- Jiangxi Transfers Militia to Local Authorities O 1

- Shandong Replacement of Officials Announced O 2
  - Secretary General, Department Heads [DAZHONG RIBAO 29 Jun] O 2
  - People's Procuratorate Personnel [DAZHONG RIBAO 29 Jun] O 2
  - Higher People's Court [DAZHONG RIBAO 29 Jun] O 2
- Shandong Meeting on Legal Knowledge Ends O 2
- Shandong Provincial Forum on Party Style Ends O 4
- Zhejiang City Model of Household Industry Growth [CHINA DAILY 10 Jul] O 5

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

- Guangdong Meeting Discusses Rural Party Rectification P 1
- Henan Conference Discusses Public Order P 1
- Hunan Leaders Visit Red Army Veteran P 2
- Hunan Meeting on Placing Demobilized Army Cadres P 2
- Hunan Commends Discipline Inspection Units, Cadres P 3

SOUTHWEST REGION

- Sichuan Reforms Foreign Affairs Management Setup Q 1
- Sichuan Leaders Meet Returned Taiwan Pilot Q 1
- Chongqing CPC Committee Views Problems in Reforms Q 1
- Chongqing Scores Success in Financial Reform Q 2
- Xizang's Wu Jinghua at Satellite Station Ceremony Q 3
- Wu Jinghua Meets Chinese Red Cross Delegation Q 3
- Xizang Leader Discusses Religion Issue Q 3

NORTHWEST REGION

- Gansu Leader on Problems in Plant Manager System T 1
- Qinghai Meeting on Rural Party Rectification T 1
- Xinjiang People's Congress Meeting Ends 8 July T 3
- Xinjiang Namelist of Appointments, Removals T 4

TAIWAN

- Foreign Minister Addresses Development Seminar V 1
  - Reaffirms Basic National Policy V 1
  - Says Communists Still Prohibited V 1
- Vice Chief of General Staff Addresses Seminar V 2
  - Taiwan Can Surveil West Pacific V 2
  - New Fighter, Other Weapons Designed V 2
- Yu Encourages Armed Forces To Maintain Excellence V 3

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

- Commentary on PRC's Devaluation of Renminbi W 1
  - Extent of Action Examined [SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul] W 1
  - Planners Seek To Ease Restrictions [SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul] W 3
  - Effects on Investment Feared [SUNDAY STANDARD 13 Jul] W 4
- Calls for Political Reform Increasing in PRC [TA KUNG PAO 13 Jul] W 6
- Daya Bay Clash Between Top PRC Leaders Examined [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 14 Jul] W 8

FOREIGN MINISTRY HOLDS WEEKLY NEWS BRIEFING

No Direct Comment on SRV's New Leader

HK160300 Hong Kong AFP in English 0237 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (AFP) -- China declined direct comment Wednesday on the change of leadership in Vietnam, saying only that its main concern was that Hanoi alter its policies concerning Cambodia.

"What we are concerned about is that the Vietnamese authorities change their wrong policy on the question of Cambodia," a Foreign Ministry spokesman said in response to questions about Beijing's view on Truong Chinh's appointment as Vietnam's top leader.

Truoug Chinh, head of the State Council, was named Monday to succeed the late Le Duan as head of the Communist Party. The spokesman declined further comment.

Analysts noted that the response stressed China's top concern in its relations with Vietnam without closing off the possibility that the leadership change would result in some policy shift in Hanoi.

The former allies have frequently exchanged artillery attacks on their common border since China briefly invaded Vietnam in 1979 to "teach Hanoi a lesson" after Vietnamese troops rolled into Cambodia, ousting the pro-Beijing Khmer Rouge.

Denies Indian 'Incursion' Charges

OW161038 Beijing XINHUA in English 1020 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman rejected here today the "unjustified protest" by India against alleged incursion into Indian territory by Chinese frontier personnel.

Some journalists quoted remarks made by an Indian Foreign Ministry official who said that the Indian side lodged a strong protest last month with the Chinese side against the incursion by the Chinese frontier personnel into Indian territory in the area of Sumdorong Valley vicinity in the eastern sector of the Sino-Indian border. They asked the spokesman to comment on it.

At the weekly press briefing here this afternoon, the spokesman said, the Sumdorong Valley vicinity has always been Chinese territory. "It is not only well north of the Sino-Indian traditional customary boundary, but also located on the Chinese side of the line of actual control in the eastern sector of the Sino-Indian boundary," he said.

The Chinese frontier personnel, he told the press, "while on routine patrols in their own territory, did not at all cross the line of actual control between the two sides by a single step. Therefore, the question of intrusion into the Indian territory by Chinese personnel simply doesn't arise."

Over many years in the past, the spokesman pointed out, the Indian personnel in the above-mentioned area have constantly crossed the line of actual control between the two sides, nibbling at and expanding into the Chinese territory.

He said, "The Chinese side has taken a much restrained attitude in order to maintain peace at the border. As is known to all, the Sino-Indian boundary has never ben formally delimited. The so-called 'McMahon Line' is illegal and null and void, and has been recognized by none of the successive central governments of China."

Even judging from the original sketch of the illegal "McMahon Line", the Sumdorong Valley vicinity is located on the north of it, he said, adding that the Indian side has completely distorted the facts.

Japanese Textbook 'Hardly Satisfactory'

OW161050 Beijing XINHUA in English 1033 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today that the approved final version of the new Japanese history textbook is "hardly satisfactory."

Responding to a question at the weekly news briefing, the spokesman pointed out that the textbook "deliberately covers up the basic fact that the Japanese militarists launched the war of aggression against its neighbouring countries and evades the responsibility that the Japanese militarists should bear in its description of some historical events."

He said, on July 7 Japanese Ambassador to China Yosuke Nakae gave a briefing and explanation to Vice-Foreign Minister Liu Shuqing on the outcome of the final examination and approval of the new Japanese history textbook.

"We have taken note of the efforts made by the Japanese Government and removal or revision of a number of obviously erroneous narrations in the textbook. However, the textbook does not have a sound keynote," he noted.

The essence of the question of textbook is whether a correct approach is taken towards that part of history, he stressed. This has always been an important matter of principle in Sino-Japanese relations. Regrettably, however, certain Japanese quarters have failed to treat this question in a serious manner as far as the new Japanese history is concerned.

Nepal Foreign Minister To Visit

OW161044 Beijing XINHUA in English 1017 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Shailendra Kumar Upadhyaya, minister of foreign affairs of Nepal,, will pay a goodwill visit to China from July 31 to August 6 at the invitation of his Chinese counterpart Wu Xueqian, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman announced at the weekly news briefing here today.

Since China and Nepal established diplomatic relations 31 years ago, the spokesman said, friendly cooperation between the two countries has been strengthened in the fields of politics, economy, trade and culture. Particularly in recent years, he said, personnel exchanges have increased, and tourism and cooperation in trade have expanded rapidly between China's Tibet Autonomous Region and Nepal.

Upadhyaya's forthcoming visit to China is expected to help promote the mutual understanding and further develop the friendly relations between the two countries, the spokesman said.

BEIJING REVIEW ON U.S.-SOVIET ARMS TALKS

OW151113 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 14 Jul 86 p 8

[By Zhang Liang]

[Text] The fifth round of U.S.-Soviet arms talks ended on June 26 after 50 days of discussion, with the Soviet Union putting forward a new disarmament proposal. U.S. President Ronald Reagan said that the new Soviet offer could herald serious efforts on the part of the Soviets to cut down on arms and could be "a turning point" in the arms talks.

The Soviet proposal includes a 15-year mutual commitment to the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty, and limitation on U.S. Strategic Defensive Initiative (SDI) research. Furthermore, the proposal calls for reductions in offensive weapons, including land-based intercontiental missiles, submarine-based missiles and heavy bombers. These would be kept at an equal level while their carriers would be cut to 1,600 and warheads to 8,000. The proposal states that the settlement on the issue of medium-ranged missiles would not be linked to that of the above weapons.

The Moscow offer is widely viewed as a sign of change in the series of Soviet arms control proposals previously put forward. Although consistently opposing Ronald Reagan's "Star-Wars" scheme, the Kremlin now has given up its insistence on the U.S. abandonment of the programme as a precondition to the reduction of strategic nuclear weapons, and would allow the United States some laboratory research. Moreover, with its proposals on cutting down on long-range missiles and bombers, the Soviets have cast away their requirement that U.S medium-ranged missiles and bombers in Europe and aircraft carriers be included as strategic weapons. But they did demand a 15-year commitment to the ABM treaty on both sides, indicating their aim to slow the United States in its development of strategic defense weapons.

Western observers were surprised by the Soviet offer, made soon after Reagan announced his intention to ignore the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty II (SALT II). Many believe the proposal was meant to continue U.S.-Soviet arms talks, limit as much as possible the development of SDI and preserve the existence of ABM treaty, which would be endangered with the cancellation of SALT II. Furthermore, the Soviet Union's move would demonstrate to the world its flexibility in approaching arms control and win it time in order to keep itself in line with the United States in strategic forces.

The U.S. response to the Soviet proposal was unexpectedly positive. But at closer look, the reasons become clear. Moscow's proposal conforms with Washington's view that there is no link between the reduction of strategic weapons and SDI, and that SDI does not violate the ABM treaty. Moreover, the Reagan administration has been under heavy pressure from congress at home and Western allies abroad ever since it declared it would not stand by SALT II. Therefore, its ready approval of the Soviet offer will deliver it from the present unfavourable situation and help it go on bargaining with Moscow. Reagan doesn't want to ask for trouble as mid-term congressional elections are approaching.

Yet, it is generally believed that the positive posturing of the two countries has so far only created a reconciled atmosphere, while in fact neither knows for sure what sort of arms reductions will be accepted. In fact, it is hard to imagine the two superpowers coming to any formal agreement at this point. The Kremlin is preoccupied with its request for U.S. commitment to the ABM treaty for at least 15 years, and hopes to curb SDI research. The White House, on the other hand, has stressed the need for amendments to the Soviet proposal before it would be accepted.

BRZEZINSKI ON CLOSER SINO-U.S. RELATIONS

OW151922 Beijing XINHUA in English 1217 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Former assistant to the U.S. President for national security affairs Zbigniew Brzezinski said today that in recent years the American-Chinese relationship -- which enjoys widespread and bipartisan support in the United States -- has become mature and comprehensive. Speaking at a meeting attended by more than 400 Chinese scholars and specialists on international affairs, and diplomats, Brzezinski said, "We can expect our cooperation to widen as China's ambitious and historically significant modernization program gains momentum. And the United States will undoubtedly play a substantial role in China's efforts through trade and transfers of technology."

China's global weight and power affect the overall international balance, while its geostrategic position is critical to the independence and security of the Far East periphery of the Eurasian landmass, he stressed. This is why the American-Chinese relationship plays such a vital role in the preservation of Eurasia's political balance, he noted.

He held that the "friendship" is not an alliance, but involves the recognition that their shared interests are more important than their various differences. "Our friendship is not only in the joint interests of our two countries, but also in the interests of Japan and Western Europe, both of which also oppose the domination of Eurasia by any single power. All that in turn gives our relationship also its global geopolitical significance," he pointed out.

On the Taiwan question, he said America respects the determination of the Chinese people to work out this problem in a peaceful fashion and in their own way. Most Americans, he said, appreciate China's recent free-exchange initiatives for trade, communications, and family contacts across the Taiwan Straits, which he called "a positive development."

On arms control, he said any agreement must involve progress in several aspects. An agreement must reduce the number of strategic warheads with a first-strike capability below the number of targets that it would be necessary for either side to destroy in a first strike. Besides, it must effectively exclude the further modernization of all strategic systems, he said.

He expected that there would be a chance for a U.S.-Soviet summit in December this year. However, there should be no preconditions. He predicted that the most that can be obtained from such a summit are some limited and interim arrangements in regard to arms control, but not a "comprehensive, wide-ranging, very ambitious new arms control agreement". "More likely, specific aspects will be selected for some partial progress, which will be presented to the public as a significant outcome," he said.

Brzezinski also stressed the importance of the Afghan issue by saying that the future of Afghanistan has become not a local but a wider regional issue, which has an impact on the future of Pakistan and Iran. To settle the Afghan issue, he called for more external aid to the Afghan resistance, greater efforts to publicize the issue and a sustained diplomatic effort for a political solution to the war. He pointed out that the guiding formula in pursuing a peaceful settlement of the issue should be one that guarantees the external neutralization and the internal self-determination of Afghanistan.

Talks With Li Peng

OW151116 Beijing XINHUA in English 0946 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Foreign trade has been "very important to China's economic development," Vice-Premier Li Peng told Zbigniew Brzezinski, former U.S. President Jimmy Carter's national security assistant, at a meeting today. Still, Li said, foreign trade and investment have not been "decisive" in the development process. "Ultimately, China relies mainly on its own resources" and produces more than 80 percent of the equipment it needs, he said.

However, he explained, for development to continue at current rates there must be an end to its foreign trade deficit with such countries as the United States and Japan. "If this kind of trade deficit exists for a long period, trade volume for both sides will drop," he said. "So China hopes Western countries will import more of its products."

China's policy of opening to the outside world, its imports of advanced foreign technology and its economic growth all depend "to a great extent" on balanced foreign trade, said Li.

China uses a barter system in trade with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, he said. "That way revenues and expenditures are balanced for both sides," he explained. Li also exchanged views with Brzezinski on issues of common concern.

SINO-AMERICAN YANGTZE RIVER EXPEDITION SETS OUT

OW150624 Beijing XINHUA in English 0611 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- A 27-member Sino-U.S. expedition team is now on its way for the source of the Yangtze River in the Geladaindong Mountain in Ginghai Province, northwest China, and then nine of them will try to sail down China's longest river, according to a cable arriving here today.

They set out yesterday morning from the base camp on the bank of the Tuotuo River, a source of the Upper Yangtze River, for the Geladaindong, the cable said. They will stay at the Geladaindong Mountain for 12 days, and then boat down to Yibin City in Sichuan Province.

The whole journey covers 3,200 kilometers and will take 75 days. The team will shoot a two-hour documentary film about its expedition and the landscapes of the area, the traditions and customs of the people living along the Yangtze River.

PRC-U.S. JOINTLY-PRODUCED FILM PREMIERES IN U.S.

OW121150 Beijing XINHUA in English 0808 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 11 (XINHUA) -- "A Great Wall", the first feature film jointly financed and produced by the United States and China, made its debut here today.

A comedy, the movie describes how a Chinese-born American computer engineer, after failing to get a promotion, takes his American-born wife and son to visit his relatives in Beijing.

The movie depicts the generation gap as well as the cultural differences between Americans, Chinese-Americans and Chinese. Most of its scenes were shot in Beijing and the portrayal of the life of ordinary Beijing residents is very real. THE WASNINGTON POST praised the movie for its combination of "old world inscrutability and yankee ingenuity" and its amusing dialogue.

"A Great Wall" has also been shown in San Francisco, New York, Boston and other cities.

U.S. Agreement To Discuss SALT II 'Conditional'

OW152118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1533 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 15 (XINHUA) -- The United States has agreed to a Soviet proposal for a special meeting next week to discuss President Ronald Reagan's decision to abandon the SALT II Treaty, according to press reports here today. But the White House has mad the meeting conditional on Soviet agreement that other issues, including alleged Soviet violations of the treaty, could be raised.

White House spokesman Edward Dijereijian said yesterday that President Reagan "has completed his examination" of the Soviet request for a special meeting on his controversial SALT II decision, and "we have communicated with the Soviet Union through diplomatic channels." He refused to say whether the Soviet request had been accepted or rejected. But another government official, who demanded anonymity, told the press that Reagan had agreed to a meeting on July 22.

Reagan announced on May 27 that the United States will no longer be bound by the SALT II Treaty by the end of the year because the treaty was "deeply flawed" and had been violated by the Soviet Union.

Moscow criticised Reagan's decision and sought a meeting of the standing consultative commission, joint Soviet-U.S. group established in 1972 to monitor the SALT agreements, to get a U.S. clarification.

The U.S. approval of the meeting was seen here as the latest in a series of attempts by the Reagan administration to send positive signals to Moscow concerning arms control and American desires for a second summit meeting.

FANG YI MEETS WITH U.S. UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT

OW151544 Beijing XINHUA in English 1200 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese State Councillor Fang Yi discussed educational cooperation here today with Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of the University of Notre Dame, in the United States. The University of Notre Dame has received more than 70 Chinese visiting scholars and students in the past few years.

Hesburgh and his colleagues came here as guests of the Chinese Academy of Sciences. They have held talks with Chinese departments concerned on matters related to China's joining of the newly established international advisory board for the Notre Dame's Institute for International Peace Study and the acceptance of three Chinese students at the institute.

SOVIET UNION AGREES TO NUCLEAR TEST MONITORING

OW152014 Beijing XINHUA in English 1434 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 15 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has agreed to the monitoring of all nuclear tests, including on-spot monitoring, Soviet Foreign Ministry Spokesman Gennady Gerasimov said today. Gerasimov said that monitors have been set up around the nuclear test areas in the Soviet Union. Now no nuclear test can avoid the monitors, he said, adding that his country will also monitor U.S. nuclear tests.

The Soviet Union has sent special delegates to Yugoslavia, India, Mexico and Greece to transmit Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's oral message on disarmament, Gerasimov said. He did not reveal any details. But he said the message emphasizes the importance of solving disarmament issues speedily.

SOVIET SCIENTIST ON NUCLEAR TEST VERIFICATION

OW150614 Beijing XINHUA in English 0602 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Verification of nuclear tests is possible and will be the first step for reducing the threat of a nuclear war, a Soviet academician said today. Yevgeniy Velikhov, vice chairman of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, told a press conference here that "the latest achievements in seismology preclude the possibility of uncontrolled staging of any nuclear explosions."

The press conference was held in connection with a three-day international forum of scientists for a nuclear test ban. About 200 scientists from 35 countries attended the forum.

Velikhov said that the forum hailed the agreement between the Soviet Academy of Sciences and the U.S. National Resources Defense Council (NRDC), which allows experts from the two countries to set up seismic equipment near Semipalatinsk, the Soviet Union's main underground nuclear test site, 2,900 kilometers southeast of Moscow and in the Nevada desert where the United States conducts its nuclear testing.

The Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA said today that scientists of the two organizations are setting up seismic equipment in Semipalatinsk. It is the first time that Western experts have been allowed to install monitoring equipment anywhere in the Soviet Union. The experts will provide both the U.S. and the Soviet Governments with data about nuclear tests and earthquakes in the region.

According to the agreement last May, a group of Soviet scientists will also go to Nevada to set up similar equipment later this year.

Meanwhile, citing U.S. Government officials, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported last Thursday that the United States and the Soviet Union have tentatively agreed to discuss issues of verifying the underground testing of nuclear weapons.

DPRK DELEGATION ENDS TREATY CELEBRATION VISIT

OW151132 Beijing XINHUA in English 0724 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- A Korean party and government delegation left here for home this afternoon after attending the celebrations marking the 25th anniversary of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance.

The delegation is headed by Yi Chong-ok, member of the Political Bureau of the Korean Workers' Party Central Committee and vice-president of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Before their departure Wan Li, member of the Political Bureau and member of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, and acting premier of the State Council, bid a farewell to the Korean guests at the State Guesthouse here.

Wan Li congratulated the delegation on its successful visit to China. Yi Chong-ok said the exchange of visits by the two delegations on the occasion of the anniversary celebrations has contributed to the bilateral friendly relations.

Yi Chong-ok described his delegation's visit as a "very successful", adding that they were leaving China with a great happiness.

Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, also saw the delegation off at the State Guesthouse.

The Korean delegation toured the Jingshan Park and visited the Yili food company in Beijing here this morning.

CPPCC OFFICIAL MEETS JAPANESE YOUTH DELEGATION

OW141132 Beijing XINHUA in English 1023 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Lu Zhengcao, vice-chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, met a delegation from the World Youth Visit Exchange Association of Japan here today.

Lu recalled the history of Sino-Japanese friendship and hoped that the young people of the two countries will carry on the friendship from generation to generation.

The delegation, headed by permanent council member of the association Futoshi Fujii, had visited cities of Shanghai, Kunming and Xian before its arrival here last Saturday.

The Japanese association has retained its friendly relations with the All-China Youth Federation since 1974.

INDIA TO ACQUIRE SOVIET MIG-29 FIGHTERS

OW141008 Beijing XINHUA in English 0949 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] New Delhi, July 14 (XINHUA) -- India is expected to acquire MiG-29 fighters under a newly finalized memorandum of understanding with the Soviet Union for their purchase, the local press reported today. India would thus become the first country outside the Soviet Union to acquire this latest model in the Soviet Air Force inventory.

It is expected that more than two squadrons of MiG-29 would be purchased outright in fly-away condition and "substantial" numbers are likely to be assembled and produced indigenously at Hindustan Aeronautics Limited (HAL), the report said.

A high-level delegation consisting of senior officials of the Ministry of Defense and the Indian Air Force recently visited Moscow to conclude the memorandum of understanding. The final contract, considered as only a formality, has not been exchanged yet, the report said.

The MiG-29, codenamed Fulcrum by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, incorporates the latest in avionics and is considered to be superior to U.S. F-16.

It is fitted with large pulse doppler lookdown/shootdown radars, giving it day and night all-weather operating capabilities against low-flying targets and freedom from outmoded ground control interception techniques.

The armament on the MiG-29 includes six A-10 or close range AA-11 air-to-air missiles and two pylons under each wing and one under each engine airduct.

ZHAO ZIYANG GREETS NEW BANGLADESH PRIME MINISTER

BK151149 Beijing International Service in Bengali 1530 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang of China, in a telegram to Bangladesh Prime Minister Mizanur Rahman Chowdhury on 12 July, conveyed his sincere greetings to the latter for being elected prime minister of Bangladesh. In his message, Zhao Ziyang expressed his belief that the existing cordial relations and cooperation between China and Bangladesh will certainly continue to develop during his tenure of office.

FANG YI MEETS INDIAN SCIENTISTS DELEGATION

OW141004 Beijing XINHUA in English 0937 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Fang Yi met a delegation from the National Science Academy of India headed by President C.N.R. Rao. Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences was present on the occasion. The Indian guests arrived here July 12.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON ZHAO ZIYANG'S EUROPEAN-AFRICAN TRIP

No Nuclear First Strike by PRC

HK160528 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 16 Jul 86 p 1

[By staff reporter Guo Zhongshi]

[Text] Madrid -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said on Monday China would not use nuclear weapons first under any circumstances, and would never use them against countries without nuclear arms.

Speaking at a dinner given by Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez, Zhao said China had "decidedly reduced its military expenditure and armed forces, although it spends far less than other big countries."

He told his hosts China would never form any kind of alliance with the superpowes, never take part in an arms race and always stood for the complete prohibition and destruction of all nuclear weapons.

He said: "We appreciate the effort Spain and other Western European countries have made to push the US and Soviet Union to disarm and realize a low-level military balance."

"On the question of maintaining world peace, which is closely connected with the fate of mankind," he said, "every country, large or small, strong or weak, rich or poor, has a right to speak and can make worthwhile contributions."

He said Sino-Spanish ties, which had been developing smoothly and steadily since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1973, were further cemented by the successful visit by Conzalez to China last September.

Last year, he said, bilateral trade volume was worth more than $400 million, double the 1984 figure, while economic and technological co-operation had also made considerable progress.

Despite temporary difficulties inevitable in process of cooperation, Sino-Spanish economic co-operation would definitely be expanded so long as the two sides approached problems in a far-sighted and imaginative way, he said.

He said he was convinced his current visit would bring about "a big step forward" for friendly relations.

As a European country with an ancient civilization, Spain had created a glorious culture and produced a galaxy of outstanding people, said Zhao. "In modern times, they have also achieved successes that have attracted the attention of the world," he added.

Gonzalez told Zhao he was very happy to see that the two countries shared similar views over such major international issues as conflict in Central America and the Middle East, the Gulf war, South Africa, foreign interference in Afghanistan and Kampuchea, the arms race and the North-South imbalance, aggravated by the huge Third World debt problem.

"I am also happy to see that the People's Republic has joined in condemning terrorism and people who covertly or overtly encourage and make use of terrorism," he said.

Gonzalez said both countries should "be ambitious and practical in their careful studies of the potentials" in their co-operation, in order to avoid disappointments on their side.

He said he was confident of bright prospects for co-operation, which he said "both sides should push forward in the interest of the two peoples."

Earlier on Monday, the two government leaders held their first talks, which centered on bilateral relations, further development of co-operation and major international issues.

Visits Spanish Royal Palace

OW151916 Beijing XINHUA in English 1734 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Visiting chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang Toured the royal palace (Palace de Oriente) and the Prado Museum here this morning. Premier Zhao was shown round this magnificent palace, which used to be the Spanish king's residence in history. Zhao walked through a number of splendid rooms and halls of the royal families, decorated with invaluable paintings, tapestries, chandliers, clocks, furniture, sculptures and porcelain.

During the tour, Zhao compared the clocks of great variety with those on display in the Beijing's Palace Museum, and the Spanish helmets and armour suits with those used in ancient China. Both China and Spain have splendid culture and civilization. The Royal Palace, situated on the site of a burnt down castle, is now used by the king of Spain only for official functions. It was in one of the halls here that Spain signed officially to join the European Community last year.

Right after the tour of the Royal Palace, Premier Zhao went to visit the Prado Museum which is world-known for its rich collection of paintings by noted Spanish and other foreign painters. Zhao asked about the characteristics of different painters and their masterpieces when he viewed with great interest such works as "Los Borrachos" and "las Meninas" by Diego Velazquez (1599-1660), "the Family of Charles IV" and "the May 2 Uprising" by Goya (1746-1828). At the end of the tour, Premier Zhao was presented a copy of Goya paintings. He in return reciprocated to the director of the museum a color picture book "National Treasures." The Museum, built in 1785, has a collection of more than 8,000 works from all the European schools of painting from 15th to 19th century.

Spain's King, Queen Host Luncheon

OW151803 Beijing XINHUA in English 1740 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 15 (XINHUA) -- King Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia of Spain gave a luncheon at the Zarzuela Palace here today in honor of visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang. In the course of the luncheon, King Carlos and Queen Sofia had a cordial and friendly conversation with Premier Zhao. They warmly welcomed the premier on his current visit and recalled the good memories of their 1978 visit to China.

Premier Zhao conveyed the best regards of Chinese President Li Xiannian and Chairman Deng Xiaoping of the Central Advisory Commission to the king and the queen. He also renewed President Li's invitation to the king and the queen and their family to see China again. King Carlos and Queen Sofia expressed their gratitude for the kind invitation and accepted it happily. They asked Premier Zhao to convey their best regards to President Li Xiannian and Chairman Deng Xiaoping.

Present at the luncheon were Spanish Prime Minister Gonzalez and Foreign Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez and Chinese Minister in charge of the State Economic Commission Lu Dong.

At noon today, Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen held working talks with Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the Spanish Government Fernando Perpina-Robert.

Meets Spanish Business Leader

OW160104 Beijing XINHUA in English 2339 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met here this afternoon with Jose Maria Cuevas Salvadoz. President of the Confederation of Spanish Enterprise Organizations, reassuring him of the bright prospects for closer trade and economic cooperation between the two countries.

He told the Spanish entrepreneur that China;s modernization drive has been going on smoothly and there will be a big development in the country's economy within this century and that opening to the outside would is China's long-term policy that will not be changed. The meeting took place on the second day of the premier's four-day official visit to Spain.

Zhao stated that China hoped to develop economic and trade relations not only with the United States and Japan, but also with Western Europe; not only with big countries, but also with medium-sized and small ones, for each country has its own advantages and characteristics to count on. He reassured him that China attached much importance to better trade and economic relations and closer cooperation in science and technology with Spain, because Spain has some advanced technologies highly adaptable to China. As long as the governments of the two countries have the desire to further the tilateral relations and enterprises of both countries display initiative, he said, the future for such relations is bright.

The Confederation of Spanish Enterprise Organizations, founded in 1977, is a national organization incorporating more than 130,000 enterprises in all fields that account for 75 percent of the national total employment. The former president of the organization visited China in 1980 and signed an agreement with the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade.

As one of the earliest Spanish organizations to establish ties with China, Jose Maria Cuevas Salvadoz told Premier Zhao, the organization hoped to maintain and develop such ties. He put forward a number of specific proposals and wished to have the support of the Chinese Government in materializing them.

Premier Zhao expressed his appreciation and the hope that the good wishes of both sides would soon be translated into specific cooperative projects.

XINHUA REPORTS UK NAVAL VISIT TO SHANGHAI

OW111854 Beijing XINHUA in English 1354 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Two vessels of the British Royal Navy -- a missile destroyer and a missile corvette -- arrived here today for a five-day friendship visit. The two vessels -- Manchester and Amazon -- are the first British ships to visit China since 1980 when three British warships called at the Shanghai port.

Colonel Hastilow, captain of Manchester, and Lieutenant Colonel Ellis, captain of the Amazon, called on Liu Zhenyuan, deputy mayor of Shanghai, Ba Zhongtan, Commander of the Chinese People's Liberation Army (PLA) Shanghai Garrison, and Liu Xingwen, commander of the PLA naval unit in Shanghai, this afternoon.

Deputy Mayor Liu briefed the visitors on Shanghai's development and expressed the belief that the visit of the British naval officers and men will promote the friendship between the peoples and Armed Force of the two countries.

Colonel Hastilow told his hosts that they are honored and pleased to visit Shanghai, a city of great importance both in China and the world. He also expressed the wish that the visit of the two British naval ships will help promote mutual understanding and friendship. The British naval officers and men were welcomed at a reception given by the East China Sea Fleet of the PLA Navy this evening.

PRC, UK Naval Officers Meet

OW121426 Beijing XINHUA in English 1334 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 12 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Navy Commander Liu Huaqing expressed the wish today to strengthen the contacts and cooperation between the Chinese and British Navies. Liu said this at a meeting here today with the captains and other officers of two visiting warships of the British Royal Navy, which arrived yesterday.

The Chinese Navy commander told the visitors that their visit has been considered here as an important event in the Sino-British relations. "We welcome you, goodwill envoys of the British people and Navy, to come here to learn about China's development," he said.

Liu expressed the hope that the visit of the British ships will help strengthen the friendship between the peoples and Armed Forces of the two countries as well as the cooperation between the two Navies.

Colonel Hastilow, captain of the missile destroyer "Manchester", told Liu that their inspection of Chinese naval vessels this morning gave them a better knowledge about the Chinese Navy. He also expressed the belief that their visit would contribute to the mutual understanding and friendly contacts between the peoples and Navies of the two countries.

Liu hosted a luncheon for the visitors after the meeting.

The Chinese Navy commander also visited the two British warships this afternoon and attended a dinner given by Colonel Hastilow in the evening.

British Warships End Visit

OW151546 Beijing XINHUA in English 1155 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 15 (XINHUA) -- The destroyer Manchester and the corvette Amazon of the British Royal Navy left here this morning after winding up their five-day friendship visit to Shanghai.

During their stay in Shanghai, the British naval officers and men visited Chinese naval vessels, a carpet factory, a jade carving factory and an arts and crafts institute, as well as a zoo, and some of them also visited Suzhou and Hangzhou. A football match was played between a team from the visiting British vessels and a team of Shanghai coaches.

XINHUA ON TURKEY'S FIVE U.S. NUCLEAR BASES

OW111820 Beijing XINHUA in English 1411 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Turkey has confirmed that there are five U.S. nuclear bases in Turkey, the Turkish daily "TERCUMAN" reported today. The five nuclear bases, which are located in Eskisehir, Erhac, Murted (Ankara) Balikesir and Incirlik, are set up within the framework of Turkey-U.S. mutual defence system, "TERCUMAN" quoted a foreign ministry senior official as saying.

Five combat brigades, formed by F-4 and F-104 jet fighters and carrying nuclear war heads, are based in the country. At present there are 489 U.S. nuclear war heads, 22 nuclear facilities and 66 other U.S. military facilities in Turkey.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization's 189 obsolete war heads are mostly stationed in Turkey and Greece.

Recently, U.S. Defense Department asked Turkey and other NATO countries to speed up the modernization of their nuclear arsenals. "We will decide what we want," said Turkish Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu recently.

QIAO SHI RECEIVES AUSTRIAN INTERIOR MINISTER

OW151924 Beijing XINHUA in English 1352 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Qiao Shi said here today that he hoped for the expansion of Sino-Austrian cooperation in security affairs. He made this remark at a meeting met with Karl Blecha, minister of the interior of Austria here this afternoon.

Qiao also briefed the Austrian minister on China's economic reform.

Earlier this morning, Ruan Chongwu, Chinese minister of public security, held talks with Blecha.

The Austrian visitors arrived here yesterday.

SFRY FOREIGN MINISTER FORECASTS NONALIGNED SUMMIT

OW150202 Beijing XINHUA in English 0151 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Belgrade, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The 8th summit of the Non-Aligned Movement will call for a total ban on nuclear testing, halting the arms race in space, reductions in strategic nuclear and conventional arms, elimination of chemical weapons and all weapons designed for mass annihilation, Raif Dizdarevic said today here.

Raif Dizdarevic, Yugoslav federal secretary for foreign affairs, made the remarks at a joint session of the assembly of Yugoslavia's committees for foreign affairs and for foreign economic relations.

Dizdarevic said the summit, to open September 1 in Harare, Zimbabwe, will focus on disarmament and securing world peace, in addition to a course of action for solving the developing countries' economic problems.

In the past five years, the developing countries have repaid some 600 billion dollars in debt installments to Western banks and last year they lost 65 billion dollars due to the fall in prices for raw materials.

POLAND TO CARRY OUT FURTHER ECONOMIC REFORMS

OW140804 Beijing XINHUA in English 0545 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Warsaw, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Poland will carry out further economic reforms to improve its economy over the next five years, official news agency PAP reported today, quoting a resolution of the Polish United Workers' Party.

The resolution passed during the 10th party congress, held from June 29 to July 3, said that "the economic reform is the first and most important lever" in developing Poland's economy.

The resolution said that economic development can be accelerated by improving management systems and speeding up scientific-technological progress. To achieve more rapid development, the Polish Government, too, should regulate its price system and place the burden of the responsibility for profits and losses on the individual industrial enterprises.

The Workers' Party resolution said the party will work harder to expand democracy of the working people, to check inflation and to improve living conditions. The resolution also set the party's policies on the revival of trade unions, its relations with the Catholic Church and its foreign activities.

The document promised that the party will "continue the policy of consolidating the Polish People's Republic, a socialist and democratic state, for the development of the Polish nation."

OMANI OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED ON PLANNED VISIT

OW110201 Beijing XINHUA in English 0025 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Muscat, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Omani State Minister for Foreign Affairs Yusuf al-Alawi 'Abdallah said here today that the aim of his forthcoming visit to China is to "see how we can further expand relations between the two countries." In an exclusive interview with XINHUA, al-Alawi said that his visit "will be an opportunity to see and learn the new style of development in China."

"There is still more avenues of cooperation between the two countries. Particuarly, we see there is tremendous change in China and enhancement of its economy," he pointed out. Al-Alawi said that he will exchange views and information with the Chinese friends on the international issues and discuss with his Chinese counterpart problems concerning both countries, the situation in the Gulf and the Iran-Iraq war in particular.

The scope of cooperation between China and Oman is "great" and his forthcoming visit to China is a "signal of healthy relations" between the two countries, he said.

OMANI MINISTER OF STATE FOR FOREIGN AFFAIRS VISITS PRC

Interviewed on Visit

OW131226 Beijing XINHUA in English 1117 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Wu Xueqian, Chinese state councillor and foreign minister, gave a banquet in honor of Yusuf al-Alawi 'Abdallah, minister of state for foreign affairs of the Sultanate of Oman, and his party here this evening.

Before the banquet, the two foreign ministers had cordial, friendly talks and hoped that Al-Alawi's current visit would further strengthen the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries. They will confer tomorrow to exchange views of common concern.

Al-Awali and his party arrived here this morning on a goodwill visit to China at the invitation of Wu Xueqian. They visited the National Children's Center here this afternoon.

Holds Talks With Wu Xueqian

OW140952 Beijing XINHUA in English 0931 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Wueqian and Omani Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Yusuf al-Alawi 'Abdallah held talks here today to exchange views on bilateral, international and regional issues. They reached a broad consensus on the issues discussed, sources close to the talks said.

On bilateral relations, Alawi said that there are broad prospects for the Omani-Chinese relations based on mutual understanding and mutual beneficial cooperation.

Wu expressed the belief that Alawi's visit will contribute to the development of the Sino-Omani friendly cooperation.

Both Wu and Alawi expressed the wish for stronger unity among Arab countries and Palestine in opposing Israeli expansion and promoting an overall and just solution of the Middle East question.

Wu praised the Council for Gulf Cooperation for its work in promoting common economic development and safeguarding regional peace and stability. Alawi pledged that the council will continue its efforts for a conciliation between Iran and Iraq and an end to their war as soon as possible.

Meets With Wan Li

OW141300 Beijing XINHUA in English 1127 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- China's acting Prime Minister Wan Li met Yusuf al-Alawi 'Abdallah, minister of state for foreign affairs of the Sultanate of Oman, and his party here this afternoon.

Wan Li said that China and Oman share identical views on the question of peace and development, and desire to safeguard world peace and develop their own countries' economies. He said he was very pleased to note the great achievements Oman has made under the leadership of Sultan Qabus Ibn Sa'id in developing its economy by using its oil resources, and hoped that bilateral cooperation in political, economic and cultural fields will be further developed.

Al-Alawi, who is paying a second visit to China, said he has found great changes have taken place in China over the past few years. The Gulf countries very much admire China for its great changes and economic development, he added. He described his talks with Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian as very good, adding that he was sure that the talks would help promote bilateral friendly relations and cooperation. Al-Alawi believed that the development of the friendly relations and cooperation between the Gulf countries and China will benefit world peace.

Wan Li asked Al-Alawi to convey greetings from President Li Xiannian and Premier Zhao Ziyang to Sultan Qabus, asking him to visit China. Al-Alawi said Sultan Qabus will visit China at an appropriate time.

Earlier this afternoon Al-Alawi met with Minister of Public Health Cui Yueli. They had a friendly talk on the development of bilateral cooperation in public health.

Hosts Return Banquet

OW151954 Beijing XINHUA in English 1404 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Yusuf Ibn al-Alawi 'Abdallah, minister of state for foreign affairs of the Sultanate of Oman, gave a farewell banquet here this evening. Among the guests were Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Minister of Public Health Cui Yueli.

Earlier today, the Omani minister discussed bilateral trade and economic cooperation with Lu Xuejian, Chinese vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade.

Minister Al-Alawi is scheduled to leave here tomorrow for a tour of Hangzhou and Shanghai.

LEBANESE PRESIDENT, PRC ENVOY DISCUSS UNIFIL

OW151543 Beijing XINHUA in English 1128 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beirut, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil received Chinese Ambassador Wu Shunyu here this morning and discussed with him the proposed extension of the mandate of the U.N. Interim Force in South Lebanon (UNIFIL), which will expire on July 19. President al-Jumayyil started yesterday his separate talks with the ambassadors of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council on this issue. Talking to newsmen after the meeting, the Chinese ambassador said that the Chinese Government supports the Lebanese Government and people in their efforts to oppose foreign intervention and safeguard Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. China also supports the stand of the Lebanese Government on the issue of the mandate of the UNIFIL, he said.

LEBANESE OFFICIAL TO VISIT PRC, E. EUROPE

OW042230 Beijing XINHUA in English 1837 GMT 04 Jul 86

[Text] Beirut, July 4 (XINHUA) -- Secretary-General of the Lebanese Foreign Ministry Fu'ad al Turk left here today to start his tour of four east European countries and China. A local radio reported that Al Turk is due to arrive in Hungary on July 6 on the first leg of his tour. He will also visit Democratic Germany, Bulgaria and Czechoslovalkia before his arrival in Beijing, possibly, on July 18 for a week long visit to China.

The radio said, Al Turk's visit is aimed at promoting Lebanon's relations, particularly economic and cultural relations with those countries. The radio said Lebanon's foreign policy is based on non-alignment and Lebanon is open to East European countries while maintaining good relations with the West.

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE FETES PDRY SPORTS DELEGATION

OW141028 Beijing XINHUA in English 1012 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Olympic Committee gave a banquet here this evening in honor of all members of the visiting sports delegation from the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. The Democratic Yemen delegation is led by Mohamed Ghalib Ahmed, president of the Supreme Council for sports. Present at the banquet were He Zhenliang, vice-minister of the Chinese state physical culture and sports commission and member of the International Olympic Commitee's executive board, and Ibrahim 'Abdallah Sa'idi, ambassador of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen to China.

SOVIET UNION PROVIDES MILITARY AID TO YAR

OW141142 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Sanaa, July 14 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has provided 300 million rials (41.3 million U.S. dollars) to Arab Yemen to help establish an industrial base for Arab Yemen's Armed Forces, official daily "AL THORAN" reported today. President Ali 'Abdallah Salih laid the foundation for the first-stage construction of military project on Sunday. This project under construction of the Yemeni engineer units will contribute to foster Arab Yemens' skill in arms production and build up technical abilities of the Yememi Armed Forces. The Soviet Union has provided some military aid and sent military advisers to Arab Yemen in recent years.

ANALYSIS ON JORDAN'S CLOSING PLO OFFICES

OW101924 Beijing XINHUA in English 1545 GMT 10 Jul 86

["News Analysis: Why Jordan Closes Down Most PLO Offices in Amman? By Rui Yingjie and Pan Liwen" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Amman, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Most observers here agree with Abu Jihad when he said before his departure here that the criticism of Jordan by the recent Tunis meeting of the Fatah Revolutionary Committee is not the root-cause but only a convenient pretext for Jordan to close down most of the PLO offices. Abu Jihad is the vice commander in chief of the Armed Forces of the PLO who left Amman this morning after being served a notice to leave within 48 hours.

People may say it is bad tactics for Fatah to criticise Jordan and the Jordanian Government decision to close down Palestinian offices seems only directed against the Fatah. But there are other deep rooted causes for the Jordanian decision.

First of all, Jordan has been irritated by the uncompromising attitude of the PLO on its position on U.N. Resolution 242 which calls for the recognition of Israel. After the scrapping of the Jordan-PLO joint accord for the Mid-East peace process in February, King Husayn and other Jordanian officials have time and again indicated that Jordan would cooperate with the PLO again if PLO would change its position to U.N. Resolution 242. However, the PLO has so far showed no signs at all for a flexible stand. This has greatly hampered Jordan's hope to revitalise the Middle East peace process for which Jordan has spared no pains to work. The conclusion is that Jordan would break off its relations with the PLO even without the Fatah's criticism.

Secondly, dozens of offices set up by PLO, Fatah and other PLO affiliations since February last year after the joint accord was signed have posed a threat to Jordan's security. A considerable number of PLO members had been arriving in Jordan and the influence of the PLO had been growing in both banks of the Jordan River. All this has posed a potential threat to Jordan's security, just as the Jordanian Government had anounced that its decision "to close Fatah offices has been taken purely on grounds of national security."

Earlier, Israel has claimed that Abu Jihad was held responsible for sending weapons to the occupied West Bank. It is the policy of Jordan to ban any weapons from being sent to the West Bank from Jordan. Considering the above mentioned root causes, Abu Jihad and some other leading officials of the PLO here have claimed that Jordan's decision to close their offices has not come as a surprise.

Three years ago, in June 1983, Syria decided to close Fatah offices in Damascus. This had created difficulties for PLO. Now that most of the PLO offices in Amman have been closed, this will necessarily increase PLO's difficulties. The relative silence kept by other Arab countries on Jordan's new move against Fatah has showed the delicacy and complications of the matter. Nevertheless, Syria-backed PLO organisations in Damascus including that of Abu Musa who has broken off from the PLO have issued statements siding with Fatah. This may be taken as a signal for some changes within the PLO. Observers here are watching closely the outcome of a forthcoming meeting of the Fatah revolutional committee to be summoned by Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO who is expected to return to the PLO headquarters in Tunis today.

DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER ZHU QIZHEN IN CUBA

OW120626 Beijing XINHUA in English 0605 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Havana, July 11 (XINHUA) -- Cuban acting Foreign Minister Jose Raul Viera met this morning Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Zhu Qizhen, who is on a working visit here, and the two had a friendly conversation.

Yesterday Zhu Qizhen had two sessions of talks with Cuban Vice-Foreign Minister Jorge Bolanos, during which they exchanged views on international problems of mutual interest. They also reviewed bilateral relations in the last few years and discussed the prospects of their development in the years to come. Chinese Ambassador to Cuba Wang Jin was present on the occasions.

Ends Visit, Leaves for Home

OW140713 Beijing XINHUA in English 0652 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Havana, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Zhu Qizhen left here for home today after a four-day visit at the invitation of the Cuban Foreign Ministry.

During his visit, Zhu held separate talks with Cuban acting Foreign Minister Jose Raul Viera and Vice Foreign Minister Jorge Bolanos Suarez in which they exchanged views on international issues of common concern and bilateral relations. At a dinner given by the Chinese Embassy last night, Zhu and his Cuban counterpart pledged to make efforts to further promote Sino-Cuban relations. Sino-Cuban relations, once cooled to the point where only bilateral trade lingered, have become increasingly warmer since 1983 when the two countries agreed to "steadily improve" their relations.

Cuba expressed further willingness to "restore relations" with China last fall when ministers of the two countries met at the U.N. General Assembly. Since 1983, China and Cuba have renewed contacts in the fields of economics, science, culture, education, health and sports, while continuing to expand their two-way trade.

The Chinese vice foreign minister arrived here July 9 on the last stop of his five-nation American tour which has also taken him to the United States, Brazil, Trinidad and Tobago, and Mexico.

HU QILI MEETS BOLIVIAN 'LEFT REVOLUTION' LEADER

OW101254 Beijing XINHUA in English 1143 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, today expressed his satisfaction over the establishment of relations between the Chinese Communist Party (CPC) and the Movement of Left Revolution of Bolivia.

On behalf of CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang, Hu Qili extended a warm welcome to a delegation from the Bolivian party led by its leader Jaime Paz Zamora at a meeting in the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

Paz Zamora said his party has long been expecting to establish relations with the CPC, which is in the interest of the two countries and peoples. Bolivia and China have much in common and there is great potential for cooperation between the two countries, he said. The Bolivian guests have visited Shanghai and Hangzhou and are scheduled to leave for home tomorrow.

PRC, CANADA DEVELOP ARICULTURAL COOPERATION

OW101345 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 2338 GMT 7 Jul 86

[By reporter Wang Laixi]

[Text] Harbin, 8 Jul (XINHUA) -- Argicultural cooperation between China and Canadian International Development Agency has been progressing smoothly. This program has had a good start. Recently, China and Canada held a meeting in Harbin to coordinate in further strengthening cooperation on agricultural projects, exchange experience, and discuss further steps in promoting agricultural cooperation.

The Canadian International Development Agency is an Canadian Government organization. On behalf of the Canadian Government, it provides countries of the Third World with technology and facilities and helps them quicken efforts in personnel training. Since the beginning of 1982, China's Ministry of Agriculture, Anminal Husbandry, and Fisheries had made frequent contacts with this organization. As of April this year, China and this Canadian agency have, an successive occasions, agreed to cooperate in developing nine agricultural projects. The Canadian side has provided China with more than 20 million Canadian dollars of free economic assistance for these projects. Right now, work has begun on eight of these projects with fine results.

Since this cooperation began, China has, on separate occasions, sent 57 persons to Canada to receive training and study technology. China sent 21 persons to receive training in Canada for a project concerning the Heilongjiang August 1 University for State Farms and Land Reclamation and a project concerning the Heilongjing Liuhe Institute for Cadres of State Farms and Land Reclamation, while the Canadian side sent 10 experts to give lectures at these two institutions of higher learning. All this helped these two institutions revise their professional courses, conduct teachers training, and improve teaching methods. The teaching quality at these two institutions has markedly improved. For a project involving seeds used in the Heilongjiang Land Reclamation District, aid amounting to 270,000 Canadian dollars has been used to import sophisticated instruments and facilities such as seed dryers, seed quality analyzers, equipment to test seed impurities, and soil testers. At the same time, a batch of wheat, barley, and rape seeds of fine strain has been imported from Canada, creating excellent conditions for improving seed strains of various crops in China.

The various projects of agricultural cooperation between China and Canada have also helped China attain marked economic results. A project concerning the use of potash fertilizer in agriculture, which began in 1983, has helped those units that use such fertilizer greatly increase their per-unit yield of various crops. In 1984, Zhejiang Province carried out experiments in using potash fertilizer on 149.5 hectares of paddy rice. I reported that the use of potash fertilizer brought about an increase of 147,000 kilograms of paddy rice on this plot, marking an average growth of 20,9 percent, and tht each kilogram of potassium chloride used helped increase the yield of paddy rice by 7.7 to 9.5 kilograms.

'POLITICAL BUREAU' MEMBER WANG ZHEN WRITES INSCRIPTION

OW151912 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1459 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Changsha, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- To commemorate Comrade He Long, pioneer and leader of sports undertakings of new China, the Changsha City CPC Committee and government have decided to redesignate the Changsha City Stadium as He Long Stadium.

Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee [title as received], inscribed the name of "He Long Stadium."

The stadium is under expansion and repair. The principal part of the project is expected to be completed next year. After the expansion, the sports complex will have a capacity of 50,000 seats.

TYPHOON KILLS 172, INJURES 1,250 IN GUANGDONG

OW151514 Beijing XINHUA in English 1452 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Guangzhou, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Typhoon "Peggy" left 172 people dead and 1,250 injured in eastern Guangdong Province after it hit the south China region last Friday, a provincial official told XINHUA today.

More than 264,000 houses collapsed, some 540,000 hectares of farmland were flooded and hundreds of highway bridges destroyed.

"The total losses are estimated at more than 1.4 billion yuan," the offical said.

The provincial government has allocated 10 million yuan and building materials to help more than three million people restore normal life and production. It has launched a mass mobilization to help people in the affected areas restore production and normal life.

More than 300,000 people trapped in flood waters in Jiexi, Jieyang, Puning and Meixian Counties have been rescued by People's Liberation Army teams. However, most parts of eastern Guangdong were recovering from the typhoon and torrential rains by last Monday, the official said.

THREAT FROM 'SECRET SOCIETIES' EXAMINED

HK150707 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jun 86 p 3

[Report: "On the Question of Banning Reactionary Secret Societies -- Responsible Person Concerned in Ministry of Public Security Answers Reporter's Questions"]

[Text] In a small number of rural areas, which are economically and culturally backward, it is easy for reactionary secret societies to grow and spread. The masses are easily deceived and hoodwinked into taking part in their activities. In these areas, reactionary secret societies are still factors which harm stability and unity, obstruct the building of material and spiritual civilization, and undermine social security. This reporter interviewed the responsible person concerned in the Ministry of Public Security with these questions in mind.

Question: What are reactionary secret societies?

Answer: "Reactionary secret societies" are also called "reactionary superstitious sects," or "reactionary superstitious groups." Their predecessors were "superstititious sects" in the old society. These superstitious sects developed in feudal society in China and belong to feudal society ideology. At that time, there were some primitive secret organizations which consisted mainly of bankrupt peasants, unemployed handicraftsmen, lumpen-proletariat, and so on. These persons utilized these organizations to resist rulers who oppressed them. These organizations are characterized by blind destructiveness, and some of them later became a reactionary force. In modern times, they became tools utilized by the imperialists and the reactionary ruling class in China to obstruct revolution and oppress the people. After the liberation of the whole country, some reactionary secret societies carried out destructive activities, such as undermining the struggle to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea.

Question: Where does the harmfulness of "reactionary secrets societies" lie?

Answer: Reactionary secret societies are politically reactionary. Some chief and key members of these societies attack socialism and the people's democratic dictatorship, trying to "change the regime." Some of them even went so far as to appoint officials and assign them tasks to plan armed rebellion. Reactionary secret societies are political tools under their control. Their chiefs are the enemies of the people's regime.

Reactionary secret societies are also factors which obstruct social security. In the name of building sacrifical rites, some of them exact payments of money or goods, or even carry out superstituious and deceitful activities such as "passing by the gate of hell to prolong longevity," "casting spells to avoid misfortune" and so on. Some of them use methods such as providing "divine pills" and "catching the ghost" and so on to cure sickness. They actually injure the people, or kill them. Some of them use wicked methods such as "being possessed by evil spirits," "making a convert to an immortal" and so on to rape women. Some of them "preach on the altar," or "assemble members to give sermons." All these waste people's money, adversely affect production and obstruct social order.

Question: At present some reactionary secret socieities carry out their activities under the signboard of "freedom of religious belief." In so doing, they pass off fish eyes as pearls, and deceive the masses. Could you tell us the difference between reactionary secret societies, religions and feudal superstititon?

Answer: Good? this is an improtant issue. At present, some reactionary secret societies have pretended that they belong to religious groups in order to mislead the public and seek legal status. Religions refer to Taoism, Buddhism, Catholicism, Christianity, and Islam. Normal religious activities are protected by law. The "PRC Constitution" and the "PRC Criminal Law" explicitly stipulate all these. With regard to reactionary secret societies, the Chinese Government has issued a formal decree to ban them. If they revive their activities, this means that they are illegal and violate the law.

Reactionary secret societies are not the same as feudal superstituions. Feudal superstition broadly refers to belief in a supernatural being, forces of evil, devils, geomantic omens, fate and so on. Feudal superstitious activities can also be divided into two categories: 1) Individual activities of those who are influenced by feudal ideas, such as worshipping Buddha, bringing joss sticks to make a vow, and so on; 2) activities of witches, sorcerers, and other people taking superstition as their occupation, such as paying homage to deities and immortals, driving out diseases and ghosts, fortune-telling by analyzing the component parts of a Chinese character, telling somebody's fortune by reading his face, fortune telling, practicing geomancy, and so on. These people are left over from the old society. Their purpose in carrying out such absurd activities is to make money and profit. They do not belong to any official organizations or organizational system. The crowds disperse as soon as the business is concluded. With regard to those who are engaged in individual superstitious activities, our main efforts should be devoted to providing them with ideological education, so that they can enhance their consciousness. With regard to the second category of superstitious activities, we should ban them. We must crack down according to law upon any criminal and counter revolutionary activities which utilize feudal superstition.

Reactionary secret societies also have a strong feudal superstitious coloring. They make use of the feudal superstitious mentality of the maasses to disseminate superstition, recruit disciples, and expand their organizations. Their purpose in doing so is to spiritually and mentally control their disciples.

Question: What are the legal stipulations which empower our government to ban and crack down upon reactionary secret societies?

Answer: The PRC Rules and Regulations on Punishing Counter-Revolutionaries," the PRC Criminal Law" and "Decision on Severely Punishing Criminal Elements Who Seriously Obstruct Social Order" promulgated by the NPC Standing Committee in September 1983 contain explicit stipulations on the issue of banning and cracking down upon reactionary secret societies. There are several lines of demarcation which we should follow:

1. Those who are guilty of organizing and using reactionary secret societies to carry out counter-revolutionary activities should be severely punished according to law, especially chief and key members who are guilty of active counter-revolutionary and sabotaging activities.

2. The people's government issued explicit orders a long time ago to ban reactionary secret societies. They are not allowed to revive their activities.

3. Most of the disciples are laboring people. They are deceived, and fall victims. According to the policy of the party and government, we should guide them. Through education, we will emancipate them from the deception, oppression and persecution of those reactionary secret societies.

Question: What are our basic countermeasures against reactionary secret societies?

Answer: We will take two basic countermeasures against them: 1) We should strengthen the building of material and spiritual civilization, vigorously propagate materialism, give publicity to science and technology, and popularize culture and education. 2) We should resolutely crack down upon chief and key members of the reactionary secret societies, who are guilty of sabotage activities. We should also expose the crimes of reactionary secret societies and show their harmfulness in order to educate the masses who are deceived.

HONGQI DENIES SPLIT BETWEEN REFORMERS, CONSERVATIVES

HK160045 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1349 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- A "Forum" article carried in the HONGQI issue to be published tomorrow points out that there is no division into "reformers" and "conservatives" in the CPC.

The article, entitled "Learn How To Correctly Handle Contradictions in the Party," states that "to say that our party is divided into two factions, so-called conservatives and so-called reformers, is to exaggerate the contradictions in our party and is even a fabrication of facts. To assign people to this or that faction is a 'creation' of the 'Great Cultural Revolution.' That era of turmoil is over."

The article admonishes people, 'do not be incited by rumors from outside."

The article also reminds people not to evade contradictions in the party. It says that such contradictions are a universal phenomenon. Contradictions frequently occur in every party organization and leadership group including the county, city, and township CPC committees, and so on. How can there be a place where there are no contradictions? Contradictions exist in everything in the world, and without contradictions there could be no world. The CPC too has developed in the course of exposing and resolving contradictions.

The article points out that instead of fearing and evading contradictions, we should handle them correctly. We should handle the large number of non-antagonistic contradictions by adopting mild measures to resolve them, such as exchange of views, democratic consultations, individual talks, mutual accomodation, and so on. Of course, the very small number of antagonistic contradictions, such as serious violations of economic law and discipline, cannot be resolved through heart-to-heart talks and consultations. Such contradictions can only be resolved through heart-to-heart talks and consultations. Such contradictions can only be resolved by the application of law and discipline.

The article also demands that people overcome two trends when handling contradictions in the party: On the one hand, many non-antagonistic contradictions are often intensified into antagonistic ones; and on the other, the handling of antagonistic contradictions is often too soft, with major problems turned into small ones and small problems into no problem at all.

RENMIN RIBAO ON HOUSEHOLD INDUSTRY IN WENZHOU

HK141211 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jul 86 p 2

[Article by XINHUA reporters Liu Zhengui and Chen Jianfa: "Realistic Thinking, Creative Practice -- An Investigation of the Development of Household Industry and Commerce in Wenzhou City"]

[Text] In recent years, household industrial and commercial undertakings in Wenzhou City, Zhejiang Province, have developed rapidly. A good start has been made in the march toward commercialization, specialization and industrialization. This has provided a wealth of valuable experience to areas that have a weak industrial foundation with little money invested by the state -- experience on how to develop the commodity economy.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Wehzhou City has witnessed the emergence of 133,000-plus individually-or jointly-operated industrial enterprises on a household basis, a purchase and sales force of more than 100,000, 70,000-odd individual commercial operators and about 400 markets for small commodities. Last year, the total output value of household industries reached about 1.13 billion yuan, more than one-third of the city's total industrial output value. The retail sales turnover of individually operated commercial undertakings reached 570 million yuan, more than one-fourth of the city's commodity retail sales turnover. Taxes paid to the state by the individually-operated economy reached more than 60 million yuan. This has become one of the main sources of local revenue.

In the past 2 years, many well-known economists and sociologists in the country and responsible comrades at various levels of some provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions have headed for Wenzhou on an inspection trip. One problem of concern to everyone is: Where has Wenzhou's idea of developing household industrial and commercial undertakings come from?

Some people think that Wenzhou's path of development has been a matter of "necessity." The rural area of Wenzhou has plenty of inhabitants and little land. The industrial foundation was weak. So was the foundation for the collective economy. This forced the rural surplus laborers to follow the path toward non-agricultural commodity production with household operations as its focus.

Some poeple consider that the people of Wenzhou have from time immemorial been skilled in trading and have been engaged in handicraft. This is a main cause of Wenzhou's development.

Some people point out that this has been an achievement "allowed to take place" since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. With the mind emancipated and policy in order, a vast world has been opened up for the development of the commodity economy.

On a visit to Wenzhou, these reporters felt that these arguments had some basis. But as to the matter of little land being available for many inhabitants, this does not apply to Wenzhou alone. Why has nothing been done by some other areas out of "necessity?" Other areas can also lay claim to such conditions as history, tradition and a policy "opening up." Why has a thriving economy like that of Wenzhou not formed? We visited many cadres and people and found that there was another very important underlying factor. [paragraph continues]

It is that the Wenzhou CPC Committee and the city government have upheld the idea of doing everything with reality in mind and have the courage to do things in a creative way.

Firmly and Unswervingly Get Rid of "Leftist" Influences and Give Thought to Creating the New

Wenzhou is a time-honored handicraft city. There are many skilled workers and accomplished craftsmen. They not only have the tradition of making the home a workshop but are also in the habit of trading and working in other areas. But in the troubled years of the "Great Cultural Revolution," such activities as developing the commodity economy among the masses were all labeled as "going in for trade to the neglect of agriculture," "engaging in speculation and profiteering," and "running underground workshops," and were repeatedly attacked and banned. Some cadres and Communist Party members that supported the development of household operations were accused of "sharing the same trousers with capitalism" and fired and expelled from the party. For a long time, Wenzhou was treated as "a typical example in capitalist restoration." After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and especially after the new leading group of Wenzhou City was established in 1981, the responsible persons of the city party committee and the city government went deep into lower levels to make investigations and studies. Only then did the strengths and weaknesses of Wenzhou begin to be evident. After liberation, there was little state investment. There was no big state-run enterprise. The rural per capita share of cultivated land was only 0.46 mu. These were weaknesses. The Wenzhou peasants are good farmers. Most of them also perform well as both workers and traders. They are business-minded. There are able men of all kinds. These are strong points. The city CPC Committee and the city government considered that these two actual states of things should be taken into consideration, with the strong points drawn upon and the weak ones shunned. There should be no waiting for investment from the state. The building of too many factories at one time should not be insisted upon. Nor should we count on big factories to keep town and township enterprises alive, as Ningbo and Shaoxing did. Instead, we should let the masses assert themselves fully and develop household industry and commerce on their own.

But the leading comrades of Wenzhou City also soberly noted that without ridding Wenzhou of that terrible label of "capitalism" that had weighed on it for many years, the masses of peasants could not be free from misgivings about the development of the commodity economy ideologically. Able men of all kinds would have no chance of asserting themselves. Productivity could no be really emancipated. If Wenzho's economy was to be revitalized and the people were to get rich, we must start with the elimination of "left" thinking. To this end, the city CPC Committee and the city government decided to hold congresses of advanced workers in developing the rural commodity economy at all levels. Some able people, who were previously subjected to criticism and struggle as "examples in capitalist restoration" because of their involvement in household industry and commerce and who had actively developed the commodity economy since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, were specially allowed to appear on the rostrum. They were given big red flowers to were on their suits. They were placed on an honor list and made much of as their good names were being restored. [paragraph continues]

A strong atmosphere was created that made these people feel honored in developing household industry and commerce. Meanwhile, these able people were given support in many fields. Leadership cadres at various levels took the initiative to befriend them and join them in discussing ways to accelerate economic development. Thus, the masses were roused to action. Some people who originally had misgivings began to shed their doubts. Over several years, Wenzhou City reached the stage of development with more than 130,000 households involved in household industry and commerce and with a purchase and sales force of 100,000. This can be described as the result of having eliminated "left" influences.

Being Realistic and Not Being Bound by Upper-lever Restrictions

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the rural commodity economy gradually thriving, three problems had confronted Wenzhou: After a number of peasants took up household industry and commerce, they no longer cultivated the fields they had contracted for. Instead, they let others do the work on a subcontract basis demanding a per-mu yield of 200 kilograms of grain. In 1983, a relevant central document stipulated that no transfer of land be allowed. As to most of household industry-related products, purchase and sales workers were relied upon to do marketing along the lines of transfer of contracts. At that time, a relevant upper-level document had stipulated that no transfer of contracts be allowed. To facilitate the establishment of production and sales relations with other provinces and cities, several tens and even several hundreds of household industry operators opened accounts with a certain factory bank and carried out trading activities with other provinces and cities in the latter's name. According to state regulations on management in industrial, commercial and administrative fields, such a practice was also not allowed. After investigations and studies, the Wenzhou City CPC Committee and the city government felt that given a surplus of rural labor, the transfer of some laborers from land to household industry and commerce helped peasants in getting rid of poverty on the way to prosperity. A part of the grain was obtained after the transfer of land on a contract basis. What was thus actually obtained was the difference between a negotiated price and an officially fixed grain price. This should be allowed. The transfer of contracts and "the opening of accounts with another party for trading purposes" concerned the problem of an outlet for household industry-related products. Without these two things, circulation could not be smooth and production could not be developed. Therefore, these should not be attacked or banned. On the contrary, they should be given protection. Later, based on the new development of the rural situation, the CPC Central Committee's Document No 1 in 1984 changed the provisions in the relevant document of 1983. It was clearly stipulated that contracts for land can be transferred. Peasant purchase and sales workers represent advanced rural productive forces. The department concerned also admitted to the necessity of "opening accounts with another party for trading purposes." Experience shows that such an idea on the part of the Wenzhou City CPC Committee and the city government based on reality is correct. It has served to effectively protect peasants' enthusiasm and has stimulated the development of the commodity economy. Basic-level cadres said: This is not acting against central instructions. It is a matter of resolutely upholding the party's ideological line of "seeking truth from facts."

Dare To Take the First Bite and the First Step

Toward the end of 1980, with the development of the rural commodity economy throughout the city, liquid funds for household industrial and commerical undertakings became a serious problem. Various kinds of loans became popular among the people. Some private loans were obtained at interest rates as high as 40 percent. Taking note of the situation, the credit cooperative of Jinxiang town, Cangnan County experimented with floating rates in its credit business in an attempt to bring down interest rates. It stipulated that the floating rate for savings should be 10 percent, based on the state-fixed rate of 4.6 percent, and that the rate for loans should be 15 percent. The experiement was to last for 1 year. This credit cooperative took in 1.415 million yuan in floating-rate deposits and made loans of 1.3 million yuan. This not only helped in the development of local household industry and commerce but also served to reverse the previous situation of being in the red. But our country's financial control system had for many years regarded floating interest rates as taboo. Relevant state documents also said that no floating deposit interest rates should be introduced, and anyone doing so could be accused of upsetting the state's financial market. There had been no precedent in the state for the Jinxiang credit coopertive's act. This led to keen debate in relevant departments. Some leaders considered that this was "mischief." After listening to different views, the Wenzhou City CPC Committee and the city government were of the opinion that so long as it is an act conducive to the development of the socialist commodity economy, the taboo can be ignored. With the support of the city CPC Committee, the city agricultural bank overcame various obstacles standing in its way. Beginning in 1982, it introduced floating rates first in Cangnan County and then throughout the city. So far, 297 rural credit cooperatives in Wenzhou have introduced floating rates. Facts show that the introduction of floating rates is necessary for the rapid development of the rural commodity economy. As far as the financial market is concerned, it is a combination of loosening and the exercise of control. The floating of deposit interest rates helps in attracting funds from among the people and strengthening the economic strength of the credit cooperative. The floating of loan interest rates can help in bringing down interest rates and in providing indirect guidance for household industry and commerce. Wenzhou City was on the right track. The CPC Central Committee's Document No 1 in 1985 affirmed that this was a practice which helped stimulate the healthy development of rural commodity production.

Fewer Checkpoints Standing in the Way and More Guidance To Pave the Way

In briefing us on the experience of developing the commodity economy, the leading cadres of Wenzhou City used the word "leadership" less often than the word "guidance." Despite the difference in one word, this points to a fundamental guiding idea on the part of the city CPC Committee and the city government: In developing the commodity economy, we must respect objective economic laws and respect the pioneering spirit of the masses. We should impose fewer inflexible administrative orders and should assume fewer official airs. In our approach to new problems, we should not make a habit of simply resorting to negation, attack, and prohibition. Instead, we should give more positive education.

Jinziang town of Cangnan County is a sales and production base for medals, display plates, plastic sheets and printed documents. It keeps itself well informed and has a business network spread all over the country. After our country's decision to introduce identity cards for residents, this town immediately designed samples of such indentity cards and sent them to relevant departments soliciting orders. The public security department at a higher level demanded that this matter be investigated as a serious case of falsifying documents. On learning of it, the chief responsible persons of the Wenzhou CPC Committee immediately phoned the relevant public security organ and took the matter up with it. It was considered that this was an act committed through ignorance and not something done on purpose. The best way was to use the means of education. Thus, the enthusiasm of the masses of Jinxiang town for the continuous development of commodity production was protected.

The Liushi district of Leqing County is a well-known production and marketing base for small hardware and low voltage electrical appliances. It has more than 10,000 household operators in the industrial field with an annual output value of 170 million yuan. Last year, taxes of more than 29 million yuan were handed over to the state. Some enterprises that could not obtain silver for contacts used white brass as a substitute and thus lowered the quality of products. The relevant industrial department issued a circular banning the purchase of low voltage electrical appliances producted by Liushi and also ordered the suspension of production. Upon learning of this, the Wenzhou City CPC Committee and the city government immediately sent a work team and technical personnel to help household operators of Liushi District in fixing things up and improving the quality of products. The county also invested in the building of an electrical product testing center to check the quality of products for export to other areas in a unified manner. It also selected relatively technically strong town and township enterprises as "factories in the lead" and let them provide technical services for household industry operators and keep a strict watch over quality. In addition, energetic help was offered in solving the problem of raw materials. Now, there has been quite a big improvement in the quality of the low voltage electrical products from Liushi.

In practice, the responsible persons of the Wenzhou City CPC Committee and the city government feld that the mushrooming of household industrial and commercial undertakings would inevitably be followed by some new contradictions and new problems and even some serious violations of the law. But this is not something to be feared. When contradictions appear, we should not get alarmed. Instead, we should observe things seriously, get hold of the essence or the main trend and actively give guidance. Suppression will kill. Only guidance serves to enliven things. With things enlivened, there will be prosperity. So long as we are bold in practice and good at giving guidance, the socialist commodity economy can surely develop in a more vigorous manner.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON REFORM, POLITICAL STRUCTURE

HK120438 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by GUANGMING RIBAO special reporter Dai Qing: "On the Reform of the Political Structure in China -- An Interview With Yan Jiaqi"]

[Text] Yan Jiaqi, political science scholar, was born in 1942, a native of Wujing, Jiangsu.

He was a 1964 graduate of the University of Science and Technology, and became a postgraduate student in the same year at the Institute of Philosophy under the University of Science and Technology. He is at present director of the Research Center for Political Science under the Academy of Social Sciences of China, concurrently council member of the Society of Political Science, and vice chairman of the Society of Behavior Science; and his major publications are: "A Journey Transcending Times -- Visiting the Three "Justice Courts" of Religion, Reason, and Practice," "State Government Systems," "Life Tenure System and the Term System," and "On Head of State." -- end editor's note.

Question: In a symposium on cultural development held in May this year, you talked about reform of the political system. Comparing it with the current reform of the economic structure, do you think the call for reform of the political structure equally pressing?

Answer: Reform in the political system involves a lot of questions. Some are very pressing, such as the reform in the cadre system and the administrative structure, others should be carried out step by step. The basic issue is still the solution for the exececssive centralization of power, and the aim is to build a socialist political system and scientific structure with a high level of democracy. The occurence of the "Great Cultural Revolution" was related to the lack of a political structure with a high level of democracy. Regarding a socialist country like ours, whether the political structure is democratic or not has a direct bearing on the state's important decision-making and economic development. A nation or region in need of political democracy may experience temporary economic prosperity, but its long-term development will inevitably be impeded.

Answer: The excessive centralization of power seems to be the consequence of some comprehensive structural conceptual and even cultural tradition, and it cannot be decentralized at will. Even some people who have great power but little effectivneses to speak of are complaining themselves...

Answer: First, it is necessary to change the phenomena of excessive centralization of power step by step; however, the administrative power must be unified; otherwise, "Multi-headed politics" will emerge. The NPC is the state's organ of supreme power; however, the question of horizontal "division of power" exists whether in the central authorities or the province, municipality, and region. During the "Great Cultural Revolution," "horizontal division of power" was out of the question; under the slogan of consolidating the party's centralized leadership, the state's power was concentrated in the hands of a few people. Doing a good job of "horizontal division of power" involves not only the relations between the party and government. It is the usual practice in all countries of the world that the party in office is one holding the power of administration of the state. How to implement the "division between party and government" is an importante theoretical as well as practical question in the reform of the political structure.

Second, implement the vertical division of power. Power and responsibility are interrelated with each other, a person in a certain post has certain power and responsibility as well.

Administrative organs at a higher level may negate the decisions of organs at a lower level; however, they cannot take the place of organs at a lower level in their decision-making. [paragraph continues]

We are opposed to bureaucratism, requiring leading organs and responsible cadres to personally solve specific problems; this is the correct way. However, the concept of "vertical division of labor" must be established, and we should refrain from taking the place of organs at a lower level, doing things within the realm of their power. Some of our leading cadres believe that they can decide on whatever issues in a region or department, which runs counter to the principle of "vertical division of power." Deng Xiaoping says, "Our leading organs at various levels have handled affairs, which they should not have taken up in the first place, which they could not have done a good job in handling, and are quite beyond them," while "the overwhelming majority of people have often failed to handle problems which they should have dealt with independently with responsibillity." In my opinion, the rise of these phenomena is related to the absence of the concept and structure of "vertical division of power." We should start by reforming the system, make explicit the power and responsiblity of organs at various levels, and implement "vertical division of power."

Question: If the concept of centralization of power is not to be changed for the time being, would it be all right to draw up a set of regulations to restrict he excessive centralization of power?

Answer: You may perhaps remember the U.S. Watergate affair: At that time the District Court of Washington D.C. ruled that the president turn over the tapes relating to Watergate. Nixon declined to supply them, but demanded the Attorney General remove Special Prosecutor Cox from office. When the Attorney General refused to carry out the order and resigned, Nixon wanted a deputy attorney general to remove Cox from office; but he, too, refused and resigned. Finally, another deputy attorney general removed Cox from office, acting on Nixon's order. As we see it, a president "has the power to do whatever he chooses," so why didn't Nixon personally give a direct order to remove Cox from office? This is because the concept of "division of power" has struck deep in the minds of the American people. Within 10 days from when Cox was removed from office, Washington had received half a million angry telegrams condemning the President, when an avalanche of mail overwhelmed the Congress criticizing the president. In succession, the House Judiciary Commitee voted to impeach the president on three charges. Under these circumstancesd, Nixon was compelled to announce his resignation. Six years ago, Deng Xiaoping said: "Stalin gravely violated the socialist legal system; on this, Comrade Mao Zedong said, this would never happen in such Western countries as the United Kingdom, France, and the United States. Although he had come to see this point, the fact that he had not in practice solved the problems of the leadership system, and for other reasons, led to the disasters of the 'Great Cultural Revolution." In my opinion, our reform of the political structure aims to make the socialist system complete and perfect; it is imperative for us to basically guard against the repetition of such phenomenon as the "Great Cultural Revolution" in whatever forms. We must ensure steady, long-term political and economic development in China through reforms.

Question: So, in this sense, the change in concept is very important. "Power is everything," and "vertical division of power" is really quite different in concept.

Answer: I'm afraid it is the case. We have to little understand of the concepts of "division of power" and "restricting power with power." I have said that the discussion centering around cultural issues will serve as a guide to the reform in the political structure, and reform will inevitably lash at old concepts. To my mind, the reform in the political structure will certainly lash at the concept that "power is everything."

Question: I think certain matters that do not belong to the norm of horizontal or verical division of power, such as the arbitrary intervention of those in power in people's life or the intervention in academic studies and literary and artistic creation with administrative power, should also be listed in the targets of reform. If these problems are to be treated theoretically...

Answer: This is precisely the third point I shall deal with: The realm of government functions and power are limited. The realm that government's power should particularly not violate is "human rights." The realm of human rights various in different nations, and different historical stages. During the "Great Cultural Revolution," governmental, or political power might violate all realms of personal life. Even paying tribute to the late Premier Zhou Enlai, and the experession of one's grief were interfered with what "human rights" were there to speak of? If you memory is still good, during the "Great Cultural Revolution," such power organs as the revolutionary committees, the Works' Mao Zedong Thought Propaganda Teams, the PLA Mao Zedong Though Propaganda Teams or cultural revolutionary groups and their like not only intervened in people's fashion, hardos, hobbies, habits, and personal life, but their power even violated people's ideoligical realm -- compelling people to express their loyalty to Mao and Mao Zedong Thought, and such rituals as asking for Mao's instruction in the morning and reporting one's thoughts in the evening. People were deprived not only of their right of being joyful, their right of thinking, but even their right to express their grief. Hence, the outburst of the 1976 Tiananmen incident. In the course of the economic structural reform, we have come to understand that the power exercised by the government is restricted to a certain realm, and governmental departments at various levels should no longer directly operate and manage enterprises. The fact that government power is restricted to a certain realm means that this is actually a "division of power," a division of power between "governmental organs" and nongovernmental "social organs." To my mind, through reform of the political structure, not only should a certain realm of power be defined for the government's control over the economy, but a certain realm of power should also be made explicit for the government's managing of social affairs. Only then will it be possible to realize "academic fredom" and "freedom of literary and artistic creation" with guarantees.

Question: Concerning "academic freedom," and "freedom of literary and artistic creation," is not opening channels for thinking and speech of primary importance?

Answer: I believe this is the case. Promotion of the "double-hundred" policy is precisely to open up the path for "academic freedom," and "freedom of literary and artistic creation." However, freedom should be guaranteed. [paragraph continues]

"Freedom is the right to do whatever is possible within the parameters of the law," and this concept is a progressive product of human civilization. In the course of reforming the political and economic structures, this concept should be deeply imbred in the hearts of the people. Therefore, in the course of reform, we must put the building of the legal system in a very important place.

Question: Has division of power in the above-mentioned three respects generalized the reform of the political strucutre?

Answer: No. There is a fourth, and most fundamental and important point, that is, relations between the people and the government. It is imperative to enable the people to participate directly or indirectly, and more and better in the decision-making of state affairs. This will naturally involve China's basic system, as well as the problem of how to complete and perfect the People's Congress system. Democracy should be guaranteed by the legal system; however, the existence of the legal system does not necessarily mean the equal existence of democracy. Building a socialist political system with a high level of democracy means exactly expanding the participation of the citizens in policies. This involves a series of questions such as the nomination system of people's delegates. The procedures of their election, as well as their qualifications.

From a long-term perspective, reform of the political structure involves chiefly the following four aspects: horizontal division of power; vertical division of power; the division of power between government, and social organs; and the degree of people's participation in political decision-making. Since the year 1979, great changes have actually taken place in these four respects; and political reform is precisely carried out along these four channels. In China, building a political system with a high level of democracy is synonymous with strengthening and improving party leadership. The reform of the political structure will affect the whole nation and every one in the country. But I think we should stress three other points: First, reform must be carried out under the party's leadership, since reform is not a spontaneous mass movement, and our reform cannot be successful if it deviates from the CPC leadership. Second, reform of the political structure aims to build a political system with a high level of democracy, to ensure the success of the reform of the economic structure, and to serve socialist modernization. And third, the reform of the political structure should be conducted step by step. Most pressing in the near term is the reform of the cadre system and the administrative structure, in order to change the phenomena of making no separation between the functions of party and government, and between the functions of government and enterprises, and to push forward the development of China's reform of the economic structure. In short, the reform of the political system should be carried out with the leadership, and targets, step by step. Together with the reform of the economic structure, they will become the two giant wheels carrying forward the modernization of our great motherland.

JINGJI RIBAO ON ENTERPRISE BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM

HK130915 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by Yang Guoliang: "The Question of Ownership in the Enterprise Bankruptcy Theory"]

[Text] The question of ownership in the enterprise bankruptcy theory is a very important one. [paragraph continues]

The current practice is to use the theory of separating ownership from managerial power to explain the transfer of the means of production in state enterprises after they go bankrupt. On the whole, this method is correct but it has not gotten to the heart of the matter. Some comrades have provided a new train of thought for an in-depth study of this issue by using the method of a joint-stock system to solve the question of ownership when state enterprises go bankrupt. In my view, however, this method still cannot satisfactorily solve the contradiction. There are at least two aspects of the problem that we should take into consideration. On the one hand, with the institution of the joint-stock system in socialist enterprises, the major shares still belong to the state. Therefore, there is still a question of transferring public property when joint-stock enterprises go bankrupt. On the other hand, the joint-stock system is not the only pattern in the socialist economy. Nor is it the only pattern in the capitalist economy. How do we explain the question of ownership in the enterprise bankruptcy theory in the context of the socialist economic sectors not practicing the joint-stock system? Moreover, the establishment of the enterprise bankruptcy system is a pressing need in the current reform of the economic structure, while the establishment of the joint-stock system will still take a fairly long time. For this reason, in solving the question of ownership in the enterprise bankruptcy theory, it is necessary to open up new channels and to further broaden our vision.

First, we should view the question of ownership in the enterprise bankurptcy theory as a whole and from the macro level. Following the implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy law, only a small number of state enterprises go bankrupt. First and foremost, this is determined by the law of value governing the commodity economy. Moreover, the state can restrict the number of bankrupt enterprises to a small proportion. The bankruptcy of a handful of enterprises does not affect the character of public ownership of the social economy as a whole. The continued survival of the great majority of state enterprises not only ensures the dominant position of socialist public ownership but the establishment of the bankruptcy system has also invigorated and developed the enterprise, thus further consolidating and expanding socialist public ownership. Taken as a whole, therefore, the enterprise bankruptcy system is not in contradiction with socialist public ownership.

Next, we should view the question of ownership in the enterprise bankruptcy theory from the dynamic state and from its overall significance. Viewed statically, the ownership of state property in insolvent enterprises has been transferred. Viewed dynamically, this transfer happened long ago as a result of the losses suffered by the enterprises over a long period of time. Viewed one-sidedly from the material form, the means of production used by the enterprises still exist. Viewed comprehensively from the material form, however, the ownership of the means of production used by the enterprises has been transferred in the form of debt following the losses sustained by the enterprises. Therefore, it is a long-established fact that the enterprises have gone bankrupt. Before the implementation of the enterprises bankruptcy law, the ownership of the means of production was transferred in a covert manner. This form of transfer can be described as a covert transfer. Following the implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy law, the ownership of the means of production is transferred in an overt manner. This form of tranfer can be described as an overt transfer. [paragraph continues]

In the past we refused to admit the existence of bankruptcy and, in dealing with actual bankrupt enterprises, used the method of converting to the manufacture of other products, amalgamating with other enterprises, suspending operations, or shutting down. In doing so we not only failed to avoid the transfer but also mixed up the normal transfer due to our failure to define the principle for dealing with debt relationships. The implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy law is nothing but an act of admitting the transfer as a fact and of turning the covert transfer into an overt one. It is aimed at holding some enterprises responsible for their bankruptcy rather than making some enterprises go bankrupt. Undoubtedly, this represents a safeguard of socialist public ownership. For this reason, viewed from the transfer of ownership of individual enterprises, the enterprise bankruptcy system is not in contradiction with public ownership.

Again, we should analyze the rational transfer of ownership in the enterprise bankruptcy system from changes in the state's attitude toward assuming responsibility for the operational risks of enterprises. The operational risks include both investment decisions and operations and management. In the traditional economy, the state not only assumes all sorts of risks for the operations of enterprises but also undertakes unlimited responsibilities. Given the separation of ownership from managerial power, the implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy system has effected changes in the relationship between the state and enterprises. As an investor the state assumes risks for its investments and as dealers the enterprises assume risks for their operations and management. With regard to the property which the state entrusts to enterprises for its operation, instead of assuming unlimited responsibilities the state only assumes limited ones. As an investor, the state still may suffer losses as a result of poor management on the part of enterprises. However, with the implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy system, the state has considerably decentralized and reduced its operational risks. The state no longer assumes unlimited responsibilities for enterprises with the use of state property. This constitutes a kind of protection for state property. Following the implementation of the enterprise bankruptcy system, we have ceased the transfer of the ownership of essential production factors chiefly manifested in the form of currency as a result of continuously compensating for the losses of enterprises. Once the enterprises go bankrupt, the transfer of ownership is limited only to the means of production operated by the enterprises. The rationality of the system is obvious to all.

Lastly, by admitting that enterprises may go bankrupt we have perfected the method of enterprise survival. Under the traditional structure, enterprises never go bankrupt once they are established and the production structure cannot be normally regulated. This method of enterprise survival is a distorted one. The establishment of the enterprise bankruptcy system makes it possible for the enterprises to exist and to die out, thus straightening out the distorted method of enterprise survival. The method of enterprise survival is a process of self-perfecting the mode of production. This process of self-perfection develops on the basis of maintaining the character of production mode. Therefore, the enterprise bankruptcy system is not in contradiction with socialist public ownership.

Bankruptcy Law Urged

HK130542 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by Jiang Yiwei: "The Positive Significance of Enforcing the Bankruptcy Law"]

[Text] The term "bankruptcy law" is negative. However, its implementation has positive significance.

First, the implementation of the bankruptcy law is an objective demand of the socialist commodity economy. The fundamental purpose of reform is to establish a planned commodity economy system. Under the old system, enterprises run by the whole people were owned by the state and were actually the subsidiary bodies of the state organs. Enterprises owned by the collectives also tended toward state ownership and lacked independence. This inevitably led to "eating from the same big pot" and the "iron rice bowl" system. The "Decision of the CPC Central Committee on Reform of the Economic Structure" explicitly pointed out that enterprises are producers and operators of commodity production as well as relatively independent economic entities. "Relatively" here refers to the economic relations between the state and enterprises. As the state exercises management over enterprises on behalf of the whole people, enterprises cannot be entirely independent. The major principles and policies should still be decided by the state. However, the relations between enterprises are not relative, but absolute and entirely independent. Only by struggling for existence and development through competition on the market can enterprises have vitality. Enterprise vitality comes from both motivation and pressure. Enterprise invigoration can be possible only when it has both motivation and pressure. Since enterprises cooperate as well as compete with each other, some may develop while others may decline in competition, resulting in only the best surviving. This is the only way to encourage enterprises to continuously advance and develop. Therefore, the bankruptcy law is the objective demand of the commodity economy. It must be clearly pointed out that the bankruptcy law mainly deals with the property rights of the poorly managed enterprises that are on the brink of bankruptcy rather than the responsibility for their poor management and operations.

Second, enterprises should carry out independent operations and management and assume sole responsibility for their profits and losses. When independent operations and management and sole responsibility for profits and losses are mentioned nowadays, the emphasis is always put on profits. The bankruptcy law has solved the question of assuming sole responsibility merely for profits rather than for both profits and losses, thus thoroughly smashing the "iron rice bowl" and the "same big pot" and enabling enterprises to benefit from profits and suffer from losses. As our current laws are not yet perfect and the authority of our legal system has not yet been established, enterprises usually have power without responsibility or responsibility without power. Power can be turned into motivation and responsibility into pressure. Only when both factors are combined can we truly invigorate enterprises and arouse their initiative.

Third, there are the gains and losses of enterprise assets. What do we mean by gains and losses? Regarding this question, we should take the production costs into account.

If the production costs increase while the prices remain unchanged, enterprises may suffer losses. If only profits are taken into account, it means that the enterprises have not assumed sole responsibility for their profits and losses and they are not aware that the losses will eventually lead to total loss of enterprise assets. Nobody taking care of enterprise assets is a major defect of the old system. Moreover, we lack funds for construction. The implementation of the bankruptcy law has played an extremely important role in solving the question of funds shortages and poor management over gains and losses of assets and use of funds. It has posed a question of how socialism should correctly deal with funds.

Fourth, it helps enhance the sense of the legal system. We usually say that an enterprise is a corporate body, but we are not sure about the role of a corporate body. By implementing the bankruptcy law, we can clearly define the legal position of enterprises and the power and obligations of a corporate body. As a corporate body, an enterprise enjoys the power and also undertakes the obligations stipulated by law. Bankruptcy is an important aspect it should be aware of. Can the bankruptcy law be put into effect immediately? Some comrades hold that it should be put into effect with corresponding measures taken. In my opinion, the reform as a whole should be carried out with the corresponding reforms. We simply cannot introduce the bankruptcy law after enacting other laws. I believe the bankruptcy law should go ahead of the rest. One the one hand, it should go ahead of the rest, and on the other hand, we should pay close attention to the corresponding reforms.

COMMENTATOR ON ROLE OF CERTIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

HK140921 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Attach Full Importance to the Role of Certified Accountants"]

[Text] Over the past few years, accounting firms have been set up one after another all over the country and a number of certified accountants have passed examinations and obtained their qualifications. They have been playing an important role in our domestic and external economic activities. Now, the State Council has promulgated the "Regulations for Certified Accountants of the People's Republic of China" in order to meet the requirements of the economic structural reform and the development of the situation of our construction. They are important regulations that will give further play to the role of certified accountants.

Certified accountants are professionals who are engaged in work prescribed by law with the approval of the state. They differ from accounting workers in state organs and ordinary enterprises and institutions. They have wide-ranging knowledge and work experience in the fields of accounting, finance, taxation, law, and economic management and must undergo strict examinations. Only when they have passed the examinations can they join an accounting firm. The work of certified accountants is largely to be entrusted by law as a third party to examine whether the accounting reports and other financial data provided by the economic organizatons under investigaton are legal and true and to gieve reports on this which have legal force. [paragraph continues]

An accountancy firm formed by certified accountants is not a functional department of any state organ, nor does it rely economically on the state or any other units. Therefore, they can maintain their independent, objective, and just stand in their work. By so doing, they can play an important role in curbing various kinds of economic activities that violate law and discipline, ensure the smooth development of the economic reform, and guarantee the legitimate rights and interests of the economic sectors in which foreigners participated.

Certified accountants' work is conducive not only to enlivening the economy at home but also to opening up to the outside world. Our country's economic laws and regulations concerning foreigners all have clear stipulations on the work of Chinese accountants in auditing their accounts, verifying their capital, and settling their accounts. This conforms to international convention and is conducive to drawing in foreign capital and importing technology. The work done by certified accountants cannot be replaced by government auditing or any other departments.

The establishment of the system of certified accountants is a new task, for which we lack both personnel and experience. Therefore, in establishing accountancy firms, we should work systematically in the light of the needs of our actual work and with our actual conditions and focus our energy on key areas, and we must guard against the malpractice of setting them up indiscriminately in large numbers and possessing poor quality. When we employ certified accountants, we must have them undergo strict examinations in accordance with regulations, strictly evaluate them and allow only those who have passed the examinations to register as certified accountants, and issue certificates to them in order to ensure the quality of the contingent of accountants.

BAN YUE TAN ON MAJOR CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

HK111439 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 12, 25 Jun 86 pp 9-12

[Article by Cao Zhiheng and Mu Hong: "Laying a Foundation for Economic Takeoff -- A Talk on 180 Major Construction Projects in the Seventh 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, a total of 925 large and medium-sized projects are to be put under constructon, of which 180 are major construction projects, each with a total investment of over 500 million yuan. Total investment in these major construction projects amounts to about three-fourths of the total investment in the large and medium-sized projects during this period. The investments in certain projects are as high as several billion or even more than 10 billion yuan. Of these major construction projects, about 40 percent are new projects, and the rest, about 60 percent, are projects for transforming and extending old enterprises. This reflects the policy of the central authorities on shifting the focus of construction to the technical transformation and extension of existing enterprises.

At present, China's basic facilities and basic industries, such as energy resources, communication and transportation, and raw materials, are comparatively weak. This becomes a main factor restraining the development of our economic construction. The development of the major construction projects in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is chiefly aimed at solving this problem. Of the 180 major projects, 166 concern energy resources, communication and transportation, and raw materials.

They become the main body of the capital construction projects of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Completion of these projects will lay a solid foundation for the further development of China's national economy. According to the designs for these projects, the following targets should be attained: Some 194 million tons of raw coal will be mined and 55 million tons of crude oil be recovered; some 42 million kilowatts of electricity will be generated; more that 2,500 kilometers of new railways will be built, while more than 4,600 kilometers of railways will be double-tracked and more that 3,400 kilometers will be electrified; the handling capacity of coastal ports will be increased to about 160 million tons; and more that 9.3 million tons of steel, 8 million tons of iron, and 5.4 million tons of rolled steel, as well as some 900,000 tons of ethylene, will be produced.

The 180 major construction projects include 86 energy projects. Of this, the coal industry will transform and extend 24 large-scale mining areas. Some of them will increase their mining capacity to over 10 million tons a year, including Hebei's Kailuan mining area, Shanxi's Datong and Jancheng mining areas, Liaoning's Tiefa mining area, Anhui's Huainan mining area, and Shandong's Yanzhou mining area. The new coal-mining capacity of these 24 mining areas expanded during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period will be about 60 percent of that of the whole country. They will become a main force to ensure that China's coal output will reach 1 billion tons in 1990.

The oil industry will transform and extend nine large-scale oil fields, including the Daqing, Sheli, Huabei, Dagang, Liaohe, nd Sanjiang oil fields. The expanded oil recovering and natural gas extracting capacities of the nine oil fields during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period will respectively be about 90 and 80 percent of those of the whole country. This will be an important guarantee for increasing China's crude oil output to 150 million tons and natural gas output to 15 billion cubic meters in 1990.

There are 53 major projects for the power industry, including 17 hydropower stations, 32 thermal power stations, and 2 high-tension power transmission and transformation lines. Among them are some large-scale hydropower stations such as Hubei's Gezhouba, Qinghai's Longyangxia, Guangxi's Yantan, and Jilin's Baishan, which are being built on the upper and middle reaches of Changjiang, the upper reaches of Huanghe, and the Honghe Valley, and some large-scale thermal power stations, such as the new power station in Datong, Shanxi, the Pingyu Power station Anhui, and the Shidongkou power station in Shanghai, which are being built in the major coal production and power consumption areas. There are also some new hydropower stations and thermal power stations to be built during the same period, such as Fujian's Shuikou, Yunnan's Manwan, Hunan's Wuqiangxi, and Qiughai's Lijiaxia hydropower stations and Zhejiang's Beilungang and Shanxi's Shentou thermal power stations. The new power generating capacity of these power projects will be more than two-thirds of the total power generating capacity of all the power stations put into production during the same period.

In order to improve the transport of coal from Shanxi to other provinces and to promote foreign trade and export, the main communication and transportation projects will be the construction and transformation of some railways and construction, transformation, and extension of a number of berths.

In railway construction, there are 25 projects, mainly including the constuction of the Datong-Qinhuangdao railway, the Xinxiang-heze railway, and the Houma-Yueshan railway; the projects of double-tracking both the South and North Tongpu railways; and the projects of double-tracking and electrifying some old railway trunk lines. These railway projects, when completed, will further link up the energy and raw materials bases in China's central and western parts and its coastal industrial areas.

In the construction of ports and highways, there are 13 projects, including the construction and reconstruction of 9 important sea ports, 2 highways (the Beijing-Tianjin-Tanggu and the Shenyang-Dalian highways), and 2 inland navigation lines (the Changjiang main navigation line and the Xuzhou-Yangzhou section of the Beijing-Hangzhou canal).

Regarding the raw material industry, there are 41 projects, including 8 projects for the iron and steel industry. While continuing the construction of the second-phase project of the Baoshan iron and steel complex in Shanghai, some old and key enterprises, such as the Anshan, Benxi, Panzhihua, and Wuyang iron and steel works, will be extended and transformed. For the nonferrous metal industry, there are chiefly eight projects, including the aluminum factories in Shanxi, Qinghai, and Henan Provinces, the nonferrous metal bases in Gansu's Jinchuan and Baiyin, and the copper industrial bases in Jiangxi. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the alumina production capacity will be increased to 1 million tons, while that of aluminum electrolysis will be increased to 330,000 tons. This period will thus become one of the best harvest of nonferrous metals since the founding of the state.

In order to enhance its self-sufficiency in the production of basic chemical industrial raw materials, China will build three large soda factrories in Hebei's Tanshan, Jiangsu's Lianyungang, and Shandong's Shouguang, which will be capable of producing a total of 1.8 million tons of soda ash a year. At the same time, the phosphorus mines in Guizhou and Hubei will be built or extended, which will increse the abilities of extracting and dressing phosphorus ares by 4 million tons each.

There are 10 projects for the petrochemical industry. construction f the three ethylene production projects -- Heilongjiang's Daqing, Shandong's Qilu, and Jiangsu's Yangzi ethylene projects -- will be continued. Other projects are mainly for the transformation and extension of existing enterprises in order to increase their crude oil processing ability and product varieties. After these projects are completed, a more solid foundation will be laid for China's chemical industry as well as light and textile industries.

In the other fields, the main projects with an investment of more than 500 million yuan include the Yizheng chemical fibre industrial complex in Jiangsu, the polyester fibre project in Shandong's Jinan, the sodium phosphate factory in Yunnan's Kunming, the detergent factory in Liaoning's Fushun, the project to bring Huanghe under control, the key project of the Feilaixia water conservancy works in Guangdong,the first-phase project of the eastern line facilities for drawing water from the south to the north, and the project for the 1990 Asian Games in Beijing.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, with the deep-going reform of the economic structure, there will certainly be a new upsurge on the front of capital construction. The 180 major construction projects will play an important role in readjusting China's industrial structure, enhancing China's economic strength, and ensuring continuous and steady growth of the national economy in the 1990's. They will also lay a solid material and technical foundation for China's economic take off. Let us all do our bit for the 180 major construction projects so as to push our economic construction to a new height.

BAN YUE TAN VIEWS GRAIN PURCHASE CONTRACTS

HK111311 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 12, 25 Jun 86 pp 26, 27

[Article by Zhao Huazhou: "On Grain Purchase Contracts"]

[Text] Perfecting the system of grain purchase contracts is part of the extremely important content of the second step of rural reform which is being carried out in a thorough manner this year. Doing a good job in this respect will further place agricultural production in the orbit of the planned commodity economy, better arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for growing grain, and effectively guarantee the country's socialist modernization.

At present, although grain purchase contracts have basically been put into effect throughout the country, quite a number of them are only put into effect at the village or township level and not the household level. Even if they are put into effect at the household level, the problem of how to ensure their fulfillment still remains. Therefore, perfecting grain purchase contracts is still an important task, which we must not relax our efforts to fulfill. The recent national meeting on grain work held that in addition to taking various concrete measures including economic and administrative measures to perfect grain contracts, even more important is to unify the thinking of cadres and peasants and guide them to have comprehensive understanding of the nature of grain purchase contracts.

In a speech delivered at the end of last year, Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: Grain purchase contracts are both economic contracts and tasks as signed by the state that must be fulfilled. A process of gradual transition is required for the development of a contract system that is not quite sound to a true economic contract system. What he said has made clear the duality and transitional nature of the grain purchase contracts at present and is a correct summing up of the nature of grain pruchase contracts at present.

We should regard Premier Zhao Ziyang's analysis on the nature of grain contracts as the guiding ideology for doing a good job in purchasing grain. First, since they are economic contracts, we should adhere to the principle of negotiation and, if possible, strive to give some preferential treatment to the peasants to show consideration for their economic interests, for example, supplying them with some means of production at a discount, paying certain amount of earnest money, and so on. Second, since they are tasks assigned by the state that must be fulfilled, we cannot treat them as ordinary economic contracts. We should not overstress reciprocity. These contracts are to be made whether one is willing or not. [paragraph continues]

We must educate the peasants to correctly handle the relations between the state, the collectives, and the individuals; to enthusiastically make contracts with the state; to seriously fulfill contracts; and to make greater contributions to modernization. Third, since transition from an incomplete economic contract system to a true and complete economic contract system is involved, we must make efforts to create conditions for promoting such a transition so that the administrative means for making contracts can be gradually replaced by economic means. The transition is indispensable and retrogression is not permitted.

This is the 2d year since the system of state monopoly for grain purchase was changed to the system of grain purchase contracts. The practice in the past year or so has shown that the work in purchasing grain is carried out well in many localities, but it is not properly carried out in a few localities. An important reason for not doing the work well is that the nature of the grain purchase contracts is one-sidedly and not comprehensively understood. Some comrades worked for many years under the system of state monopoly for grain purchase. They only see the side of "tasks assigned by the state" of the new contract purchase system and do not see the side of "economic contracts." In purchasing grain, they continue to use the old method of apportionment. If they made some efforts, they could create conditions for using economic means, but they do not. Consequently, they turn contracts into "notices on job assignment." On the contrary, other comrades only see the side of "economic contracts" and do not see the side of "tasks assigned by the state." They inappropriately demand that the state exchange at equal value with the peasants all means of production at a discount and they do not duly do ideological work. The former kind of one-sidedness is the chief one. However, both kinds of one-sidedness is the chief one. However, both kinds of one-sidedness are harmful to the perfection of the system of grain purchase contracts and therefore should be corrected.

This year's summer harvest has started and the work to purchase summer grain will soon start in an overall manner. Purchasing is an important link in fulfilling grain contracts. We hope tht relevant departments, grain departments in particular, will have comprehensive understanding of the nature of grain purchase contracts, strictly implement the state policies, make good preparations for grain purchase, arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for selling grain, and ensure smooth completion of the task of purchasing summer grain.

MINISTERS EXCHANGE VIEWS ON COOPERATION

OW122022 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0757 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the State Council recently issued to all localities and departments a circular on distributing the summary of a discussion between Comrade Zhu Xun and Comrade Wang Tao. The circular pointed out: Minister of Geology and Mineral Resources Zhu Xun and Minister of Petroleum Industry Wang Tao on their own accord have discussed cooperation between the two ministries. During the discussion, they comprehensively exchanged views, conscientiously solved problems, and made a good start in strengthening and improving the lateral ties and cooperation between the two ministries. Leading comrades of the State Council appreciate and encourage such an initiative in talking things over.

The circular urges the principal responsible comrades of all localities and departments to emulate such a practice, pay attention to coordination in work, and take the initiative in resolving major issues concerning two or more localities or departments through consultaion in consideration of the interests of the whole. It also urges them to prevent wrangling, overcome bureaucracy, improve working efficiency, and play an exemplary role in improving party conduct and office work style and in promoting lateral cooperation.

Not long ago, Minister of Geology and Mineral Resources Zhu Xun and Minister of Petroleum Industry Wang Tao comprehensively exchanged views on promoting cooperation between the two ministries in order to discover more oil and gas deposits and further develop the petroleum industry. They prepared a "summary of discussion." [passage omitted]

The two ministers hold: Promoting lateral cooperation between departments not only conforms to the spirit of reform, but also enables different departments to enjoy the benefit of cooperation while giving full play to their own strength. The cooperation may take various forms. For instance, surplus manpower from the Ministry of Geology and Mineral Resources may contract to build various construction projects of the Ministry of Petroleum Industry. The two ministries may conduct joint prospecting in a region according to a unified plan. In a few regions, they may cooperate in oil and gas extraction. They may also cooperate closely in training each other's specialized personnel, exchanging technological experience, and providing technological support.

In order to avoid unnecessary repetition and make the oil and gas prospecting funds yield maximum economic results, the two ministers have agreed that in oil and gas prospecting, the two ministries will formulate a unified plan, rationally divide the work and do it in a coordinated way, with each supplying the data of its working zones to the other. [passage omitted]

RENMIN RIBAO Urges Consultation

HK151019 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Advocate Taking the Initiative in Talking Things Over"]

[Text] Zhu Xun, minister of Geology and Minister Resources, and Minister of Petroleum Industry Wang Tao of their own accord have recently discussed cooperation between the two ministries. They comprehensively exchanged views to solve some long-standing problems, thus making a good start in strengthening the lateral ties and cooperation between the two ministries.

For various historical reasons, there are quite a few drawbacks in the present managerial system of our geological work, such as separation of departments from each other, each doing things in his own way, and not keep in touch with each other. All these are major stumbling blocks to oil and gas prospecting and extraction and other geological work.

Disregarding the long-standing practices in the economic managerial system, the minister of petroleum industry and the minister of geology and mineral resources attached primary importance to the interest of the whole and solved problems through consultation. This is the result of improving party conduct and office work style.

At present it is hard to solve some problems involving different departments or localities because they block the passage of information to each other, shift responsibility onto each other, and argue over trifles. Such bureaucratic practices are absolutely out of tune with the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy. Of course, these practices involve some shortcomings of our managerial system, but they mainly result from bad work style of some leadership cadres. Most leading cadres of our various departments and localities are Communist Party members, they share a common goal and work under the same guidelines. All departments and localities have their own actual conditions and interests. As responsible persons of these departments and localities, it is natural for them to consider and safeguard their own interests. However, in terms of the country as a whole and the interests of the whole, the interests of departments and localities are merely partial interests, no matter how important they are. The part must be subordinated to the whole. In dealing with any problems in our work, as long as all of us proceed from the interests of the whole, attach primary importance to the interests of the country, and take the initiative in talking things over, we will certainly come up with good solutions. Without an overall point of view and the spirit of taking the initiative in talking things over, things cannot be easily done even if there is a perfect managerial system.

It is our hope that more and more leading comrades of localities and departments will set an example in improving party conduct and office work style as have the minister of geology and mineral resources and the minister of petroleum industry, so as to play an important role in developing the lateral ties and cooperation between different localities and between different departments and in stimulating reform of the economic and political structures.

CHEN GUANGYI ATTENDS FUJIAN CYL MEETING

OW090523 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] The Third Enlarged Meeting of the Seventh Fujian Provincial CYL Committee ended in Fuzhou yesterday. The meeting relayed the guidelines set by the national meeting to exchange experience in helping rural youth master practical skills, and made arrangements for conducting training among rural youth to study practical techniques. Prior to the meeting, Chen Guangyi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, heard a briefing on the work of popularizing practical skills. He called on all CYL organizations in the province to give technical training to young people in the countryside. He said: We must pay full attention to poor areas, including old revolutionary bases, places inhabited by people of minority nationalities, remote districts, and offshore islands. At the same time, we must pay full attention to town, township, and village enterprises. We should use various training methods to train 1.6 million young people in Fujian's countryside in 3 to 5 years. Chen Guangyi also called on all departments concerned to support the CYL with manpower, material, and financial resources in doing ideological work.

During the meeting, (Ding Fusheng), secretary of the Fujian Provincial CYL Committee, gave a work report. He called on CYL organizations at all levels to closely coordinate with the various departments concerned and work hard to finish training 390,000 young people in Fujian within a year. He also urged them to mobilize all sectors of society to join efforts to form a complete network for the training of young people in Fujian's rural areas.

JIANGXI TRANSFERS MILITIA TO LOCAL AUTHORITIES

OW101031 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] In transferring People's Armed Forces departments to the local authorities, the various counties and cities in Jiangxi have adopted a principled stand and taken the lead in correcting party style. Since the work of transferring the People's Armed Forces departments in the various prefectures, counties, and cities have consciously conformed with the 10-point standard set by the provincial military district in bringing about a fundamental change for the better in improving party style, and have regarded this transfer as an indication of success or failure in carrying out party rectification. In the course of the transfer, they have adhered to the principle of transferring all facilities and funds to the proper authorities without retaining anything for private use. [passage omitted]

In the course of carrying out the transfer, none of the People's Armed Forces departments in Jiangxi's 101 prefectures, counties, and cities has retained any public property or fund. All public properties and funds have been smoothly turned over to the proper local authorities.

SHANDONG REPLACEMENT OF OFFICIALS ANNOUNCED

Secretary General, Department Heads

SK130558 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] In accordance with the nomination of Li Changan, provincial governor, the 20th Standing Committee meeting of the 6th provincial People's Congress decided to appoint Ma Zhongchen (concurrent) secretary general of the provincial people's government, Meng Zhaoju [1322 2507 3515] director of the provincial Public Security Department, Liu Hengshan [0491 1854 1472] director of the provincial Commercial Department, Yu Yanhao [0060 1693 3185] director of the provincial Audit Bureau, and Cao Yunjiang [2580 0061 3068] director of the provincial Grain Bureau; and to dismiss Liu Yong from the post of secretary general of the provincial people's government and Han Bangju from the post of director of the provincial Public Security Department.

People's Procuratorate Personnel

SK130654 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] On 28 June, the 20th Standing Committee meeting of the 6th provincial People's Congress decided to appoint Zang Kun member of the Procuratorial Committee of the provincial People's Procuratorate, Zhao Changfeng [6392 7022 7685] deputy chief procurator of the provincial People's Procuratorate and member of the Procuratorial Committee, and Zheng Kaiyon [6774 7030 0645] chief procurator of the Yantai City People's Procuratorate, and to dismiss Li Huimin from the post of member of the Procuratorial Committee of the provincial People's Procuratorate and Yuan Changlin from the posts of deputy chief procurator of the provincial People's Procuratorate and member of the Procuratorial Committee of the provincial People's Procuratorate.

Higher People's Court

SK130652 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] On 28 June, the 20th Standing Committee meeting of the 6th provincial People's Congress decided to appoint Han Bangju member of the Judicial Committee of the provincial Higher People's Court and Meng Zhaoke [1322 2507 4430] vice president of the provincial Higher People's Court and member of the Judicial Committee of the provincial Higher People's Court; and to dismiss Liang Deshan from the post of member of the judicial committee of the provincial Higher People's Court, Gu Junwei and Ji Fangji from the posts of vice president of the provincial Higher People's Court and member of the judicial committee of the provincial Higher People's Court, and Meng Zhaoke from the post of director of the Economic Judicial Department of the provincial Higher People's court.

SHANDONG MEETING ON LEGAL KNOWLEDGE ENDS

SK110619 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A 5-day provincial meeting to exchange experiences in popularizing legal knowledge successfully concluded in Weifang City on 10 July. Lu Maozeng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended the meeting and gave an important speech.

This meeting proceeded successfully in an enthusiastic atmosphere. The participants introduced their experiences and visited some places. During the meeting, 11 advanced units, including those from Weifang and Yantai Cities and Zhucheng County, introduced their experiences to the participants. The experiences of these units in encouraging leading cadres to take the lead in studying and applying to law, in educating the people to manage cities, plants and villages in accordance with the law, and in promoting improvement in social habits enabled the participants to broaden their fields of vision, and inspired and educated them. [passage omitted]

The participants expressed their determination to conscientiously implement the guidelines of this meeting, to bring back to their own localities the good experiences and methods of the advanced units, to vigorously carry out legal knowledge popularization work, and to strive to realize the demand of the central authorities on popularizing legal knowledge in 5 years, so as to expedite the pace of building the socialist legal system.

In his speech given at the meeting, Comrade Lu Maozeng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, pointed out: In order to make a new breakthrough in popularizing the legal knowledge, first of all, we should improve the ideology and understanding of the CPC committees at all levels. Comrade Lu Maozeng touched on the issues in three aspects in order to make the CPC committees at all levels further enhance their understanding and strengthen leadership over the work of popularizing legal knowledge.

He said: The development of the four modernizations drive and the deepening of the economic reform demand that we strengthen our awareness of legal knowledge and gradually change our old practice of simply depending on policies while managing things into one of depending not only on policies but also on the law. The law is more powerful than policies in ensuring the desire of the party and the people. Along with the trend of development, more and more well-considered policies will be legalized. Under the new situation, if we still follow the old habit of simply depending on policies while managing things, and neglecting the practice of managing things in accordance with the law, our work will be carried out in a casual manner and the phenomenon of distorting the party's policies and the law with indigenous policies will emerge. Our CPC committees at all levels, particularly leading cadres at all levels, should clarify this point ideologically.

Comrade Lu Maozeng said: The development of the production force, and the change in the production relations have set forth objective demands on using legal means to readjust the complicated relations in the various economic sectors. To this end, we should ideologically clarify the active role of the law in economic construction and reform. At present, the role of the law in the economy is to consolidate the basic socialist economic system, safeguard the achievements in economic construction and economic reform, ensure the normal economic ties and legal relations among the legal persons and other economic associations, and ensure that the public property of the state and the collectives as well as the legal rights of all citizens will not be infringed upon. If leading cadres at all levels fail to understand such an issue, to study and understand the law and to manage the economy with economic means, it will be impossible for them to adapt themselves to the new situation of reform and opening to the outside world and then they cannot be called competent leaders. [passage omitted]

In his speech, Comrade Lu Maozeng stressed: We should integrate the party's leadership with the practice of running the country in accordance with the law. He criticized some party-member leading cadres for their acts of taking one's words as the law and of stifling the implementation of the law with one's power, infringing upon the citizens' personal right at will, and ignoring the dignity of the law. He pointed out: None of the party organizations and party-member cadres has special privileges that allow them to overstep the limits of the Constitution and the law. He said: The party leads the people in enacting and observing the law. One of the important tasks of the CPC committees at all levels is to ensure the correct implementation of the law in their own localities and units and to safeguard the dignity and unity of the law. If the party organizations at all levels and the broad masses of party members fail to manage things according to the Constitution and the law, they go against the will of the party and the people. Actually, they harm the leading role of the party.

He called on each and every leader to master the skill of using the weapon of the law to manage his work, cultivate the habit of managing things according to the law, and vigorously promote all fields of work to embark on a legal path with his exemplary deeds. [passage omitted]

SHANDONG PROVINCIAL FORUM ON PARTY STYLE ENDS

SK111235 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] After a 4-day session, the provincial forum on the work to correct party style concluded in Jinan City on 10 July. The forum relayed and studied the spirit of the symposium sponsored by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission on discipline inspection work with the participation of responsible comrades from the areas of eastern and middle southern China, summed up and exchanged the experience gained in the work to correct party style during the first half of this year, and discussed the criterion for creating a fundamental turn for the better in party style and opinions on correcting party style in the future.

At the forum, Lu Maozeng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech, in which he emphatically pointed out: In 1986 more than a half of the units at the township-town level should achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style. In 1987 the province as a whole will basically create a turn for the better in party style. The provincial level organs should take the lead and set examples in correcting party style.

In his speech, Comrade Lu Maozeng pointed out: To achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style, a good job must be done in continuously grasping the following five tasks:

1. Efforts should be made to study the important speech of Comrade Hu Yaobang and to continue to do a good job in dealing with problems related to understanding. In checking malpractices, it is absolutely impossible for us to get the work done once and for all. By no means should we relax our efforts and deem everything just fine because we have already checked some malpractices and dealt with some major or serious cases.

Any slack, blunt, and fed-up mood will possibly cause us to lose the current good trend emerging in correcting party style. We must implement the principle of first being resolute and second being sustained and unswervingly carry forward the work of correcting party style.

2. Efforts should be made to investigate and deal with major and serious cases in a resolute and decisive manner. Before the end of October of this year, localities throughout the province should strive to clearly examine and conclude major or serious cases placed on file and well investigated. As for newly-exposed major or serious cases, efforts should be made to place them on file in a timely manner and to investigate and deal with them immediately.

3. Efforts should be made to realistically check and correct malpractices cropping up in various industries and trades. We should spend time, concentrate our energy, and centralize our forces to deal with prominent problems that have caused the strong complaint of the masses and exerted bad influence. Industries and trades should grasp the work in a down-to-earth manner by bearing in their mind the actual situation to strive to score results in the third quarter this year.

4. Efforts should be made to deeply conduct education on party spirit and to strictly consolidate the party's discipline. In conducting education among party members, we should standardize the acts of party members in line with the party's discipline. A good job will be done during the latter half this year in concentrating on consolidating the party's discipline among units at the county level.

5. Efforts should be made to enhance leadership over the work of correcting party style. Principal leading comrades of the party committees at all levels should be personally in charge of the work; set examples in conducting the work; pay attention to successfully establishing or implementing the responsibility system in the work of straightening out party style; and should ensure organs at all levels, which are responsible for carrying out the work among their subordinate units, and ensure work that has been done at all levels that can bear concrete results.

Attending the forum were Yang Xingfu, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee; Li Farong, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; and responsible persons from the discipline inspection departments of the provincial level organs, various cities and prefectures, and the key enterprises -- more than 100 persons in all.

ZHEJIANG CITY MODEL OF HOUSEHOLD INDUSTRY GROWTH

HK100455 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 10 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] Rapid growth of household industry in the rural areas of Wenzhou, a coastal city in Xhejiang Province, has made the city an economic model for regions with scant State investment and poor industrial base.

The city now has about 130,300 household and co-operative workshops, involving more than 330,000 people. Their total industrial output value reached 1.13 billion yuan last year, accounting for one-third of the city's total industrial output value.

The city also has more than 100,000 sellers and buyers for the household business and nearly 400 small commodity markets.

Trade volume of these individual dealers last year was worth 570 million yuan, more than one-quarter of the city's total retail sales value.

Private enterprises in Wenzhou paid about 60 million yuan in taxes to the State, making itself a major source of revenue for local government.

The economic achievement in Wenzhou has drawn large numbers of economists, sociologists and government officials there to make a first-hand study of the city's experience in developing household production.

The city, with per capita farmland less than 300 square metres, has long been noted for its traditional handcrafts production. However, household initiative there was considered taboo during the "Cultural Revolution."

After economic reforms were adopted in 1981, rural people were encouraged to resume household workshops. The government gave all-out support to such local enterpreneurs and paid tribute to those who found legal shortcuts to prosperity.

Some farmers even leased their contracted farmland to others in order to fully employ themselves in commodity production.

Some experts have attributed the thriving household economy to the area's surplus rural labour, poor industrial base and inadequate collective economy. All these factors led to the growing number of household manufacturing workshops.

Most of the products made by these workshops are articles which larger factories are unwilling to produce but are indispensable to everyday life, such as buttons, shoe laces, elastic cord, school badges, plastic cards and coupons.

To boost the growth of such households, the city's Argicultural Bank adopted floating interest rates in its 297 rural credit cooperatives to draw local savings to funnel to household enterprises.

Along with the household industry boom, the number of households engaged in transport services has also increased. Wenzhou now has 790 or more privately owned trucks and 9,970 freight vessels.

Motorized transport capacity equals the combined total of the State and collective transport companies in the city.

GUANGDONG MEETING DISCUSSES RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK140147 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A provincial conference on rural party rectification work concluded this morning. Lin Ruo, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and head of the committee's guidance group for party rectification, spoke at the conference. He said: Following the completion of district-level party rectification, Guangdong is about to launch rectification at township level. Rectification at this level is extremely important and must be grasped well. Apart from the fact that township-level rectification involves wide areas and many people and there is not much time for it, the township-level party organizations are closely linked to the masses. Hence, rectification at this level can only be done well and must not be a mess. As a result of township-level rectification, the party branches and especially their secretaries should lead the masses to get rich through hard work, and the party branches should be built into strong fighting forces.

Comrade Lin Ruo said: In township-level party rectification, we must base the work on the actual local conditions and get a good grasp of solving local problems that urgently need resolving. [passage omitted]

Wang Ning, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy head of the committee's guidance group for party rectification, delivered a summation. He said: Following the basic completion of district-level party rectification in the rural areas, we must continue to consolidate and develop its results and also get a good grasp of rectification in enterprises and units subordinate to the counties. On how to do a good job in township-level rectification, Wang Ning said that rectification at this level represents an important part of rural party rectification. The tasks are arduous and of great significance. The party committees at all levels must attach great importance to this work and get rid of ideas of not bothering about it. [passage omitted]

The conference was held in Guangzhou from 7 to 13 July.

HENAN CONFERENCE DISCUSSES PUBLIC ORDER

HK120523 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A provincial political and legal work conference was held in Xinxiang from 8 to 11 July. Liu Zhengwei, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Song Zhaosu, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and secretary of the Political and Legal Commission of the provincial CPC Committee, attended and spoke.

The meeting seriously summed up the achievements in the province's struggle against theft and analyzed the current situation in public order. It held: In the summer we must focus on cracking down on hooligans, rape, and other serious crimes, and continue to carry out the struggle against theft.

The conference pointed out that crimes committed by hooligans and the crime of rape have become outstanding problems affecting the steady turn for the better in urban and rural public order. They seriously threaten the masses' safety and good order in society. They also affect order in daily life, work, teaching, and scientific research, pollute the social atmosphere, and interfere with and sabotage economic reform and the effort to build the two civilizations.

We must concentrate forces to crack down on them swiftly and severely, so as to straighten out and preserve good public order during the summer. [passage omitted]

In their speeches, Liu Zhengwei and Song Zhaosu demanded that the party committees and government at all levels continue to strengthen leadership and properly solve practical difficulties in dealing with cases. The comrades of the public security and political and legal departments must coordinate their efforts to do their work well and create a fine social atmosphere, as a still greater contribution to protecting and stimulating economic structural reforms.

HUNAN LEADERS VISIT RED ARMY VETERAN

HK120603 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Excerpts] As commissioned by Comrade Wu Yaobang, on the morning of 11 July Mao Zhiyong, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, and Sun Wensheng and Shen Ruiping, members of the Standing Committee, went to the No 2 hospital subordinate to the Hunan Medical College to visit Mulong Chuqiang, a Red Army veteran who is serioiusly ill. [passage omitted]

A few days ago, the veteran Mulong wrote to Comrade Hu Yaobang to express his infinite loyalty to and firm faith in the party. Comarde Hu Yaobang appreciated Mulong Chuqiang's revolutionary fervor. [passage omitted]

HUNAN MEETING ON PLACING DEMOBILIZED ARMY CADRES

HK100631 Changsa Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Excerpts] This morning, at a provincial meeting of representatives of advanced units and individuals in work on demobilized Armyu cadres, Chen Bangzhu, Standing Committee member of the provincial CPC Committee and provincial vice governor, stressed that demobilized Army cadres have become a new force in building the two civilizations in the province. All areas must properly carry out the work of placing demobilized Army cadres.

Chen Bangzhu said that the placement of demobilized Army cadres is a part of socialist construction, and a channel for the Army to transfer talented people to local departments. Since 1975, and since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the joint efforts of CPC committees and governments at all levels, PLA units stationed in the province, and cadres and the masses, the province has achieved fairly good results in placing demobilized Army cadres. Over the past 10 years, the province has accepted and placed a total of 98,000 demobilized Army cadres. In addition, the province has properly placed wives of the demobilized Army cadres and solved their problems in daily life, such as housing and their children's schooling. Over the past 10 years or so, these demobilized Army cadres have fought on all fronts of the province, boldly carried out reforms, worked hard, and made remarkable achievements. They have thus been widely praised by the masses. [passage omitted]

Chen Bangzhu stressed that reforming the Army structure and reducing the number of armymen by 1 million is an important reform in the history of our Army, and an important strategic plan for strengthening the modernization construction of the Army in the new historical period and implementing the principle that the Army must serve the overall situation of our country's economic construction.

This year and next, a great number of Army cadres will be demobilized and transferred to local units. CPC committees and governments at all levels must further unify their understanding, and make continued efforts to create a new situation in placing demobilized Army cadres in the province.

HUNAN COMMENDS DISCIPLINE INSPECTION UNITS, CADRES

HK100205 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Excerpts] At the provincial meeting to commend outstanding discipline inspection organizations and cadres held on 9 July, (Liu Changming), deputy secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, read out the commission's commendation decision. [passage omitted]

Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, Advisory Commission, People's Congress Standing Committee, government, and CPPCC including Mao Zhiyong, Xiong Qingquan, Liu Fusheng, Chen Bangzhu, Zhao Chuqi, Ji Zhaoqing, Luo Qiuyue, and Peng Mingding, and veteran cadre Guo Sen attended the gathering. [passage omitted]

Comrade Mao Zhiyong made an important speech on the relationship between straightening out party style and reform, opening up, and invigoration. He said: It is essential to have good party style in order to make a success of reform. There can be no question of lossening the principle of party spirit and party discipline while carrying our reform.

He said: There are no ready-made patterns for us to refer to in reform. Many new situations and problems are sure to arise. The discipline inspection departments at all levels must actively support and resolutely protect reform and strive to do their work well, so as to ensure the healthy development of reform.

Mao Zhiyong also pointed out: We must take a correct view of mistakes that occur amid the reform, and enthusiastically help the comrades carrying out reform to sum up experiences and correct the mistakes and shortcomings. We must not regard mistakes occurring in reform as unhealthy trends. However, we must resolutely investigate and deal with those who take advantage of loopholes in reform to abuse their powers and violate law and discipline. We must crack down hard on economic criminals.

Shi Xinshan, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, also spoke at the meeting. He said that the discipline inspection organizations and cadres must get a good grasp of four items of work in connection with learning the experiences of advanced typical examples. 1) continue to get a good grasp of investigating and dealing with major and important cases. [passage omitted]. 2) Make great efforts to correct sectoral malpractices. 3) Conduct education in party spirit, style, and discipline in connection with realities. [passage omitted] 4) Further develop the good situation of the whole party working to improve party style. [passage omitted]

SOUTHWEST REGION

SICHUAN REFORMS FOREIGN AFFAIRS MANAGEMENT SETUP

HK150557 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Excerpt] The province has reformed its foreign affairs management setup by exercising unified leadership, conducting sectoral management, and examining and approving people going abroad in a centralized way. Thus, those who should visit foreign countries have gone abroad and unhealthy trends have been curbed.

Compared with the same period last year, the number of people going abroad in the province in the first half of this year was reduced by 14 percent, and the province's foreign exchange expenses were reduced by 41 percent.

To strengthen leadership over foreign affairs and correct the unhealthy trend of indiscriminately sending people abroad, the province set up a foreign affairs work group in October last year and changed the previous multiple way to the present concentrated way of examining and approving people going abroad. The province has also formulated detailed rules on power levels for sending people abroad and inviting foreigners to the province.

The provincial foreign affairs leadership group has implemented the rules and was praised by cadres and the masses for upholding principle and being impartial and incorruptible. [passage omitted]

SICHUAN LEADERS MEET RETURNED TAIWAN PILOT

OW131925 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1101 GMT 11 Jul 86

[By reporter Fan Liqing]

[Excerpts] Chengdu, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Wang Xijue, former pilot of a Boeing-747 cargo plane of Taiwan's China Airline and now deputy director and deputy chief pilot of the Beijing Regional Administration of the Civil Aviation Administration of China, recently visited his relatives and friends in his native province Sichuan after a 37-year absence. [passage omitted]

Sichuan Governor Jiang Minkuan and Secretary of the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee Yang Rudai successively called on Wang Xijue. On behalf of the Sichuan people, they extended their welcome to Wang on his return to his native province. [passage omitted]

CHONGQING CPC COMMITTEE VIEWS PROBLEMS IN REFORM

HK120217 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Summary from poor reception] The Chongqing City CPC Committee recently pointed out, regarding the replacement of old systems by new in the course of carrying out reforms the factors for the new systems are growing in many fields and displaying ever greater vitality and superiority. However, the vitality of the new systems remains rather weak. "This is conspicuously illustrated by the fact that large and medium enterprises are still subjected to excessive constraints. There is still a serious degree of lack of separation of party and government. At a time when both new and old systems exist, reform has entered a crucial stage when all kinds of contradictions and frictions are appearing."

On the basis of summing up the experiences in reform in recent years, the Chongqing City CPC Committee has understood: "When facing the new stage in which the new systems replace the old as the dominant factor, we must speed up the process of reform without letting the opportunity slip and shorten to the maximum the period of coexistence of the new and old systems. We must ensure that new systems predominate as soon as possible, and that the new systems, which are currently in a secondary position, replace the old systems, which currently predominate."

The City CPC Committee pointed out: "The key to fulfilling this arduous task lies in deepening reform and carrying out synchronous reforms in the economic, political, and cultural systems." The city CPC Committee demanded that the leading cadres at all levels base all their work on reform and ensure that policy measures benefit reform. They should use reform methods to solve problems, and use the yardstick of reform when reviewing work.

CHONGQING SCORES SUCCESS IN FINANCIAL REFORM

HK141404 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Chongqing has made gratifying achievements in reform of the financial system. The initial results achieved by the city in the first half of this year have vigorously promoted economic development in the city.

Since the beginning of this year, under the circumstances of shortage of funds, Chongqing City has made explorations in reforming the financial system. With the efforts of all banks, the province had made much progress. Banks in the city have developed lateral ties in circulating funds and broken with the previous unitary and vertical management system.

1. All banks have developed inter-bank service involving different prefectures and provinces. Since the beginning of this year, banks in Chongqing City have borrowed some 180 million yuan of funds from banks in Beijing and Shenzhen, and from banks in the provinces as well. The influx of a large amount of funds has eased the shortage of circulating funds in the city.

2. Banks in the city have developed lateral ties with each other in circulating funds. The city People's Bank has set up the 5-day funds regulating committee with the people's banks as its core, and used differences in time, space, and season to promptly and flexibly circulate funds among professional banks in the city. By the end of May, banks in the city had borrowed and lent seven sums of funds between each other with a total amount of 180 million yuan.

3. The city has arranged fund redistributing among enterprises and groups, thus strengthening their unity and ties.

The city has now formed financial networks with other areas and provinces and among financial units, groups, and enterprises in the province. In addition, the city has carried out the contract system on commercial bills and other inter-bank services, and made attempts in using the lever of interest rate to regulate loan business. This has provided convenience to commercial activities between enterprises and enlivened the use of funds.

XIZANG'S WU JINGHUA SATELLITE STATION CEREMONY

HK100633 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] China's domestic satellite telecommunications network was officially formed on 8 July. Inauguration ceremonies were held at ground stations in Beijing, Hohhot, Urumqi, and Lhasa.

Wu Jinghua, secretary of the Xizang Regional CPC Committee; Raidi, Mao Rubai, and Gyanincain Norbu, deputy secretaries of the regional CPC Committee; Pagbalha Geleg Namgyai, Sengqen Lozong Gyaincain, Punche, and Langjie, vice chairmen of the regional People's Congress Standing committee; and Qamco, responsible comrade of the regional people's government, attended the ceremony at the Lhasa ground station. Also attending the ceremony were (Yang Houdi), secretary general of the regional CPC Committee; (Liu Huanbing), deputy secretary general of the regional's government; Yang Youcai, secretary of the Lahasa City CPC Committee; Lhasa Mayor Dainba Gyaincain; and (Liu Shihuo), deputy chief of general staff of Xizang Military District.

Comrades Wu Jinghua and Raidi had telephone conversations with Vice Premier Li Peng, who was attending the inauguration ceremony in Beijing. Comrad Wu Jinghua extended gratitude to the central leadership for its concern for Xizang. He said: Now we are closer to Beijing and people of various nationalities in the motherland.

Comrade Wu Jinghua and other comrades also wrote a few words of encouragement for the inauguration ceremony. The words were transmitted to Beijing via satellite and transmitted back to Lhasa via television. The words were very clear on the television screen. The establishment of China's domestic satellite telecommunications network and the operation of the Lhasa ground station will greatly improve telecommunications conditions in the region and throughout the country. A satellite telephone service and a carrier telephone service between Beijing and Lhasa have now been introduced, greatly improving telephone services.

WU JINGHUA MEETS CHINESE RED CROSS DELEGATION

HK140851 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] ON 12 July, Tan Yunhe, party secretary and vice president of the Red Cross Society of China, and his 7-member party, arrived at Lhasa for an inspection tour in the region. At (Congda) airport, they were greeted by (A Deng), vice president of the regional Red Cross Society, and other comrades.

In the afternoon and evening of 12 July, Wu Jinghua, secretary of the regional CPC Committee; Gyibug Puncogcedain, vice chairman of the regional people's government and president of the regional Red Cross Society; and Tudao Doje, vice chairman of the regional people's government, went to Lhasa Guesthouse to greet Tan Yunhe and his party.

Tan Yunhe and his party planned to inspect Xigaze Prefecture after staying in Lhasa for several days.

XIZANG LEADER DISCUSSES RELIGION ISSUE

HK100243 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Excerpts] On 9 July, Dangzin, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered a speech at the regional forum on propaganda work, entitled "Do a Good Job of Building Socialist Spiritual Civilization Based on Xizang Realities."

He said: We must base the building of socialist spiritual civilization on Xizang realities. What are Xizang realities? First, the region's educational foundation is extremely weak and the masses' cultural life is very meager. Second, the influence of the feudal serf system in which politics was integrated with religion is very deep.

Third, Xizang is a nationality region in which practically everyone is a religious believer. Religion permeates the customs and habits of the people here. Fourth, Xizang was always a closed region in the past. Opening up and invigoration will inevitably cause some problems.

Based on this view, the guiding idea on building spiritual civilization in the region is to be guided by communist ideology, carry out education in loving the party and the country, improve the educational level of the Tibetan people, enrich their cultural life, advocate and carry forward traditional Tibetan virtues and outstanding Tibetan culture and establish strong nationalisty self-confidence and pride, so as to serve the building of material civilization in the region. [passage omitted]

He said: There are many contents of building spiritual civilization in Xizang, and every person is involved. The whole party must get to work and the whole of society must make common efforts in order to complete this systematic and complex item of social engineering. [passage omitted]

He said: Nationality religion has its own objective laws of emergence, development, and withering away. In dealing with the nationality religion issue, we must continue to eliminate the influence of leftist thinking, and we must also guard against rightism. We must continue to implement the party's policy on nationality religion. We cannot artifically wipe out religion by applying leftist methods, neither can we artifically develop religion. We must provide positive guidance and strengthen controls, so as to bring the masses' religious beliefs onto a normal track.

We must gradually establish new-style nationality relations of equality, solidarity, and mutual assistance.

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Wu Jinghua and Deputy Secretary Raidi also spoke at the meeting. Responsible comrades of the regional propaganda system and of departments concerned attended the meeting.

GANSU LEADER ON PROBLEMS IN PLANT MANAGER SYSTEM

HK110147 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Hou Zongbin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said at a report meeting on promoting the plant manager responsibility system on 10 July that the leading departments and cadres must take a firm and clear-cut stand in supporting the managerial reforms and unswervingly push the plant manager responsibility system.

At present 785 state-owned industrial enterprises in Gansu are implementing this system on a trial basis, representing 63.56 percent of the enterprises eligible for the system. [passage omitted]

Practice has proven that practicing this system is the right way to follow. However, obstacles from inside and outside the enterprises have been encountered in promoting the system. Hou Zongbin said: What should the enterprises do in the face of these difficulties? The only thing they can do is to unswervingly promote the plant manager responsibility system. Enhancing understanding and unifying thinking is the key to this.

He said: In the final analysis, promoting this sytem means handing back to the plant managers the powers they ought to have in directing production operations, in hiring and firing, and in dealing out rewards or punishments, and dividing work between party and government. Instituting this system is also the urgent requirement of strengthening and improving party leadership. At present, there are all kinds of ideas in the enterprises, and the tasks of ideological and political work are arduous and all the more difficult. If the enterprise party committees cannot be promptly extricated from the situation of taking charge of everything, they cannot meet the new demands in ideological and political work in the new situation.

Hou Zongbin said: Reform needs a relaxed environment. To create a relaxed environment is the unshirkable responsibility of the leading organs and cadres and all departments. The leading cadres and departments must take a firm and clear-cut stand in supporting the plant manager responsibility system and provide good service for the enterprises. They must immediately stop the pratices of arbitrarily imposing charges, fees, and fines, and raising funds in the enterprises, and truly create a relaxed political and economic environment for the plant managers, to ensure the smooth progress of the plant manager responsibility system.

GINGHAI MEETING ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION, ORGANIZATION

HK140143 Xining Ginhai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A Ginghai provincial conference on grass-roots party rectification and organizational work in the rural and pastoral areas said that making a success of party rectification work in these areas in the second half of the year is of great significance for spurring reforms and the building of the two civilizations there.

The conference was held in Xining from 7 to 12 July. Yin Kesheng, Liu Feng, Huanjuecailang, and Ma Wanli attended together with responsible comrades of prefecturl, city, and county CPC committees. [passage omitted]

Huanjuecailang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and head of the committee's guidance group for party rectification, proposed three main tasks to be grasped in continuing to do a good job in grassroots party rectification in the rural and pastoral areas:

1. Get a clearer picture of the guiding idea for party rectification in the rural and pastoral areas of Ginghai. The work must be based on spurring and ensuring reform and economic development. We must persevere in conducting education for the party members by positive example, to enhance their ideological awareness. The work should be focused on enabling the party members to embrace the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly. Through party rectification, we should further consolidate and develop the political situation of stability and unity in the rural and pastoral areas and build the leadership groups well.

2. Draw strict policy demarcation lines.

3. Further strengthen leadership over party rectification work.

Speaking on doing a good job in consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification and in building the grass-roots party organizations, Huanjuecailang said that units that have completed party rectification must carry out a review and solve the left-over problems, to ensure good quality of rectification work. We must get a good grasp of training for the township and village-level cadres, to enable them to gradually gain understanding of the contents of the second stage of rural reforms and to master knowledge and laws regarding commodity economy. [passage omitted]

QINGHAI PROMOTES RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK120315 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Grass-roots party rectification is unfolding smoothly in the rural and pastoral areas of Qinghai, and good results have been achieved. This work began last November. Except for six townships in Yushu and Haixi Prefectures, where party rectification has not yet started because of serious snowstorms, rectification of township party committees has now been completed, while rectification of 48.2 percent of village party branches has been basically completed. It is expected that village-level party branch rectification can be completed next February.

The main expressions of the success of grass-roots party rectification in the rural and pastoral areas are as follows:

1. The party member's concept of party spirit has been strengthened. Deep-going education in party spirit has been conducted for the party members in light of their state of mind. [passage omitted]

2. The party members' awareness of implementing the various policies for reform and economic development has been enhanced. Through study and education, problems of party members' lack of deep understanding of current policies and reform and lack of confidence in turning from poor to rich and developing commodity production have been solved. [passage omitted]

3. Party-masses relations have been improved. The cases of a very small number of party-member cadres seriously abusing powers and violating law and discipline have been dealt with, and the malpractices of arbitrarily occupying, buying, and selling land, gambling, and embezzling public funds have been curbed. At the same time a drive to do good and practical deeds for the people has been launched.

4. The combat strength of the grass-roots party organizations in the rural and pastoral areas has been boosted. The work of readjusting the leadership groups has been seriously tackled. [passage omitted]

5. The political situation of stability and unity in the rural and pastoral areas has been consolidated and developed. Strengthening and promoting nationality solidarity has been grasped as a major affair in party rectification. Nationality relations have thus become more harmonious.

XINJIANG PEOPLE'S CONGRESS MEETING ENDS 8 JULY

HK101303 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The 21st meeting of the 6th regional People's Congress Standing Committee concluded in Urumqi yesterdy afternoon. During the meeting, committee members examined and discussed the reports by (Nie Weiqing), deputy director of the regional judicial department, and (Chen Jingshi), deputy director of the regional public security department, on the situation in popularizing elementary legal knowledge in the region and the situation in the region's social order.

At yesterday afternoon's plenary meeting, the resolution of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional People's Congress Standing Committee on further strengthening the work of popularizing elementary legal knowledge and the namelist of appointments and removals of cadres were adopted.

Regional People's Congress Standing Committee Chairman Amudong Niyazi presided over yesterday's meeting and spoke about the issues of popularizing elementary legal knowledge and of social order. He said: Over the past 6 months or so, with the stress laid on this work by CPC committees at all levels and under their leadership, people's governments at all levels and their subordinate departments in charge of this work in the region have seriously implemented the spirit of the relevant documents and done a great deal of work. [passage omitted]

Amudong Niyazi said: To continuously, extensively, and penetratingly do the work of popularizing elementary legal knowledge, leading organs and leading cadres at all levels must take the lead in studying and applying the law, guard the sanctity of the law, act strictly in accordance with the law, and set an example for the masses. People's governments at all levels must seriously implement the resolutions of the NPC Standing Committee and regional People's Congress Standing Committee on popularizing elementary legal knowledge, really strengthen leadership, take effecitve measures, and carry out the 5-year plan for popularizing elementary legal knowledge. People's Congress standing committees at all levels must strengthen the examination and supervision of the situation in implementing the resolutions.

Amudong Niyazi emphatically pointed out: To strive to realize a steady turn for the better in social order, it is necessary to continuously implement the principle of severely and quickly meting out punishment in accordance with the law and to sternly crack down on serious criminals. At the same time, it is essential to severely crack down on serious economic crimes. It is imperative to grasp firmly the investigation and cracking of cases, to strengthen comprehensively tidying up social order, and to make necessary contributions toward a steady turn for the better in social order in our region and toward the promotion of the progress of the four modernizations.

Vice chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, including Saifulayefu, Yang Yiqing, Caodanofu, Abulizi Muhemaiti, Mayinu'er, Maihesude Tieyibofu, Wang Heting, Husaiyin Siyabayefu, and Zhang Shaopeng, attended yesterday's meeting. Those who attended yesterday's meeting as nonvoting delegates were region vice chairman (Jin Yinhui), regional people's higher court president Nueryouru, regional procuratorate chief procurator Jiti Kuerban, and responsible persons of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, relevant departments, of the regional people's government, and some prefectural, autonomous prefectural, and city People's Congress standing committees.

XINJIANG NAMELIST OF APPOINTMENTS, REMOVALS

HK101305 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] The namelist of appointments and removals of cadres adopted by the 21st meeting of the 6th regional People's Congress Standing Committee is as follows:

(Maimaijinyin Tuohuti) is appointed chairman of the Nationality Affairs Commission of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee and Abulizi Muhemaiti is discharged from the post of chairman of the Nationality Affairs Commission of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee which he concurrently held. (Sha Ming) is discharged from the post of vice chairman of the Nationality Affairs Commission of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee.

(Mao Dehua) is appointed concurrently chairman of the regional Education Commission.

(Dong Wangyu) is appointed director of the regional Public Security Department.

(Jiayimuer Rehegu) is appointed director of the regional Judicial Department.

(Sha Ming) is appointed director of the regional Broadcasting and Television Department.

(Yu Qili) is appointed director of the regional Coal Industry Department.

(Zhang Moru) is appointed director of the regional Audit Bureau.

(Nuermaimaiti Kerimu) is appointed director of the regional Industrial and Commercial Administrative Management Bureau.

Xie Guang is discharged from the post of director of the regional Public Security Department.

Kuerbannuzi is discharged from the post of director of the regional Judicial Department.

Yasukelimu is discharged from the post of director of the regional Coal Industry Department.

Rejiputuofudi is discharged from the post of director of the regional Broadcasting and Television Department.

Abulasuohuqi is discharged from the post of director of the regional Forestry Department.

FOREIGN MINISTER ADDRESSES DEVELOPMENT SEMINAR

Reaffirms Basic National Policy

OW150027 Taipei CNA in English 1502 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- Foreign Minister Chu Fu-sung said Monday that if the Republic of China [ROC] were to give in to Peiping's demand that it change its official name in international organizations, [words indistinct] to hold direct talks with it and, if such talks failed, opt to take Taiwan by force.

Reporting on the country's foreign relations at a session of the ongoing National Development Seminar, Minister Chu said that Peiping's attempt to redesignate the Republic of China as "China, Taipei" in the Asian Development Bank was not an isolated case, but rather part of a package of ploys to realize its "one country, two system" scheme.

Chu also said that several recent attention-getting cases, such as China Airlines' talks with Peiping's Civil Aviation Administration of China and the ROC's decision to take part in the forthcoming World Cup Women's Basketball Championship in Moscow, were all individual cases and had no influence on the country's basic national policy.

The minister reaffirmed the four cardinal principles that President Chiang Ching-kuo declared during his tenure as premier: The ROC will never change its constitutional system and its ultimate goal of national recovery; the ROC will remain in the democratic camp; and the ROC will never change its "no compromise" policy toward the communist rebels. [passage as received]

Chu said that the country's foreign policy is based on the above-mentioned principles. He reiterated that the ROC will never make contact with the Peiping regime, nor develop relations with any other communist nation. "We may exercise flexibility in our measures to attain our final goals. But none of those means should violate our basic national policy and principles," the minister noted.

Says Communists Still Prohibited

OW150345 Taipei CNA in English 0236 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- Minister of Foreign Affairs Chu Fu-sung said Monday that the Republic of China [ROC] has prohibited officials of any communist countries from visiting or attending meetings here.

As for the members of East European trade missions permitted to visit here since the government opened the door of trade to East European nations six years ago, the ROC Government has treated their applications for entry on a case-by-case basis, he said. He made the remarks while answering a question about the government's stand on the possible participation in meetings here by academic personnel from communist countries, as he was reporting the nation's foreign affairs to the 1986 National Development Seminar.

During this emergency the nation is facing in fighting the Chinese Communist threat, the government cannot allow personnel from communist countries to visit or attend meetings here, the minister said.

This country opened its door of trade to East European nations six years ago in line with the government's efforts to diversify foreign trade markets, based on the principle of the separation of politics and economics, he said.

VICE CHIEF OF GENERAL STAFF ADDRESSES SEMINAR

Taiwan Can Surveil West Pacific

OW150349 Taipei CNA in English 0312 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- The sea and air space from Vladivostok to the Gulf of Tonkin is under the close surveillance of the Republic of China, Vice Chief of the General Staff Adm. Yeh Chang-tung said Monday.

Speaking at the 1986 National Development Seminar in Taipei, Yeh said that the Armed Forces of the Republic of China [ROC] are capable of keeping surveillance over the vast area in the west Pacific to avoid possible surprise attacks by a hostile country.

Yeh's remark is the first disclosure of the Republic of China's surveillance capability over the Vladivostok-Gulf of Tonkin area.

The ROC Armed Forces have established a complete intelligence surveillance system, he added.

New Fighter, Other Weapons Designed

OW150405 Taipei CNA in English 0240 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 14 (CNA) -- The Republic of China [ROC] has recently completed the initial design of a new fighter jet and will enter a crucial period in the development of defense technologies in the next three to five years, a ranking defense official disclosed Monday.

Admiral Yeh Chang-tung, vice chief of the General Staff, said that the ROC Armed Forces have made great progress in developing technologies for the manufacturing of some weaponry systems that will come under heavy future demands. The principal purpose in developing these technologies is to build up a self-sufficient defense industry based on the nation's strategic needs, he said.

Reporting on the nation's defense buildup to participants in the National Development Seminar which opened in Taipei Monday, Yeh pointed out that in recent years the Armed Forces have successfully developed several high-performance missiles, such as the ground-to-air "Tien Kung (Sky Bow) missile" and air-to-air "Tien Chien (Sky Sword) missile," and the ship-to-ship "Hsiung Feng missile."

The government has already completed the initial design of a new fighter jet which will meet the nation's future defensive needs, and will enter a crucial stage for the development of this new aircraft in the next few years, he said.

In order to strengthen the armed forces' anti-amphibious capability and to destroy the enemy's landing troops on beaches, the nation has remodeled some of the ROC-made trainers into antiground-assault aircraft, developed tactical napalm bombs, and developed new armored personnel vehicles and machine guns.

In addition to developing and producing new weapons, the Armed Forces have also begun to improve their electronics communication and command systems in order to augment the nation's combat capabilities, Yeh said.

YU ENCOURAGES ARMED FORCES TO MAINTAIN EXCELLENCE

OW150507 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Addressing an Armed Forces meeting on 12 July to review work since the beginning of 1986, Premier Yu Kuo-hua encouraged the officers and men to build up a modernized revolutionary force, apply themselves to the research and development of national defense science and technology, and carry forward the cordial and sincere style of leadership in order to safeguard our bastion and create an opportunity for recovering the mainland.

Premier Yu pointed out: Despite the numerous adversities and difficulties confronting our country, we have a very bright future. We should all the more obey our president's instruction, uphold the fundamental principle of self-reliance and self-invigoration, and the conviction that only those who rely on themselves are aided by others, and make strenuous efforts to overcome every difficulty.

Premier Yu Kuo-hua said: Over the last 30 years or so, our officers and men of the three services have used their lives, blood, and sweat to resist the enemy's aggression, safeguard the bastion for national revival, and smash the wild ambition and subversive attempt of the Chinese Communists and their ilk. Thanks to their efforts, the government has been able to carry out a full-scale national construction program on this clean land. It is a task of prime importance for us to maintain an excellent and powerful national defense force, because we must strive for existence before we can develop.

Premier Yu Kuo-hua urged the officers and men of the three services to build a modernized revolutionary force. They should take psychological construction as a major and fundamental task of the revolution, and work in a staunch revolutionary spirit to create an invincible revolutionary force with sophisticated weapons and equipment, earnest practical training, and advanced strategies and tactics. They should apply themselves to the research and development of national defense science and technology, and establish a self-reliant and independent national defense system on the basis of the research achievements of the armed forces, as well as the academic and industrial circles.

They should carry forward the cordial and sincere style of leadership, uphould the feeling of affection and sincerity, and use their words and deeds to educate the masses to love the country and native land so that everyone will become a main force to propel society forward. In addition, they shluld safeguard the bastion and create the opportunity to recover the mainland. Every effort should be made to discern the schemes and expose the conspiracies of the enemy, and increase alertness against the enemy's infiltration and subversion, to ensure the security of the bastion for national revival, and then create an opporunity to fulfill the task of reunifying China under the Three Principles of the People.

COMMENTARY ON PRC'S DEVALUATION OF RENMINBI

Extent of Action Examined

HK130314 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 5

["Special Report" by Stephen Morgan, Annie Lam, Yan Mei-ning, and Ivan Lo: "Biggest Since '49'"]

[Text] Madam Chen Muhua, governor of the People's Bank of China, suddently announced on July 5 that the exchange rate of the Renminbi [RMB] would be devalued by 15.8 percent.

The former exchange rate of the RMB to the U.S dollar set by China was 3.21 RMB to one U.S. dollar. On July 5, the rate was altered to 3.71 to one U.S. dollar, a depreciation of 16 percent.

The exchange rate for Hong Kong dollars, formerly 41.08 RMB to HK$100, became 47.54 RMB to HK$100. The depreciation adds up to 15.7 percent.

This is the biggest devaluation of the RMB since the Communists came to power in 1949.

The extent of the devaluation led to widespread speculation.

An observer in Beijing told the SUNDAY STANDARD that the devaluation was an unavoidable consequence of the changes in China's economy over the past few years.

The announcement was only a matter of timing.

"During the course of economic reforms and the development of commodity markets in China, we have made adjustments to prices at home. It is only normal to adjust the exchange rate in accordance with price changes, both in the domestic and the international market," said Madam Chen.

The observer said Madam Chen's statement listed the two reasons leading to the RMB devaluation: changes in commodity prices in China and in China's foreign trade.

He suggested that domestic market price changes were the main reason for the devaluation.

At the beginning of the year, the observer recalled, the International Monetary Fund commented: "China carried out its price reform in 1985 with an oversupply of currency. The price index only rose by 8.8 percent and could not reflect inflation pressures.

"In recent years, China has tried hard to solve the problem of prices not reflecting the value of goods. It has raised the prices of agricultural products and raw materials. This has led to rises in the prices of other commodities.

"Furthermore, China's infrastructure construction has expanded too fast and too much credit has been issued. This all weakens the position of the RMB.

"China had to issue more currency as a remedy, and this lowered the value of the RMB, which led to devaluation."

He also pointed out that in the area of foreign trade, the RMB had followed a devaluation trend.

In 1983, China's imports and exports amounted to US$40 billion, with a trade surplus. Foreign exchange reserves at the time reached a record high of US$16 billion and gold reserves reached US$4 billion.

That was the best period China had ever experienced for its foreign trade, he said.

After that, international market prices changed tremendously and the RMB did not make appropriate adjustments.

China, instead of adjusting the RMB's exchange rate, gave subsidies to exported toods. This did help to solve the problem, but created a big burden for the country.

In 1984, China's foreign trade increased enormously, but a deficit of US$1 billion appeared. The burden of subsidising exports became too heavy for the country, and someone in the State Council suggested a package to solve the exchange problem.

Because of its possible wide impact, the plan was not implemented. Only minor changes were carried out.

In 1985, China's international trade totalled US$59.5 billion. But imports increased by 50 percent while exports only increased by four percent. A trade deficit of more than US$6 billion was created.

The sharp rise of imports in 1985 aimed at solving the problem of oversupply of currency in China. The observer pointed out that China had used several billion US dollars to import high quality consumer goods to absorb the RMB in the market, which was over-issued.

Another influence was the relaxation of foreign trade policies. This led to unsystematic exports and duplicated imports.

For example, it is said that China has imported more than 100 colour TV set production lines in recent years. Inported raw material have to be used to fit the imported production lines, but most of the products are for the domestic market.

This caused losses in foreign exchange. China's foreign exchange reserves fell to US$9 billion early this year.

The inappropriate exchange rate brought a series of problems to China. Export manufacturers became less enthusiastic because they were not earning much. They shifted to the domestic market, which accepted lower quality goods. This affected both quality and exports.

There was also an impact on domestic industries. Imported goods, which were of better quality, became comparable in price with home products, because of the exchange rate.

Another problem was the black market. Under the previous exchange rate, many foreign investors found it unprofitable to get their exchange from the banks. They preferred to change money in the black market.

The observer pointed out that the Communists had reviewed their economic strategy at the beginning of the year and decided to change the economy from import-substitute to export-oriented.

The recent devaluation can be seen as a support to the export drive.

Planners Seek To Ease Restrictions

HK130318 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 5

["Special Report" by Stephen Morgan, Annie Lam, Yan Mei-ning, and Ivan Lo: "It's an Historic Move To Break 'Shackles of Administrative Restrictions'"]

[Text] Devaluation of China's currency the Renminbi (RMB) was an "historic" switch in the thinking of policy makers and economic planners in Beijing, according to the manager of economic research at the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, Vincent Cheng.

It marked a move away from "administrative" controls like restrictions on imports, foreign exchange limits and other bureaucratic controls to "monetary levers" like the level of exchange and interest rates used in the West for marco-economic control.

"They have realised that exchange rates could be a mechanism to deal with economic problems," he said.

"The 15.8 percent devaluation is an historic event. It represents a dramatic change in economic policy and it seems they are now backing off from administrative controls towards trying to use monetary levers to get their house in order."

And it expressed a willingness of the younger leadership to try new methods to confront problems.

Moreover, many of these methods are those that would win the approval of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, such as depreciation and reduced exchange controls, he said.

Mr Cheng said that last year's attempt to control imports through restrictions and a gradual depreciation of the currency had failed for two main reasons.

Various units in the provinces which had large quantities of foreign exchange continued to import and the Bank of China was apparently unable to control this with administrative measures.

"This kind of shock treatment is saying: If you want to import, then OK, but you will have to pay for it," he said.

The second reason was that many foreign goods were relatively cheap given the quality of any comparable Chinese product. Making the import of these products more expensive will force reassessment and encourage local sourcing.

However, Mr Cheng said the benefits of the devaluation would be slow in coming, due to the time lag associated with the J-curve effect of devaluation on the balance of payments.

This means that in the short term the deficit could be aggravated, but a slow improvement ought to occur in the balance of payments. It would first bite into imports and a decline in these could be expected to be reflected in trade figures in the next six to 12 months.

He doubted that the devaluation would boost China's exports, even thought the goods in RMB terms would be cheaper. This was because most Chinese products are already at the lower end of the market and not so price sensitive.

And secondly, commodity products like oil make up a major portion of China's exports and their prices are determined internationally. These are negotiated in U.S. dollars, and though obviously when converted to RMB it would show a major rise in earnings, this is a mere book transaction and would add nothing to the foreign reserves, quoted in U.S. dollars.

For local investors involved in joint ventures, Mr Cheng foresaw some hard bargaining ahead, especially for those who had no contract clause stating what portion of earnings in RMB can be converted to foreign exchange for repatriation.

"There will be a lot of haggling about repatriation of money into Hong Kong," he said.

Mr Cheng expected the overall levels of Chinese imports from Hong Kong to continue to fall as in recent months, until there is a substantial pickup in their foreign reserves.

This would be felt most strongly in re-exports, which were very significant in the growth of Hong Kong-China trade in 1984-85, but have fallen off with the restrictions on foreign exchange for consumer durables.

The domestic export scene would be relatively unaffected, mainly because Hong Kong is still oriented towards Western markets, Mr Cheng said.

Effects on Investment Feared

HK130322 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 13 Jul 86 p 5

["Special Report" by Stephen Morgan, Annie Lam, Yan Mei-ning, and Ivan Lo: "Another Devaluation Feared...: Gathering Waves of Hope and Doubts"]

[Text] The recent devaluation of the Renminbi has cast doubts over investments in China and the stability of the currency, according to observers of the Chinese economy.

Some China traders approached by the SUNDAY STANDARD thought there would be another devaluation of the RMB in the latter half of the year.

Sources said some Hong Kong investors in middle and small scale projects were thinking of retreating from China if the RMB continued to fall.

Sino-Foreign equity joint Ventures, whether their investment total is calculated in RMB or U.S. dollars, could face big losses.

Sources from Beijing pointed out that companies like Fujian Hitachi Television Co Ltd, which depend on imported raw materials, are bound to face a difficult time if their products are to be sold in China's home market.

Other companies, like the Beijing Jeep corporation, whose product prices had been set at the lower exchange rate of U.S.$1 to 4 RMB, will not be affected so much.

Sources also said that many exporting companies in China are more than happy and are actively contacting foreign partners to increase their share in profits.

It is a common practice that in equity joint ventures, the Chinese side provides the land and factory, while the foreign partner provides equipment.

The investment amounts are registered on the contract in RMB or in U.S dollars. During the period of cooperation, earnings from products exported will be shared by the two sides in proportion to their investment.

An investor who perferred not to be named said that if the investment was registered in RMB, then the equipment provided by foreign investors would be devalued by 15.8 percent.

Many investment projects were signed at a time when the exchange rate was in the region of less than 30 RMB to HK$100. The rate is now in the region of 47 RMB to HK$100. There is no way of earning back the loss, said the investor.

Most joint ventures have a fixed number of years of cooperation. Only if the term is extended can foreign investors be entitled to share in a few years' more profit.

They will suffer from the devaluation and their confidence in investment in China will be affected.

Mrs Fancy Ng, wife of a Chinese people's Political Consultative Conference member, told the SUNDAY STANDARD that she had invested in hotel and shopping arcade projects in Meixian, Guangdong, out of patriotism.

The investment involved in the projects was calculated in Hong Kong dollars at the time. But mainland cadres had changed it to RMB without her consent at a later stage.

She said it was difficult to predict when she could recover her investment.

Another investor, who lent money to a mainland company for investment in an amusement park, said he was lucky. He had the amount of money stated in U.S. dollars.

But as the income was derived from local people, the period of repayment would be prolonged because of the devaluation.

Mr Shih Ta-lang, lecturer in marketing and international business at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, said investors might well be afraid of another devaluation, for there was no warning before the last one.

"The devaluation will help foreign investors to increase their exports and earn more foreign exchange; it is therefore beneficial to China's foreign trade," said Mr Shih.

"Nevertheless, what foreign investors are actually interested in is the internal market of China. China may have to consider altering the current fixed proportion of exports to internal sales for these joint venture projects," Mr Shih added.

Dr M.H. Chan of the Asian Studies Centre at the University of Hong Kong said the devaluation of the RMB would lower the labour cost of mainland workers, which may stimulate Hong Kong Businessman to shift more processing work to China.

"But the devaluation has come all of a sudden. Many agreements now have to be renegotiated and his leads to controversy," said Dr. Chan.

CALLS FOR POLITICAL REFORM INCREASING IN PRC

HK140809 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 13 Jul 86 p 1

["Special Feature" from Beijing by correspondent Hou Tung-hai: "Chinese Political Reform Brewing" -- dated 12 June]

[Text] In the present upsuring economic structural reforms, a hot discussion about political structural reform is going on in Chinese theoretical circles. In some cultural and theoretical symposiums, some scholars have called for studying political reform; and newspapers have also published articles discussing reform of the Chinese political structure from a theoretical angle. They call for reforming the socialist political structure and the policy-making structure and call for openly discussing questions concerning the political system in China, which was regarded as a "forbidden area" for a long time, and taking these questions as a subject of academic studies. This is undoubtedly a new situation appearing since the CPC stressed the principle of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend" in order to create a relaxed and harmonious atmosphere for "free academic discussions." It will produce far-reaching influence on the developing trend of reform in China and in other socialist countries including the Soviet Union and East European countries.

The Fundamental Purpose Is To Prevent the Repetition of the "Cultural Revolution"

The Political Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences plays a major role in the explorations of China's political reform. Yan Jiaqi, the 44-year-old director of this institute, said that the purpose of our political reform is to perfect our socialist system and to seek fundamental ways to prevent the repetition of the "Cultural Revolution" in any form. We will safeguard our prolonged political stability and ensure steady economic development through reform.

This young scholar sharply pointed out: The central issue of political reform is to solve the problems caused by the excessive centralization of power so as to achieve the objective of building a socialist political system with a high degree of democracy and a scientific political decisionmaking structure. He said: The appearance of the "Cultural Revolution" was related to the lack of a highly democratic political system. In a socialist country such as ours, whether democracy exists and functions is a question that directly affects the making of major state policies and the country's economic development.

A Passage of Deng Xiaoping's Remarks

Yan Jiaqi then quoted a passage of Deng Xiaoping's remarks 6 years ago: "Comrade Mao Zedong once said that Stalin seriously damaged the socialist legal system, and such things would not happen in Western countries. He recognized this matter, but did not actually solve the problems in the leadership system and some other factors. The 10-year catastrophe of the 'Cultural Revolution' still occurred in China."

Yan Jiaqi then listed ways to overcome the excessive centralization of power from four aspects: First, power should be properly divided horizontally. The "horizontal division" of power should be made at both the central and local levels. During the "Cultural Revolution," there was no "horizontal division" or power at all. Under the slogan of "strengthening the party's centralized leadership, state power was all centralized in the hands of a small number of people. The proper "horizontal division of power" is not only a matter concerning the relations between legislative, administrative, and judicial organs, but also concerns relations beteen the party and the government. The proper "division of work" between the party and the government is a major theoretical and practical question in the political structural reform.

Second, power should be divided vertically. The upper authorities can veto the decisions of the lower organs, but should have no power to meddle in the affairs within the jurisdiction of the lower organs. This is the concept of "dividing power vertically." However, some local and department leaders still think that they can make decisions on all affairs in their localities or departments. This in fact violates the principle of "dividing power vertically." In the past, we lacked this concept and did not "use power to check and balance power." Reform will inevitably have an impact on old ideas, and the political structural reform will be bound to have a powerful impact on the idea of "one will have everything if one has power."

Government Power Cannot Infringe Upon Human Rights

Third, the scope of government functions and power must be limited. The area which government power cannot infringe upon is "human rights." During the "Cultural Revolution," government power or political power could infringe upon all parts of people's private lives. People were even forbidden to express their grief at Premier Zhou Enlai's death, still less could there be any "human rights." Such organs of power as the "central group for leading the Cultural Revolution" not only rudely interfered in people's dress, hair styles, hobbies, habits, and other things in private life, but even interfered in people's thinking. People were not only deprived of their right to enjoy themselves, but were even not allowed to express their grief freely. Yan Jiaqi said: Through political reform, not only will government power over economic management be limited, but the jurisdiction of the government in managing social affairs will also be clearly defined. Only thus can "academic freedom" and "freedom of artistic creation" be really guaranteed.

Expanding the Citizens' Participation in Political Activities

Fourth, as for the relationship between the public and the organs or power, the general public should have more opportunities to directly or indirectly participate in the decisionmaking process concerning state affairs. He said that this is also the most important point. The fundamental question which determines the character of the social system in a country is how to improve the system of the people's congresses. He stressed that democracy must be guaranteed by a sound legal system, but the legal system is not equal to democracy. The socialist political system with a high degree of democracy requires people's extensive political participation. This is related to the systems and procedures for nominating and electing the people's deputies and ensuring the quality of the people's deputies.

People's discussions about China's political reform have developed from some private occasions to many public occasions. An important reason for this change is the in-depth development of the economic structural reform, which needs corresponding political reform. Without necessary political reform, it will be hard to carry on economic reform in depth. With economic reform being carried out in an all-round way, the existing political administrative organs and economic management organs, which were set up according to a highly centralist mode, have come into sharper and sharper conflict with the growing socialist planned commodity economy. The traditional adminstrative methods have been proved ineffective in overcoming the problems of the party's functions being confused with government functions, government functions being confused with enterprise functions, the duties and functions of various departments and functionaries being vaguely defined, and administrative organs being overstaffed and unwieldy and indulging in buck-passing. Only in reform can an effective way be found to solve these problems.

Reform Should Begin From Administrative Restructuring

The current trend of public opinion shows that people advocating political reform are trying to make a breakthrough in reforming the adminstrative structure. They hold that the conditions for reforming the administrative structure are ripe in order to advance the political reform which has a bearing on China's future destiny.

In order to carry out such profound reform in the political field, like reforms of the economic structure, the educational system, and the scientific and technological system, it is necessary to have relevant decisions adopted by the CPC Central Committee. Only thus can such political reform be unfolded in the whole country. Recently, during his visit to Yugoslavia, Premier Zhao Ziyang answered a journalist's question about whether China will carry out political reform and said: "With the all-round development of economic structural reform, the government functions will change, and the government structure and the cadre system will also be reformed step by step. Without reform in this regard, the requirements of the economic reform will not be satisfied." Does this mean that the time for China to begin political reform will soon come?

DAYA BAY CLASH BETWEEN TOP PRC LEADERS EXAMINED

HK140248 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 14 Jul 86 p 9

[By David Chen]

[Text] Two promising members of China's third tier of leadership are vying for the top post in the Government, both aiming to become China's next Prime Minister when Mr Zhao Ziyang leaves the State Council to take up another post, according to diplomatic sources in Beijing and Hong Kong.

The two, both vice-premiers, are using a number of energy projects, including Daya Bay nuclear plant, to put forward their different stands.

Mr Li Peng, the technologically-minded official, is fully in favour of going ahead with the project while Mr Tian Jiyun, the financial expert who helped Mr Zhao Ziyang in running Sichuan Province before his recall to Beijing a few years ago, is said to be firmly opposed to the plant.

Diplomat's believe that because of the keen competition between Mr Li and Mr Tian, Mr Deng Xiaoping and other top leaders may decide on a compromise candidate, the newly-appointed fifth vice-premier, Mr Qiao Shi.

There has also been speculation about opposition to Mr Hu Qili, generally regarded as a successor to party General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

The four, all members of the reformist camp, are keen rivals -- which does not bode well for policy differences among them when they take over the second tier of leadership.

And diplomats believe that at the 13th national congress of the Chinese Communist Party next year, all the current top leaders may have to hold on to their posts for at least another year or two.

Only a year ago, Mr Hu Qili and Mr Li Peng were all but confirmed in their aspirations to top party and Government posts.

The credentials of Mr Hu Qili, a former first secretary of the Communist Youth League, were impeccable and his ascendancy in the hierarchy has been meteoric. He faded from the political limelight during the Cultural Revolution and re-emerged after Mr Deng Xiaoping and Mr Hu Yaobang returned to power in 1977. He served briefly in Tianjin and became the top man in the revived Communist Youth League, a position that his mentor, Mr Hu Yaobang, once held.

From then on, he headed various departments of the Central Committee and was appointed a member of the party Secretariat, recently taking over its day-to-day work, a task that Mr Hu Yaobang once undertook.

In the past two years, Mr Hu Qili has been most active in the political arena and travelled widely throughout the country and abroad. He was, and still is, regarded as the most likely successor to Mr Hu Yaobang as the party General Secretary.

But lately there has been firm opposition to Mr Hu Qili, according to people in diplomatic circles, particularly from elements in the conservative camp, headed by the country's top economist, Mr Chen Yun, President Li Xiannian, and the chairman of the National People's Congress, Mr Peng Zhen.

Meanwhile, China's propaganda machinery is also in disarray. The Central Committee's propaganda department was for several years led by an orthodox Marxist, Mr Deng Liqun, who was against any liberalisation in the cultural field.

His stand led to several serious conflicts, and in the end he was removed from the department to be replaced by the more liberal-minded Mr Zhu Houze.

But before relinquishing his post, Mr Deng managed to plant his followers in several key positions and in spite of his determined efforts, Mr Zhu appears unable to exercise full control of the propaganda department and the country's media.

The result was confusion in the enunciation of the party line, with cadres of different political thoughts championing different concepts, all in the same columns of the nation's major press.

Many analysts now think there may not be major changes in the leadership when the Chinese Communist Party convenes its 13th national congress next year. The stalemate, however, is not expected to last for long and within a year or two, both the conservative elements as well as Mr Deng Xiaoping, Mr Zhao Ziyang and Mr Hu Yaobang, will leave the party Politburo.

In the Government, there also appears to be serious conflict between those representive the older bureaucracy, who inherited the mantle of the late Mr Zhou Enlai, and the new leadership, headed by Mr Zhao Ziyang.

Mr Li Peng, the Vice-Premier who champions technological innovations and is a champion is searching for new energy sources, is generally regarded as representing the "old guard" of the bureaucuracy.

The son of a communist revolutionary killed by the Kuomintang, he was looked after by Zhou Enlai and his wife and received an excellent education. After the People's Republic was founded, Mr Li was sent to the Soviet Union to further his study.

Returning to China, he rose steadily through the ranks, the Cultural Revolution notwithstanding.

After Mr Deng Xiaoping returned to power in 1977, Mr Li was given a series of Government posts, in which he distinguished himself. Specialising in energy resources, Mr Li became the chief spokesman on energy and championed the search for new sources and latest technology.

He is a strong advocate of the Three Corges hydro-electric project as well as the construction of nuclear power stations.

His advocacy has earned him a great many opponents, particularly in the Three Gorges project, which was firmly opposed by the environmentalists.

Environmentalists say the project would totally upset the ecological balance not only in the middle-reaches of the Yangtze River but in the lower reaches and other parts of China as well.

Mr Tian, on the other hand, is a newcomer to the central leadership. After working mostly in the provinces, he was in charge of the finance department of the Sichuan provincial government under Mr Zhao Ziyang in the late 1970s and worked closely with Mr Zhao in revamping the province's economy, with spectacular success.

Mr Zhao was later recalled to Beijing as a vice-premier and when he became Prime Minister in 1979, Mr Tian was seconded to the central Government and worked as Secretary General of the State Council. Two years ago, Mr Tian was promoted to be Vice-Premier along with Mr Li Peng.

There has since been intense speculation over Mr Zhao's successor and both Mr Li and Mr Tian are regarded as strong contenders, the other vice-premiers, Mr Wan Li and Mr Yao Yilin, being too old to take over the premiership.

Increasingly, it looks as if the leadership under Mr Deng Xiaoping prefers to maintain the status quo, at least for another two years or so, before any major change is to be effected.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

China

Vol I No 137 17 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

RENMIN RIBAO on Mitterrand's Visit to U.S., USSR [12 Jul] A 1
China To Launch Satellites for Foreign Companies A 3
U.S. Prepared To Discuss SALT II With Soviets A 3
PRC Application 'Welcomed' at GATT Session A 4

UNITED STATES

XINHUA Commentary on U.S. Treatment of Zimbabwe B 1

SOVIET UNION

LIAOWANG on USSR's Accelerating Economic Growth [OVERSEAS EDITION 7 Jul] C 1
PRC, Soviet Cinematographers Sign Agreement C 4

NORTHEAST ASIA

Commentary Marks PRC-DPRK Treaty Anniversary D 1
Qiao Shi Fetes DPRK Friendship Delegation D 2

SOUTHEAST ASIA & PACIFIC

Chen Muhua Meets With Asian Bank Delegation E 1
Son Sann Urges European Sanctions Against SRV E 1

WESTERN EUROPE

Zhao Ziyang Continues European, Africa Trip G 1
    Premiers Hold Press Conference G 1
    Zhao on Relations With SRV, USSR G 1
    Urges Gibraltar Settlement G 2
    King Accepts Invitation to PRC G 2
    Zhao, Gonzalez Address Banquet G 3
Air Force Commander Meets French Delegation G 3
Wang Zhen Meets Italian CP Delegation 13 July G 3

MIDDLE EAST & AFRICA

Kuwaiti Minister on Investment in PRC, USSR I 1
News Analysis on Syrian Entry to West Beirut I 1
RENMIN RIBAO on Political Storm in Israel [13 Jul] I 2

Officials Attend Iraqi National Day Reception I 3
Briefs: Ambassador to Syria; Iranian Sports Delegation; PRC-Burundi Protocol I 3

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

XINHUA Correction to Wang Zhen Title K 1
Culture Ministry Changes Detailed for Officials K 1
Wang Meng, Zhu Houze Address Cultural Conference K 2
Zhu Houze Calls for Improved Cultural Life K 3
Wang Meng Interviewed on Cultural Situation [RENMIN RIBAO 13 Jul] K 4
RENMIN RIBAO on Sun Yat-sen Thought Symposium [11 Jul] K 6
Li Peng Article on Educational Reform [RENMIN RIBAO 13 Jul] K 7
Leaders Urged To Avoid Complacency, Heed Criticism [RENMIN RIBAO 14 Jul] K 11
RENMIN RIBAO Commentator Emphasizes Work Efficiency [15 Jul] K 13
HONGQI Urges New Cadres To Accept Work at All Levels K 14
Chen Muhua Reviews Bank's Progress, Gives Goals K 15
Democratic Parties End Meetings in Beijing K 17
Reform of Enterprise Party Leadership Urged [GONGREN RIBAO 27 Jun] K 18
Railroad Passenger Traffic Shows Decline K 19
PLA To Introduce Noncommissioned Officer Status K 20
Yu Qiuli Urges Air Force To Improve Leadership K 20
Yang Shangkun on Improving PLA Party Conduct K 21
PLA Improves Party Style, Army Discipline K 22
Political Quality Stressed in PLA Education K 24
Army Leaders Review Party Consolidation Efforts K 25
Officials Speak on PLA Party Rectification K 25
All-PLA Conference on Personnel Work Ends K 28
First Home-Made Naval Training Vessel Launched K 29
Leaders Inscribe for Lawyer's Association K 29
WENZHAI BAO on Problems Caused by Retiring Cadres [6 Jul] K 30
RENMIN RIBAO Carries HONGQI Table of Contents [15 Jul] K 31

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

Liang Buting Addresses Shandong Mayors' Meeting O 1
Shandong Transfers Military to Local Governments [DAZHONG RIBAO 4 Jul] O 2

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

Guangdong's Lin Ruo Visits Typhoon-Hit Areas 16 July P 1
Henan County Dismisses Incompetent Township Leaders P 1
Zhao Di Speaks on Henan Cadres' Roles in Reform P 2

SOUTHWEST REGION

Xizang's Wu Jinghua Addresses Minority Athletes Q 1
Yunnan Issues Circular on Intellectuals Q 1

NORTH REGION

Beijing Secretary Speaks at Party Commendation Rally [BEIJING RIBAO 30 Jun] R 1
Xing Chongzhi Addresses Hebei Retired Cadres [HEBEI RIBAO 30 Jun] R 2

NORTHEAST REGION

Sun Weiben at Heilongjian PLA District CPC Plenum S 1
Gao Di Addresses Jilin Advisory Commission Plenary Session S 1
Duan Junyi, Gao Di at Jilin Ribbon-Cutting Rally S 3
Gao Di Attends Jilin Family Planning Conference S 3
Liaoning's Quan Shuren Receives DPRK Delegation S 4
Liaoning Official on Straightening Out Party Style S 4
Liaoning Holds Party Rectification Conference [LIAONING RIBAO 27 Jun] S 5

NORTHWEST REGION

Gansu Party Secretary Visits Factory Fire Site T 1
Shaanxi Leaders Discuss Coalfield Development T 1
Shaanxi Commentator on Slander Against Reformers [SHAANXI RIBAO 23 Jun] T 1
'War' Industry Base, Shaanxi Enterprises Cooperate T 3
Song Hanliang, Others Attend Urumqi Law Course T 3

PRC MEDIA ON TAIWAN AFFAIRS

Problems, Changes for Taiwan's Diplomatic Policy [LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION 7 Jul] U 1
Official Refuses To Discuss Taiwanese Spy Report [AFP] U 2
KMT Urged To Pursue Cooperation With CPC U 2

TAIWAN

Textile Industry Urged To Upgrade, Diversify V 1
Briefs: Joint Japanese Software Accord V 1

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Daya Bay Symptom of Deeper Schism Among Leadership [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 15 Jul] W 1
PRC Gold Shipments to Hong Kong Reportedly Cease [HONG KONG STANDARD 16 Jul] W 2
Li Peng's Wife Heads Daya Bay's Beijing Office [HONG KONG STANDARD 15 Jul] W 3
Official Reports Foreign Ventures Exchange Deficit [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 16 Jul] W 4
Meeting on SEZ Laws, Regulations Concludes [WEN WEI PO 11 Jul] W 6

RENMIN RIBAO ON MITTERRAND'S VISIT TO U.S., USSR

HK141138 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jul 86 p 7

[Commentary by staff correspondent Ma Weimin from Paris on 11 July: "Between the United States and the Soviet Union -- President Mitterrand Visits the United States and the Soviet Union"]

[Text] It must be said that the week of 4-10 July was a very busy one for President Mitterrand. On the 3d day following his presence at the 100th birthday party of the Statue of Liberty and his meeting with President Reagan, President Mitterrand arrived in Moscow for his third meeting with Soviet leaders in 2 years. In Moscow, he had three rounds of talks with General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev. Their talks took a long time and involved a wide range of topics, and even "went very deep into all topics" (Mitterrand). So far Mitterrand has had more meetings with Gorbachev than has any other Western leader.

Mitterrand said: "Within 4 days we arrived in Moscow from New York. This has given us an interesting panorama." Before departing from New York on 4 July, he said that he would give Reagan a detailed report by letter after his meeting with Gorbachev. For this reason, public opinion paid great attention to Mitterrand's visits to the United States and the Soviet Union, viewing them as important diplomatic contacts between East and West at a time when some fresh air is coming out again from U.S.-Soviet relations.

France has consistently alleged that it will act as neither a "mediator" nor a carrier of message between the United States and the Soviet Union. However, during his visit to the Soviet Union, Mitterrand said: "It is hoped that France will make the United States and the Soviet Union understand that mutual consultations are better than disputes." It is thus seen that it is obvious that France intends to help link the United States and the Soviet Union.

There are many disputes between East and West on political strategy, including differences between France and the Soviet Union -- the French nuclear arsenal and the issue of human rights. According to French accounts of Mitterrand-Gorbachev talks and news reports published by the French press on the Soviet attitude, it is believed that the basic position of both sides on some major issues remains unchanged, but there has appeared a sign of flexibility in the East-West relationship.

-- Regarding U.S.-Soviet summits, through his talks with both American and Soviet leaders, Mitterrand understands that both sides hope for a summit, but the meeting must be fruitful. He both believes that "a summit meeting must be fruitful. He both believes that "a summit meeting will be held this year, but diplomats still have a lot to do."

-- Regarding U.S.-Soviet nuclear disarmament, Mitterrand has acquired a fresh understanding from his Moscow visit that the SDI is a "key stumbling block" but not an "insurmountable barrier." Viewing that the Soviet Union has conditionally agreed that the United States can conduct research within the limits of the laboratory stage, it stands to reason that the United States and Soviet Union will continue to seek a compromise approach to the problem.

-- Both sides "widely" discussed the Stockholm disarmament talks on Euromissiles, the Soviet Union "put forward a very interesting" proposal (Mitterrand), and set forth a number of concrete ideas for the "faithful measures" which Western countries regard as prerequisites. France believes that the Soviet Union devoutly hopes that an agreement will be reached before the meeting ends on 19 September. The Soviets, too, believe that France intends to play an influential role.

-- Both sides discussed, "in detail," problems relating to the French nuclear arsenal. A Soviet spokesman said the two leaders "are far from coming to an agreement," but the Soviet Union "understands the French demand of exercising its sovereignty over its nuclear forces." The latter part of the remark has aroused keen attention of the French public, but its real implications are still unknown.

It seems that Gorbachev did not studiously evade the issue of human rights, to which France and other Western countries attach great importance. Thus, Gorbachev was the first Soviet leader who openly talked about the problem. At a state banquet in honor of Mitterrand, he expounded Soviet views on the issue in an all-round way and said that "the Soviet Union is seeking practical solutions to the issue." It has been reported that France submitted a list of names involving 21 persons as well as an additional 400-person list to the Soviet Union. Optimistic sources believe that some individual problems can be settled in the near future.

However, all the above are only faintly visible indications of flexibility; whether they are true or not has yet to be proved.

President Mitterrand's visit to the Soviet Union shows that the Soviet Union is making every effort to persuade Western Europe. Press circles here noted that the whole speech made by Gorbachev at the banquet in honor of Mitterrand was aimed at Western Europe. He tried hard to seek unanimity with France and other West European countries on the issue of peace and disarmament. He pointed out: Nuclear war is not the only danger to Europe. There are now 150 nuclear reactors and hundreds of chemical plants in Europe; only a few conventional bombs may cause heavy casualties. Therefore, Europe should become an "example of coexistence." It is understood that the Soviet Union will pay more attention to Western Europe while it continues to take the United States as its main adversary. Seeing the "specific relations" between the United States and Britain and the close ties between West Germany and the United States for the sake of both's security, the Soviet Union has seemingly placed the focus of its work on France. The paper LE FIGARO points out that the Soviet Union "is sparing no efforts to foster differences between France and (the United States)."

In its relations with the Soviet Union and the United States, France faces some specific problems with either of them. If we say the major problem between France and the Soviet Union is the question of strategic security, then the contradictions between France and the United States find expression mainly in the economic field and some partial problems. Before concluding his visit to the Soviet Union, Mitterrand reaffirmed: France belongs to a military alliance and it will not act as a "single cavalryman." Therefore, there will be no "unilateral negotiations" between France and the Soviet Union." "Before and after his Moscow visit, the position of France on the international chessboard did not and will not change." He also said: "But the way of playing chess can be different."

Over the past 2 years, the cool Franco-Soviet relations have been smoothed. This autumn French Premier J. Chirac will pay another visit to the Soviet Union. This will give a new impetus to Franco-Soviet relations. The French maintain that if the Soviet Union plans to lay stress on economic construction just as public opinion in Western countries has analyzed, this will be beneficial to France both politically and economically, so it has to push the development. Whether this logic convinces President Reagan is another thing.

CHINA TO LAUNCH SATELLITES FOR FOREIGN COMPANIES

OW152018 Beijing XINHUA in English 1439 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Companies from Britain, the Netherlands, Canada, Australia, Pakistan, Indonesia and other countries are contacting China for satellite launching service, an official of the Chinese Space Industry Ministry said here today.

China has singed an agreement with a Swedish company to help it with its satellite program, he said. The two sides are now entering into detailed discussions. In April, China also signed a memorandum with Teresat Inc. of the U.S. to launch two satellites.

The official said since 1970, China has successfully launched 18 satellites using Long March carrier rockets.

In accordance with international practice, it generally needs 30 months or more from the date of reservation to the launching. "China will do its best to shorten the period," the official said.

U.S. PREPARED TO DISCUSS SALT II WITH SOVIETS

OW161901 Beijing XINHUA in English 1847 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 16 (XINHUA) -- The United States has informed the Soviets that it is prepared to meet with them in Geneva around July 22 to discuss the SALT II arms limitation treaty.

On May 27, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said Washington would abandon the unratified SALT II treaty by the end of this year unless Moscow takes "constructive steps" in arms control.

White House spokesman Edward Djerejian told reporters today that the United States "will be prepared to respond to questions or concerns of the Soviet Union with respect to the President's May 27th decision." Meanwhile, he said, Washington would expect that "in the context of such a discussion, the Soviet Union will also be prepared to address U.S. concerns about Soviet non-compliance with arms control agreements."

The talks were sought by the Soviet Union in order to get a U.S. clarification on President Reagan's decision.

Djerejian also said the United States has agreed to talk with Moscow on the threshold ban treaty and the peaceful explosion treaty, which limit the size of underground nuclear explosions for both countries. The two treaties were signed in 1974 and 1976, respectively, but were not ratified by U.S. congress on the grounds that they lack adequate verification measures.

The White House spokesman made it clear that the United States "intends to continue testing" nucelar weapons until verification methods have been agreed upon.

PRC APPLICATION 'WELCOMED' AT GATT SESSION

OW161158 Beijing XINHUA in English 0807 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Geneva, July 15 (XINHUA) -- China's application for resuming its status at The General Agreement on Tariff and Trade (GATT) was welcomed at a GATT council meeting held here today. The Chinese Government forwarded its official application to GATT General Director Arthur Dunkel July 11. Chinese representative Qian Jiadong issued a statement on the application at the meeting.

Qian said in the statement, "It was only due to historical reasons that the formal relationship between China and the GATT was later suspended. The Chinese Government considers that now is the time for China to seek the resumption of its status as contracting party to the GATT as well. "We wish to see expansions in our economic and trade relations with other countries. The resumption of China's membership and its participation in the work of the GATT as a contracting party will not only promote such relations, particularly with the contracting parties, but also be conductive to furthering the objectives of the GATT.

"As a developing country, naturally, China expects, on resumption of its membership, to receive the same treatment as is accorded to the other developing contracting parties."

The Chinese representatives said China will provide the GATT with necessary information regarding China's economic system and foreign trade position by the turn of the year. "The Chinese Government is also prepared to enter into substantive negotiations with the GATT contracting parties any time it is convenient," Qian said.

After the issuing of the statement, representatives from 26 countries and regions expressed welcome to China's application in their speeches.

The Pakistani representative said that China's resumption of its GATT status will greatly reinforce the work of the organization.

The Chilean representative said that China's re-entry will strengthen the positions of the Third World in the GATT.

The Australian representative said that China's resumption of the GATT seat will be beneficial to the system of multilateral negotiations and the expansion of international trade as well.

The representative of the European Economic Community said that it will be an important international event.

Today's GATT meeting also adopted the report and protocol on Mexico's entry into the GATT. Mexico handed in its application for the entry last November. The Mexican representative said today he hopes that the contracting parties can finish voting on his country's entry by August 15 and it can join the organization officially before September 15, when the GATT ministerial meeting is scheduled to be held in Uruguay.

XINHUA COMMENTARY ON U.S. TREATMENT OF ZIMBABWE

OW121432 Beijing XINHUA in English 1401 GMT 12 Jul 86

["Commentary: Why Is Washington so Mean? -- by Shi Lujia" -- XINHUA Headline]

[Text] Washington, July 11 (XINHUA) -- The United States yesterday suspended its economic aid to Zimbabwe and demanded a formal appology by the Zimbabwean Government for what it termed the country's "baffling diplomacy" towards the United States.

What did the Zimbabwean Government do to make Washington so irritated?

At a July 4 reception at the American Embassy in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe, David Kariamazira, minister of youth, sport and culture, blasted the Reagan administration for applying economic sanctions against Nicaragua, Poland and Libya, but refusing to do anything serious to South Africa. He said the United States, using the excuse of fighting terrorism, attacked "civilian targets" in Libya while turning a blind eye to the terrorism conducted by the racist Pretoria regime against the country's black population and its neighboring countries. This clearly reveals U.S. "appeasement" of South Africa's apartheid policy, he said.

However, putting aside whether the minister's remarks are justified or not, the incident itself means nothing serious. Looking back through history to the present, the United States has on many occasions poked its nose into other countries' foreign policy even their domestic affairs. Why should the United States get so frustrated when someone for once criticizes U.S. foreign policy?

Now, let us look at the minister's remarks. It goes without saying that they are justified. The South Africa regime, which is run by a white minority, has long pursued an apartheid policy, suppressing the country's black majority and repeatedly violating the sovereignty of its neighboring countries. Its misbehavior has drawn world indignation and criticism and many Western countries have kept their distance from the racist regime.

However, the United States, making every excuse and looking for every chance to show its sympathy and understanding, has obliged itself to the policy of "constructive contacts" and refused to impose any sanction against the Pretoria regime facing such an unjustified policy, why cannot one criticize the United States? The United States said that everybody can criticize the United States except Zimbabwe, because Zimbabwe is a recipient of U.S. aid and the aid is given to make the country become a "friend" of the United States.

Not long ago, the U.S. State Department presented to Congress a report in which it added up the percentage of countries which have voted for the United States at the United Nations. To its dismay, only Israel and a few of its NATO allies voted in favor of more than 50 percent of the U.S. proposals. If the United States insists on using cooperation as a criterion for judging a friend, the friends of the United States can be easily numbered.

Calling the U.S. suspension of economic aid to Zimbabwe "a blackmail," Zimbabwean Prime Minister Robert Mugabe has made it clear that he agrees with his minister's statement and an apology is out of the question.

Facing the just stand of the Zimbabwean Government, why shouldn't the United States make a self-criticism for its big power behavior?

LIAOWANG ON USSR'S ACCELERATING ECONOMIC GROWTH

HK111540 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 pp 28-29

[Article by Wang Xianju and Yang Futian: "The Soviet Union Is Carrying Out a New 5-Year Plan of 'Accelerating Strategy'"]

[Text] On 19 June, the 5th Session of Supreme Soviet of the Soviet Union approved the 12th 5-Year Plan for Soviet economic and social development (from 1986-1990). The session held that the plan was a "decisive stage" for the realization of the accelerating strategy decided on by the 27th Congress of the CPSU.

Switch to Development of Intensive Operation of the Economy

At a plenum of the CPSU Central Committee which was held on the eve of the Supreme Soviet session, Mikhail Gorbachev pointed out that the major task of the new 5-year plan was to raise economic results on the basis of accelerating scientific and technological progress and "change policies on economic structure and investment in order to facilitate intensive social production."

Through over half a century of construction, the Soviet Union already has fairly great economic strength. However, since the beginning of the 1970's, Soviet economic difficulties have become aggravated and there has been a declining trend in its economic growth rate. It has failed to fulfill the major tasks of the preceding three 5-year plans. From 1966-1970, the annual average growth rate for its national income was 7.7 percent, but in the period from 1981-1985, it dropped to 3.1 percent. This situation has not only hindered the further improvement of the Soviet people's living standards, but also put the Soviet Union in an unfavorable position in its economic and arms races with the United States.

Apart from shortage of labor, unfavorable weather, the growing exhaustion of resources in its western areas, and the need for large amounts of investment in developing its eastern areas, the major problems that caused the decline in Soviet economic growth rates, just as Gorbachev pointed out in his political report to the 27th CPSU Congress, were: It has "failed to promptly make political estimates of changes in the economic situation or to understand the urgent need to switch to developing intensive operation of the economy and to the conscientious application of scientific and technological progress and achievements in its national economy." Nikolay Ryzhkov, chairman of the USSR Council of Ministers, also pointed out that "the most fundamental cause for the shortcomings was that in our actual activities, we failed to promptly consider changes in the economic situation owing to the disappearance in the main of the possibility to develop the economy by extensive operation and we failed to be as firm as we ought to have been in applying the achievements of scientific and technological progress and in restructuring our national economic and management systems in the light of the demand of the times."

In the face of the "serious situation" and "unfavorable trend" in Soviet social and economic development, the Soviet Union has fixed the major targets of its 12th 5-Year Plan higher than those for the preceding 5-year plan, stipulating a 22.1 percent increase for its national income in the coming 5 years; a 25 percent increase for its industrial output value; a 14.4 percent average annual increase for its agricultural output value; a 25 percent increase in its industrial labor productivity; and a 14 percent increase for the per capita real income of its residents.

Soviet leaders called the 12th 5-Year Plan a "turning point plan" for the transition from extensive to intensive development of the national economy. The major indicator for this is that the plan placed particular emphasis on improving labor productivity, product quality and energy conservation. The plan stipulates that in the coming 5 years, the growth in its national income, industrial output value, and the output value of its other production sectors has to rely almost entirely on raising labor productivity. This is for the first time in the history of Soviet economic development.

Accelerate Scientific and Technological Progress

Under the background of the surge of the new scientific and technological revolution throughout the world, the Soviet Union believes that accelerating its scientific and technological progress is an "important lever" to raise the efficiency of its national economy and a "major means" to realize the intensive operation of its production. The strategy that it has drawn up to accelerate its scientific and technological progress is: Concentrating its funds on solving key problems in its national economy and popularizing everywhere, the brand new technological equipment and processes that have been proved by practice can substantially increase its labor productivity. In the coming 5 years, every sector should increase the application of fundamental advanced technology by 50 percent, the average level of automation in its economy should rise by 100 percent, the output of computers should increase by 130 percent, and the number of industrial robots should increase by 200 percent. At present, there are about 5,300 scientific research institutes throughout the Soviet Union and 1.46 million scientific workers, who account for about one fourth of the total number of scientific workers in the world. The Soviet Union has scored major achievements in nuclear fusion, astronautics, physics, mathematics, and biology and is among the front runners in the world in these fields. However, since the 1970's its scientific and technological development has slowed down and clearly lagged behind in the fields of electronics, computers and automatic machinery. According to relevant specialists' estimate, the Soviet Union lags behind the United States by 12-20 years in the application of industrial technology and by 10-15 years in the fields of electronic technology, petrochemical industry, instruments, meters, and automatic tools.

What has caused its science and technology to lag behind are defects in its existing scientific and technological management system, the serious separation between heavy war industry and light civil industry and between scientific research and production and the slow popularization of new technology. At the 27th CPSU Congress, Gorbachev criticized the phenomenona of some scientific and technological achievements failing to be applied and popularized for a long time. He cited the example that Soviet scientists discovered the non-wearing-and-tearing effect 30 years ago, but this has not yet been widely applied even now. They invented a wearproof packing for bearings nearly 10 years ago, but this has not yet been widely used either. "Sometimes, an application for title over invention has to wait for several years to pass examination and verification and this has become a process filled with misery."

In order to remove the obstacles to the development and progress of science and technology in the existing scientific and technological management system and in order to raise the efficiency of its scientific research institutes, the Soviet Union plans to adopt a new management system. First, it will "resolutely reform science in its production sectors" and make it more easily available for production sectors, and shoulder all-round responsibility for the scientific and technological level of their corresponding production sectors. In addition, it will vigorously develop a trans-departmental scientific and technological complex in order to make science merge better with production.

The Soviet Union has also decided to utilize world advanced scientific and technological achievements through enlarging its trade and scientific and technological cooperation with other countries, and acquiring loans and credit. Inside CEMA, it will focus on developing atomic energy, electronic technology, automation, new materials and bioengineering together with other member countries in order to strive to catch up and surpass the United States, Japan and other Western countries in these fields as soon as possible.

Readjust Structural and Investment Policies

Changing its policies concerning the structure of its national economy and its investment policies is another important measure that the Soviet Union is to take in order to realize its "accelerating strategy." Ryzhkov said: "The essence of the change is to switch the focus of our attention from quantitative indexes onto quality and economic results; from pursuing intermediate achievements into pursuing final achievements; from expanding production funds to expanding production renewal funds; and from increasing the resources of fuel and raw materials to improving their utilization."

In the new 5-year plan period, the Soviet Union will accelerate the development of its machine building, electric power, chemical and petrochemical industries, which will enable its economy to reach world advanced technological and scientific level. By 1990, their proportion in its industry will rise to over 40 percent. The most important will be its machine building industry, which will grow at a rate 90 percent higher than that of the entire industry. By 1990, the annual rate of renewal of its machine building industrial products will reach 13 percent, but that for the year 1985 was only 4.5 percent.

At the same time, the Soviet Union decides to readjust its investment policies:

-- It will increase the proportion of accumulation in its national income. Over the past 15 years, the growth rate of Soviet investment has continued to decline drastically and thus affected the growth of funds for the renewal of fixed assets and the growth of production capacity, and finally affected the development of its national economy. In order to change this situation, it has decided to raise the growth rate of production investment in the coming 5 years to 25 percent from the 16 percent of the preceding 5-year plan.

-- It will switch from focusing on building new enterprises and expanding enterprises to focusing on the technological renovation and transformation of its existing enterprises. In the coming 5 years, it will allocate more than 200 billion rubles for the refitting and technological transformation of its production equipment. This is more than the total allocation for this purpose in the past 10 years. The proportion of this investment in the total investment of its economy will rise from 37 percent in 1985 to 50 percent in 1990.

-- It will overcome the practice of scattering its capital construction funds and reduce the periods of investment by at least 5 percent. At present, the Soviet Union is carrying out the construction of over 300,000 large and small projects. The construction is slow and large amounts of funds are locked up. In order to counter this situation, the Soviet Union has decided to rearrange its capital construction projects and beginning in 1987, it will arrange the plans and construction for its capital construction projects in strict accordance with standards.

Reform the Economic Management System

In the main, the forms of production relations and the administration and management systems in the Soviet Union took shape under the situation of the extensive development of its economy. As times have changed, they have gradually become outdated and begun to lose their impetus to the economy and to hinder the development of the productive forces. Since the mid-1950's, the Soviet Union has made quite a few experiments in economic reform, but has not achieved much effect and failed to reach the planned goals. Its existing management system has low efficiency and great waste and is overcentralized.

The current Soviet leadership sees the importance and urgency of reform. The 27th CPSU Congress decided on the principle of carrying out an overall economic reform. The key to the reform is to heighten the efficiency of the centralized leadership over its economy and also to expand the decisionmaking power of combined companies and enterprises, heighten their sense of responsibility for the results of their work, and perfect their management system including merging departments of the same kinds, eliminating intermediate links and resolving the contradictions of separation between departments and areas.

Since the congress, the Soviet leadership has already adopted some specific measures to push forward the economic reform. The production in the first 5 months of this year has improved compared with the same period last year, but there is still fairly great resistance in the road of reform. Recently, Gorbachev said: "The period of time since the congress shows that the speed of our advance and our mastery of the new administration and management methods have slowed down to a fairly large extent owing the overstaffing in our management organs and our low work efficiency. The process of redistributing power and duties between and central departments responsible for economy and ministries as one party and the enterprises, combined production companies and labor collectives as the other, has been filled with many hitches." He criticised some leaders and said that "even under the situation when the functions of the management organs have been changed, they still do their utmost to maintain their power of command in various ways."

Whether the Soviet Union will be able to smoothly fulfill its 12th 5-Year Plan and attain the strategic goal of doubling its national income and industrial output value by the end of this century, to a very great extent depends on the results of its economic reform. Gorbachev expressed the will to "carry out resolute struggle" against all the factors that hinder the progress of reform."

PRC, SOVIET CINEMATOGRAPHERS SIGN AGREEMENT

OW092330 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] A working plan for cooperation between PRC and Soviet cinematographers for the period 1986-1987 was signed on 7 July in Moscow. The plan was signed by Ding Qiao, PRC vice minister of radio, cinematography and television, and Yermash, chairman of the USSR State Committee for Cinematography. The Soviet State Committee for Cinematography showed a Chinese color feature film, The Wanderer and the Swan, at the Moskva Theater in the afternoon to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the signing of the cultural cooperation agreement between the PRC and the USSR. The Chinese cinematographers delegation headed by Ding Qiao and the staff of the Chinese Embassy in the USSR were invited to the showing. The Chinese cinematographers met with the audience before the showing, and were warmly received.

COMMENTARY MARKS PRC-DPRK TREATY ANNIVERSARY

SK160736 Beijing International Service in Korean 1100 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Station commentary: "Let Us Support Each Other and Advance Shoulder to Shoulder"]

[Text] The day 11 July is the 25th anniversary of the signing of the China-Korea treaty of friendship, cooperation and mutual assistance. The two countries of China and Korea are holding various celebrations.

A Chinese party and government delegation headed by Comrade Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau, and member of the Secretariat, of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, is visiting the DPRK, and a Korean party and government delegation headed by Comrade Yi Chong-ok, member of the WPK Central Committee Political Bureau and vice president of the state, is visiting China.

The Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, the China-Korea Friendship Association, and the Korea-China Friendship Association have exchanged delegations.

Celebrations are being held in the capital cities of the two countries. China and Korea are close allies whose mountains and rivers are linked with each other and who have teeth and lips relations.

The peoples of the two countries have forged deep militant friendship in the course of a long common struggle. Since Comrade Zhou Enlai and Kim Il-song signed the Chinese-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance 25 years ago representing their respective countries, such friendship has been consolidated in a form of treaty. Over the last 25 years this treaty has continuously developed the friendship and cooperative relations between the two countries by overcoming complex and arduous trials in the international situation.

In the message of greetings sent to the Korean party and government leaders, the Chinese party and government leaders noted that the signing of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance was an event of great significance in history of the friendly relations between China and Korea, and that this treaty clearly has reflected the sincere aspirations and firm will of the peoples of China and Korea to further strengthen their unity, to accelerate the nation's development, and to safeguard peace in Asia and the world.

In his message sent to the Chinese party and government leaders, President Kim Il-song pointed out that the Korea-China treaty of friendship, cooperation, and mutual assistance has made an important contribution to firmly safeguarding the revolutionary gains of the two countries, to accelerating socialist construction, and to safeguarding peace in Asia and the world.

Over the past 25 years, in recent years in particular, the leaders of China and Korea have promoted relations between the two countries onto a new stage by frequently visiting each other. Such a spirit of friendship and cooperation has been reflected in supporting each other's struggle for national reunification and in defending the peace in Asia and the world.

In a meeting with Comrade Yi Chong-ok, leader of the Korean party and government delegation, Comrade Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, said that China is prepared to continuously strive [kyesok noryokhal yongirul kajigo itta] to develop the friendship and cooperative relations between China and Korea, and that China extends firm solidarity with the just position of the Korean people to achieve the independent and peaceful reunification of the nation.

At a mass rally in Pyongyang marking the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Korea-China Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance, Comrade Tian Jiyun, leader of Chinese party and government delegation, said that the two parties and two countries of China and Korea not only have strengthened unity and developed friendship in accordance with the spirit of the treaty, sincerely cooperating and helping each other, but also have played an important role in defending peace in Asia and the world.

Comrade Tian Jiyun also noted that China, a close neighbor and comrade-in-arms of the DPRK, takes a great interest in the situation on the Korean peninsula and firmly supports the just position and all reasonable calls of Korea.

At the rally Kang Song-san, premier of Korea, noted that the fraternal Chinese people are effecting a new upsurge in all fields -- including agriculture, industry, national defense, science and technology -- in firm unity with the CPC, and that the PRC is becoming a great peace force in Asia after being strengthened and developed. Premier Kang Song-san also said that the Korean people will fight shoulder to shoulder with the Chinese people forever.

In the message of greetings sent to the Chinese party and government leders, President Kim Il-song stressed that the Korean people extend firm solidarity with the Chinese people's struggle to achieve socialist modernization with unique Chinese characteristics and to reunify the whole of the nation by returning Taiwan.

Although time passes, the friendship between the peoples of the two countries will be immortal forever. China-Korea friendship will more brilliantly flower and will continuously encourage the peoples of the two countries to support each other and advance shoulder to shoulder with each other.

QIAO SHI FETES DPRK FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION

OW161305 Beijing XINHUA in English 1059 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Qiao Shi met and had a cordial, friendly talk with a delegation from the Korea-China Friendship Association led by its Vice-Chairman O Mun-Han here this afternoon. Qiao gave a dinner for the Korean delegation after the meeting.

Present on the occasions were president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries Zhang Wenjin and Ambassador of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea to China Sin In-ha.

Since their arrival in China July 8, the Korean guests have attended the celebration activities for the 25th anniversary of the China-Korea Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance and visited Beijing, Guangzhou and Shenzhen. They will leave here for home tomorrow.

CHEN MUHUA MEETS WITH ASIAN BANK DELEGATION

OW151553 Beijing XINHUA in English 1157 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and governor of the People's Bank of China, said here today that China is willing to accept loans from the Asian development Bank (ADB) under the conditions of favorable terms.

At a meeting with a senior delegation from the ADB led by its vice president, M. Narasimham, Chen said China lacks funds to develop its economy, so it needs to import funds. She said, China has been a member of the ADB for only a short time, but the two sides have very good relations. She expressed her hope that both sides would strengthen their contacts and cooperation, which is so important for China's economic development and the ADB's work, and also promote mutual understanding.

Narasimham gave an account of the conditions of the ADB's loans. He said that the ADB is ready to cooperate with China. The delegation arrived here July 13 at the invitation of the People's Bank of China.

SON SANN URGES EUROPEAN SANCTIONS AGAINST SRV

OW160626 Beijing XINHUA in English 0611 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Paris, July 15 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Kampuchea's Coalition Government Prime Minister Son Sann has called on European countries to put economic and financial pressure on Vietnam until it withdraws its troops from Kampuchea. In an interview with XINHUA today the coalition prime minister said he has asked the European Parliament and "our parliamentary friends to support our eight-point proposal and to continue to vote for us at the United Nations as in previous years."

The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea offered an eight-point proposal March 17 in Beijing calling on Vietnam to make a two-stage withdrawal of its troops from Kampuchea and for four-party negotiations by the three resistance factions and the Heng Samrin regime to set up a four-party coalition government of Kampuchea. The proposal has won international support but was rejected by Vietnam soon after it was made. Vietnam still demanded what it calls "getting rid of the Khmer Rouge." More than 40 countries have expressed support for the proposal.

"Political pressure is good, but it isn't enough. Other pressure must be brought to bear, what I call economic and financial pressure," Sann said. He said that during a recent tour of Noirth and West European countries he had asked leaders to withold economic aid to Vietnam. "For two years Vietnam attacked many of our camps. But now our troops are in the interior, and we are attacking all Vietnamese controlled cities," he said. "Vietnam has no support in Kampuchea. All the people reject it. It is getting into more and more difficulties with our forces. It could not destroy us when we were operating on the border, and it cannot destroy us in the interior."

"The people of Kampuchea support our efforts," the prime minister said, and went on to note that at the moment Vietnam is experiencing "grave economic difficulties." World opinion is against Vietnam, Sann said. "Our cause is just."

Asked about the recent death of Vietnamese leader Le Duan, Sann said he did not think the new Vietnamese leadership will change Vietnam's Kampuchea policy.

ZHOA ZIYANG CONTINUES EUROPEAN, AFRICA TRIP

Premiers Hold Press Conference

OW170218 Beijing XINHUA in English 0149 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and his Spanish counter-part Felipe Gonzalez told the press here today that they are satisfied with the developing relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries and confident of their furtherance. The two government leaders gave a joint press conference this evening following their second round of talks at the office of the Spanish prime minister.

Zhao said his talks with Filipe Gonzalez on issues of mutual interest were "intensive and useful." They showed the two countries have the same position on peace and development -- the two fundamental issues facing the world today -- and hold identical or similar views on many other key international questions. Zhao said that both China and Spain strongly desire to push their friendly cooperation still further in a down-to-earth manner.

Prime Minister Gonzalez said his country's relations with China are based on mutual trust and friendship as the two countries have no conflicts of fundamental interests between them. He described Zhao's visit as one that will surely give a vigorous impetus to the development of bilateral relations.

When asked whether any specific items for economic cooperation were discussed in the talks, Premier Zhao said that two items agreed upon last year were later cancelled for reasons on the part of China, but he had offered some new projects during his current visit, in which the Spanish side showed keen interest. Zhao stressed that as the saying goes, "Failure is the mother of success," the setbacks in the past will help make bilateral cooperation in future going on more smoothly. There is no reason to be sceptical of the cooperation in the days to come just because of setbacks in the past, he noted.

The Spanish prime minister agreed by saying he believed that the newly proposed items for cooperation are solidly based and that the potentials for expanded cooperation in other fields such as finance, science and technology, are also very great.

This morning, Zhao travelled over 70 kilometers to Toledo, the former imperial city, to see Spain's ancient culture and civilization between the 9th and 16th centuries. The Chinese premier was warmly greeted by the mayor of the city Joaquin Sanches at the gateway of Bisagra, a 16th century structure. In Toledo, described as "the glory of Spain and the light of its cities," Zhao visited the former house and museum of El Greco, a master painter in the 16th century, the church of Santo Tome built in the 14th century, and the Toledo Cathedral built in 1493. He also took a general view of the city from the Tarador Hotel on hilltop.

Zhao on Relations with SRV, USSR

OW170546 Beijing XINHUA in English 0535 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said today he did not know whether Vietnam's policy towards China would change or not after the death of Vietnamese Communist Party General Secretary Le Duan.

Zhao made the remarks when asked about the future of relations between China and Vietnam following the recent change of Vietnam's party leadership, at a press conference here this evening.

Talking about Soviet party leader Mikhail Gorbahcev's recent calls for improved ties with China, Premier Zhao said, "We hope that they would take practical actions to remove the three major obstacles."

The three obstacles are the big gathering of Soviet troops along the Chinese border, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and its support of the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea.

Zhao, who arrived here Monday on the fourth leg of a six-nation tour, will leave for Turkey tomorrow.

Urges Gibraltar Settlement

OW170554 Beijing XINHUA in English 0532 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 16 (XINHUA) -- China is happy to note that Britain has agreed to negotiate with Spain on the issue of the Gibraltar, visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today.

Answering a question at a press conference following his talks with his Spanish counterpart Felipe Gonzalez, Zhao said he hoped that the Gibraltar issue will be settled satisfactorily through friendly consultations.

"China and Britain have successfully reached agreement on the settlement of the Hong Kong issue through talks in the spirit of mutual understanding and mutual concession, by placing Sino-British friendship above everything else and having their eyes on the future," he noted, adding, "This settlement not only conforms with the interests and aspirations of the Chinese and British people as well as the inhabitants in Hong Kong, but also provided experience for the search of solutions to the problems in the world left over by history.

Zhao, who arrived here Monday on an official visit, will leave for Turkey tomorrow. Turkey will be the fifth leg of his Six-nation Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

King Accepts Invitation to PRC

OW170558 Beijing XINHUA in English 0538 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Madrid, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Spanish King Juan Carlos I has accepted a renewed invitation from Chinese President Li Xiannian to visit China again, it was announced here today.

The announcement was made by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and his Spanish counter-part Felipe Gonzalez at a press conference they jointly held here this evening.

The invitation was conveyed to the king by Premier Zhao on President Li's behalf when he met the king and Queen Sofia yesterday. The king is looking forward to making the visit at the earliest possible date to be fixed through diplomatic channels, the announcement said. The king and queen paid their first visit to China in 1978.

Zhao, Gonzalez Address Banquet

OW170604 Beijing XINHUA in English 0540 GMT 17 Jul 86

["Zhao Says Purpose of His Spain Visit Achieved" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Madrid, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said in a toast here today that his short but fruitful visit to Spain has resulted in better understanding and closer cooperation between the two countries.

In a return banquet held at Hotel Ritz, where he stays during his four-day visit, Zhao said he believed that relations between China and Spain can well be expected to reach a new and higher level on the existing good basis. He expressed thanks to the Spanish Government for the hospitality accorded him and his entourage.

Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez noted in his toast that relations between the two countries are based on "sincerity, amicability and mutual understanding," on which "we will keep the momentum of cooperation tirelessly." "In spite of the language difference and geographical distance, Spain has a deep understanding and appreciation of the efforts being made by Chinese leaders," Gonzalez said.

Among the 100 and more Spanish officials present at the banquet, which was pervading throughout with enthusiasm and cordiality, were Foreign Minister Fernandez Ordonez, Economy and Finance Minister Carlos Solchaga, Culture Minister and Government spokesman Javier Solana and Industry and Energy Minister Joan Majo. Director of China's State Economic Commission Lu Dong and other senior Chinese officials accompanying Zhao on the visit, which is to end tomorrow, also attended the banquet.

AIR FORCE COMMANDER MEETS FRENCH DELEGATION

OW161431 Beijing XINHUA in English 1333 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Wang Hai, commander of the Air Force of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, met here this evening with a delegation from the school of the French Air Force led by its Commandant Brigade General Jacques Deveaud. Wang and Deveaud agreed that the delegation's visit will strengthen the friendship between the Air Forces of the two countries. The meeting was followed by a reception hosted by Yu Zhenwu, deputy commander of the P.L.A. Air Force. The delegation, composed of over 100 officers and cadets of the school, arrived here this afternoon for a study tour.

WANG ZHEN MEETS ITALIAN CP DELEGATION 13 JULY

OW131242 Beijing XINHUA in English 1128 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 13 (XINHUA) -- Wang Zhen, vice-chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission, met here this evening with a party school delegation from the Italian Communist Party led by Nello di Paco, president of the Pisa School of the Party Central Committee. Wang Zhen, who is also president of the Party School of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, told Italian Communists that he hoped for the expansion of cooperation and exchanges between the schools of the two communist parties. The Italian Communists arrived here June 26. They had a tour of Xian, Nanjing, Shanghai and Chengdu in the past few weeks.

KUWAITI MINISTER ON INVESTMENT IN PRC, USSR

OW161321 Beijing XINHUA in English 1138 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Kuwait, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Rapid progress has been made in talks between Kuwait, China and the Soviet Union on the feasibility of Kuwaiti investment in the two countries, according to Kuwaiti Finance Minister Jasim al-Khurafi.

In a recent interview with Saudi Arabia's daily "AL-JAZIRAH" the minister said that Kuwait is studying the possible economic profits from its investment projects in these two countries Kuwait is optimistic about the future of the investment, Al-Khurafi said.

Kuwait's diversification of its investment abroad does not mean the withdrawal of Kuwaiti funds from the United States, he stressed. "Our funds in the United States are guaranteed by law, without any risks", he said. Kuwait has an estimated 6 billion U.S. dollars of investment in the U.S.

Kuwaiti daily "AL WATAN" pointed out today that Al-Khorafi's talks was made when a Soviet economic delegation was in visiting Kuwait for talks on probing further cooperations between the two countries on oil and finance.

NEWS ANALYSIS ON SYRIAN ENTRY TO WEST BEIRUT

OW150000 Beijing XINHUA in English 2346 GMT 14 Jul 86

[News analysis: Why Syrian Task Force Enters West Beirut? (by Zhu Jiefei and Xing Chuanting) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beirut July 15 (XINHUA) -- The re-entry of a Syrian task force unit into West Beirut will serve as a multi-purpose move by Syria, political analysts here said. The unit of over 380 regulars, together with Syrian observers already stationed in West Beirut, have so far played a major role in maintaining security in the Moslem districts of this war-torn capital of Lebanon. But Syria's re-entry into Beirut was not merely aimed to maintain order.

The Syrian troops withdrew from Beirut in 1982. Their re-entry on July 4 this year has been taken as a dubious move to have a tighter control over the Lebanese Moslem factional militias and prevent a substantial comeback of the Palestinian guerrillas to Lebanon.

The Syria-backed Shi'ite Amal militias had fought bloody battles against Palestinians around the refugee camps in West Beirut. The Amal charged that a great number of palestinians had come back recently. Many Lebanese said the Israelis will use this as a pretext for intervention. However, the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed that more Palestinians are arriving in Beirut to visit their families.

The deployment of Syrian troops in West Beirut will create new difficulties for the Palestinians' plan for a substantial comeback if they do have such a plan.

The Syrians will take West Beirut as a springboard for their next move to enter southern Lebanon. Well informed sources here said Syrians are now negotiating in Saida with local political leaders on the deployment of Syrian troops in this biggest port city in the south.

In addition, Syria, with their military presence in West Beirut, will try to get the kidnapped Western hostages released in a bid to improve its image in the world as it has been accused by the United States and its Western allies as a base of international terrorism. Confirmed reports said the Syrian task force encircled the southern suburb of Beirut as they entered the city. Most, if not all, of the hostages were said to have been kept in that part of the capital. Syria has already succeeded in getting two of the French hostages released. Local reports said the remaining French hostages are to be set free in a few days.

Other reports said the United States is contacting Syria for the release of the six American hostages.. Observers believe that the release of any American hostages will constitute a de facto recognition by the United States of Syria's military presence in Beirut.

The entry of Syrian troops into West Beirut may well be described as the "Beirut gambit" played by Syria in the game of Lebanon after the failure earlier this year of the tripartite agreement sponsored by Syria to end the sectarian war in Lebanon, a result of boycotts by the Christians.

The game has started well. But it is hard to speculate how the game will end since there are not only two but many players over the chessboard and each of them has his own goal.

RENMIN RIBAO ON POLITICAL STORM IN ISRAEL

HK170055 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jul 86 p 6

["Roundup" by staff reporter Chen Jichang: "Political Storm Caused by the Israeli 'Shin Bet Incident'"]

[Excerpts] The "Shin Bet incident," which took place 2 years ago, has ignited a great storm in Israel and caused an unprecedented political crisis to the Peres government.

Shin Bet was the original name of the Israeli State Security Bureau. In April 1984, when four Palestinians hijacked a public bus in southern Tel Aviv, the Shin Bet secret police killed two of them and arrested the other two. Subsequently, (Shalom), head of the "Shin Bet," ordered the killing of the two arrested Palestinians. This was the basis of the Shin Bet incident. But (Shalom) covered up this crime and provided false evidence asserting that the four Palestinians were all killed in action. Between May and June this year, (Zamir), former judicial adviser for the Israeli Government, made known to the public the actual state of the incident after obtaining evidence from a Shin Bet official. This immediately caused repurcussions in Israeli society, and people called it the Shin Bet incident. [passage omitted]

The Israeli authorities have resorted to various means to cover up this scandal and to pacify the media's dissatisfaction over the Shin Bet incident. (Shalom) declared his resignation on 25 June, and the Israeli president announced that (Shalom) and the other three Shin Bet officials were exempt from a lawsuit. Obviously, the Israeli authorities tried to help the Shin Bet gloss over its crime. But instead, the Israeli authorities' attempt to harbor the Shin Bet resulted in an even larger political storm. [passage omitted]

The political storm ignited by the Shin Bet incident is at present surging forward. It is hard to predict what it will bring to the Israeli Coalition Government and the impact it will have on the political situation in Israel. However, the exposure of the incident has once again suggested what a sham the "freedom and democracy" advocated by the Israeli authorities is.

OFFICIALS ATTEND IRAQI NATIONAL DAY RECEPTION

OW161307 Beijing XINHUA in English 1102 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Iraqi Ambassador to China Rashid M.S. al-Rifai and his wife gave a reception at the embassy here this evening in celebration of the 18th anniversary of the 17-30 July revolution.

Among the guests were Chinese Minister of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection Ye Rutang and Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Qi Huaiyuan.

BRIEFS

AMBASSADOR TO SYRIA -- Syrian Premier Kasm said on 9 July that, facing the threat of Israel's aggression, Syria would fight to the end and never retreat. He made the statement when receiving Chinese Ambassador to Syria Wang Changyi in the capital of Damascus. On Sino-Syrian relations, Kasm said that both countries belonged to the Third World and their relations were very friendly. Ambassador Wang Changyi also expressed the hope that the two countries would increase their cooperation in all fields. [Text] [Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 11 Jul 86 OW]

IRANIAN SPORTS DELEGATION -- Beijing, 14 Jul (XINHUA) -- He Zhenliang, vice-minister of China's State Physical Culture and Sports Commission and member of the International Olympic Committee's Executive Board, met with the visiting Iranian sports delegation here today. The Iranian delegation, led by Ahmad Dargahi, deputy prime minister and president of the Physical Education Organization, arrived here last Friday. The vice-minister gave a banquet in honor of the Iranian guests. The Iranian delegation will leave here this evening for home. [Text] [Beijing XINHUA in English 0549 GMT 14 Jul 86 OW]

PRC-BURUNDI PROTOCOL -- China and Burundi signed a protocol on China sending a medical team to Burundi on 10 July in Bujumbura, capital of Burundi. Egide Nkuriyingoma, Burundian minister of external relations and cooperation, and Shen Lianrui, Chinese ambassador to Burundi, signed the protocol on behalf of their respective countries. [Text] [Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 11 Jul 86 OW]

XINHUA CORRECTION TO WANG ZHEN TITLE

The following correcion to the item headlined "'Political Bureau' Member Wang Zhen Writes Inscription," published in the 16 July China DAILY REPORT on page K 1, is supplied by XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1458 GMT on 16 July:

Paragraph one, from last line, reads: ...Stadium. (new graph) Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, inscribed the name... (correcting Wang Zhen title, deleting editorial notation)

CULTURE MINISTRY CHANGES DETAILED FOR OFFICIALS

OW162136 Beijing XINHUA in English 1426 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Leading officials of China's Culture Ministry increasingly will concentrate on investigations and study, broad policymaking and development of laws that will help the arts, new Vice-Minister Gao Zhanxiang said here today.

At the same time, the ministry will streamline its administrative processes and let artists and writers have more say in the government's handling of their work, he told a national workshop of culture officials, the first since the recent reshuffling of the ministry's leadership.

Gao quoted Mao Zedong, late chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, as saying that every leadership group should study the situations they face while having a good grasp of current policies.

"For those of us in leadership positions," he said, "that means we must concentrate on the change in the role of government institutions in the country's current reform drive" -- which calls for more autonomy and responsibility for individual units. "Otherwise, we will be tied up by routine work and fail to do our duties as well," he said.

Gao suggested that leaders would "do a better job" if they "relied more on think tanks to analyze situations and propose policies and outline arguments for and against alternative actions."

During the seven-day workshop, which ended today, more than 80 culture officials from thoughout China discussed eliminating some of China's visual and performing arts groups, which, according to ministry sources, number more than 3,000 and employ more than one million people.

"Cutting down the number of the groups and improving their management is an urgent task," a ministry official told XINHUA today.

"Total funds for the groups will remain constant," the official said, "the goal is to have a smaller number of groups with better funding."

At the same time, adequate arrangements would be made to transfer people in discontinued groups to other work, according to the official.

WANG MENG, ZHU HOUZE ADDRESS CULTURAL CONFERENCE

OW170449 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1241 GMT 16 Jul 86

[By Central People's Broadcasting Station reporter Zhang Xin and XINHUA reporter Li Guangru]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- Speaking in the National Conference of Directors of Cultural Departments (Bureaus), Culture Minister Wang Meng said that this is the best period cultural and art work as seen since the funding of new China, and our strategic guiding thought should be to strive for the long and stable development of cultural and art.

In the National Conference of Directors of Cultural Departments (Bureaus), held by the Ministry of Culture, the participants held serious discussions on questions, including what should be done for the million literary and art workers to bring their role into play and how to improve their quality, and exchanged experiences of performing art groups carrying out reforms.

Speaking about the current situation in literary and art work, Wang Meng said: The situation has become dynamic for art creation and theoretical study since the spring of this year. Contention between different views, styles, and schools of thought is going on in a normal manner, and the efforts at various probes and creations are enjoying protection and support, while being provided with appropriate guidance. An atmosphere of mutual understanding, trust, and respect is emerging in literary and art circles.

Wang Meng said in his speech that striving for a long and stable development of China's literary and art work should be the strategic guiding thought, and that the principles and policies laid down by the party and government for literary and art work in the new period should be comprehensively and accurately understood and implemented. He said: Since the end of 1978, our policy on literature and art has become mature, stable, and consistent. Of course, there have been unstable factors in an overall picture of stability. But this should not obstruct the forming of a comprehensive conclusion about the situation. Our literary and art policy is an inseparable whole, and we must guard against the practice of each sticking to his own interpretation and taking what he needs. I have offered advice to foreign reporters by telling them not to view China's literary and art situation in the same way they do the stock market in Hong Kong.

Regarding differences and arguments emerging in current activities in the fields of literary and art theoretical study and art creation, Wang Meng felt that they are a normal phenomenon. He said: Only differences and arguments can inspire people to explore and pursue. It would not be conductive to creating an open and harmonious environment by adopting an overbearing, oversensitive attitude to different viewpoints.

Wang Meng stands for promoting literary and art structural reforms with firm resolve and prudence, and improving the quality of the ranks of literary and art workers. He said: In the process of literary and art production, it is necessary to do a good job in handling the relation between the law governing literature and art, the law governing the economy, and the law governing ideological and political work and, at the same time, improving relations between government departments, performing art groups, and artists.

He emphasized that literary and art workers should satisfy the people's cultural life needs with consummate works. For this reason, improving the quality of literature and art should be the central task in the development of the cause of literature and art.

The 7-day National Conference of Directors of Cultural Departments (Bureaus) ended today in Beijing. Gao Zhanxiang, executive vice minister of the Ministry of Culture, made a summing up report. He said: Literary and art circles must resolutely take the road of reform. It is necessary to have a correct attitude to the problems cropping up in the course of reform and be fair to those comrades who are sincere in carrying out reform, but have made mistakes. Faults should be tolerated, because reform is a completely new endeavor, never before undertaken. The important thing is to learn from experience and constantly bring the policy to perfection, to effect a sound and in-depth development in reform. Gao Zhanxiang said: To meet the needs of the new situation, the functions of the Ministry of Culture will undergo changes. The ministry will shift the focus of its work to investigation and study, providing macroeconomic guidance, and making policy decisions. The major functions of the Ministry of Culture from now on will be to give guidance, draw up plans, institute laws, make overall arrangements, render services and exercise supervision over the nation's literary and art work.

Zhu Houze, director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, delivered a speech to the conference while it was in session.

ZHU HOUZE CALLS FOR IMPROVED CULTURAL LIFE

OW161433 Beijing XINHUA in English 1409 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- To promote its seven-year-old reform drive, China must "improve the cultural life of the entire nation," according to Zhu Houze, head of the Propaganda Department of the Communist Party's Central Committee.

In remarks released today, Zhu criticized past government and party interference in literature and art. "Few of these efforts were helpful," he told participants in a session earlier this week of a national workshop of culture officials. "Don't make hasty conclusions about dissension or ideas that break with tradition," he said.

Zhu called for flexible cultural leadership. "Rigid things are easy to break," he said. "Elastic things can resist shocks. And there are always shocks in social life."

He said efforts to explore new cultural forms and for creation should be supported. Otherwise, he added, "society cannot develop, let alone its culture."

For that reason, he argued, it is in the national interest to be "tolerant of different views and to be generous toward those who hold them." This will "help create a more harmonious environment for cultural development," he said.

The party leader said competition between cultural workers should be encouraged. "It's a pity that we failed to do a good job in this respect in the past," he said. "Perhaps it was the fault of the traditional Chinese doctrine that praised the mean and discouraged people from wanting to do anything distinctive."

Discussing the relation between Chinese cultural tradition and foreign culture, Zhu criticized both a nihilist attitude towards national tradition and failure to see that "in some areas China has lagged behind."

He proposed comparing Chinese culture with contemporary culture abroad and "trying to catch up with the most advanced levels in the world."

At the same time, he said, "we should review our cultural values and see which still ring true and which should be abandoned."

Culture officials in the party and the government "need to rethink just what the state of the country's culture is and how it relates to Chinese history and the work of the party and the people's government," he said. "This would be good for the steady development we hope for over the long term."

After all, he told the officials, "the 'Cultural Revolution' has been over for ten years, and it is 30 years since the party adopted the policy of 'letting a hundred flowers bloom and letting a hundred schools of thought contend.'"

WANG MENG INTERVIEWED ON CULTURAL SITUATION

HK161344 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by XINHUA reporter Guo Lingchun, exclusive to RENMIN RIBAO: "Cultural development Needs a Steady Policy -- Interview With Newly-appointed Minister of Culture Wang Meng"]

[Excerpts] Wang Meng appeared in front of the reporters not as a writer but as minister of culture. The office of the minister of culture, almost one quarter of which was occupied by the minister's desk, was filled with cigarette smoke left behind by the previous batch of visitors. Here, newly-appointed Minister of Culture Wang Meng will plan "a project of vital and lasting importance," which will push forward China's developing cultural cause.

When talking about his plan, the 52-year-old new minister skillfully knew how to take the bull by the horns. He first stressed that the long-term cultural development needs a steady policy and a steady environment. Wang meng, who became a "young Bolshevik" on the eve of liberation and later experienced both tranquillity and turbulence together with the People's Republic, now thought that "we are living in one of the periods characterized by stability and vitality seen since the founding of the PRC."

Under normal circumstances, it is easy to maintain stability. However, once a controversy takes place and erroneous opinions and literary works with defects come out, is it still possible to maintain a stable situation? [paragraph continues]

His answer was: Under such circumstances, it is necessary to lay more stress on maintaining stability. In the literature and art circles, there was once such a phenomenon: Whenver diversions occurred, people just simply re-explained the policies, or just stressed one side of the policies one day and the other side of the policies another day. Wang Meng stated his views on this frankly by saying: "To combine implementing policies in a steady way with solving problems in a practical and realistic way is just the responsbility of people like us." [passage omitted]

Stability itself consists of making culture contribute to the building of modernization. In this office of less than 16 cubic meters, Wang Meng has begun to "implement" the blueprint of China's cultural cause -- the construction of cultural facilities, literary and art creation, plays and operas, and the relevant systems, laws, and regulations. We should acknowledge that the present situation of the cultural construction does not conform to the overall situation of the socialist construction cause of our country. For nearly 37 years, we have not had a decent state theater and a state art museum to collect excellent traditional and modern cultural products. "We should strengthen construction in this respect," said Wang Meng with an affirmative tone. However, since our country is not a rich one, we should walk steadily forward. At the same time, we should also formulate all kinds of strict rules and regulations concerning the protection of culture and so on and make efforts to solve the complicated routine problems one by one. Now, a feasible long-range plan has been formed in Wang Meng's mind.

Prior to becoming minister of culture, Wang Meng had already carried out some investigations. His secretary disclosed to the reporters that prior to becoming minister of culture, Wang Meng had received a number of figures of the literature and art circles; frequently watched various types of performances; visited the art academies, art ensembles, and art schools directly under the Ministry of Culture; and carried out investigations and research in the cultural relics museum and the cultural relics institute of Qufu County and on the construction site of a certain cultural institution in Jinan.

Thus, the new minister of culture now has the right to speak.

"The number of people in the art performance organizations is enormous," said Wang Meng, referring to the situation in his "own" ministry: Most of these art performance organizations are now still following the old system. Over the past few years, owing to the lack of leadership and administration, both the quality of performances and the standard of art organizations have deteriorated. So, "under such circumstances, it is imperative to carry out reforms." Wang Meng thought that the art cause cannot ignore the role of the economic lever. However, at the same time, the art cause should take into consideration its own peculiar law. Sometimes, the two do not necessarily conform with each other because art performances representing the highest level of artistic achievement in the country are not necessarily the most money-making ones. Taking symphony as an example, almost no country in the world can earn a profit from symphonic performances. The existence and development of such kind of art require people with loft ideals to devote their wisdom and talents.

No doubt, the state will support the development of such kinds of art organizations. However, the method of protecting art in name but implementing protectionism and protecting unwieldy organizations in deed is also opposed by Wang Meng. [passage omitted]

RENMIN RIBAO ON SUN YAT-SEN THOUGHT SYMPOSIUM

HK160755 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 5

["Academic Trends" column by Zhou Liaogang: "Roundup on Symposium on Sun Yat-sen's Philosophical Thinking" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] To mark the 120th anniversary of Sun Yat-sen's birth, the Guangdong Society of Philosophy, the Guangdong Society of Sun Yat-sen Studies, the Guangzhou City Research Institute of Social Sciences, the Philosophy Department of Sun Yat-sen University, the Philosophy Department of the Chinese People's University, and the Zhongshan City Society of Sun Yat-sen Studies jointly sponsored a symposium on Sun Yat-sen's philosophical thinking held at Sun Yat-sen University. The participants in the symposium had a lively discussion on the nature of Sun Yat-sen's philosophical thinking and its place in history.

ON THE NATURE OF SUN YAT-SEN'S PHILOSOPHICAL THINKING. While some comrades held to their view that Sun Yat-sen's philosophy is a kind of mechanical or evolutionist materialism, some new points of view were put forth at the symposium. Some people held that Sun Yat-sen's philosophy is a kind of incomplete materialism characterized by a dialectical mode of thinking. His philosophy was built on the basis of modern development of natural sciences, such as the theory of evolution, cytology, the law of conservation and conversion of energy, the discovery of the possibility of reciprocal conversion between organic and inorganic substances, and the discovery of radioactive elements. Its basis was a little bit more advanced than that of dialectic materialism. During that period, one of the focal points of the struggle in the field of philosophy is the struggle against metaphysics. For example, the Movement for Constitutional Reform and Modernization opposed the ruling faction's "Theory of No Change"; the Revolution of 1911 criticized the vulgar evolutionism advocated by the reformists; in addition, the ever developing naive materialist dialectics were a heritage of China. Therefore, although Sun Yat-sen's philosophy has not attained the heights of dialectic materialism in such aspects as ontology, the theory of knowledge, and the view on development, it contains rather rich ingredients of materialist dialectics. Other comrades held that Sun Yat-sen's philosophy is a kind of materialism in transition to dialectic materialilsm. They said: Sun Yat-sen's philosophy is not an independent entity. It is neither mechanical materialism nor dialectic materialism but an interim materialism which is partly mechanical materialism and partly dialectic materialism.

ON THE PLACE OF SUN YAT-SEN'S PHILOSOPHY IN HISTORY. There is a view holding that Sun Yat-sen's philosophy is the comprehensive and systematic summary of the philosophy of the modern Chinese bourgeoisie which prepared the conditions for the rise of the Chinese proletariat's philosophy. Sun Yat-sen expounded the evolutionist materialist world outlook in a more complete form than those elaborations by Kang Youwei, Yan Fu, and Zhang Taiyan. [paragraph continues]

He negated the vulgar evolutionism in the fields of natural sciences, sociology, and the theory of knowledge, and emphasized the roles of "sudden change," "revolution," and the "phenomenon of latecomers surpassing old-timers" in the process of evolution, thus providing the theoretical basis for the bourgeois democratic revolution of the old type. In due course when such radical democrats as Li Dazhao turned into communists with a proletarian world outlook, Sun Yat-sen's philosophy played the role of a "pioneer" and "bridge." Another view holds that Sun Yat-sen's philosophy did not represent the highest philosophical level that the modern Chinese bourgeoisie attained, neither did it prepare any conditions for the rise of the Chinese proletariat's philosophy. One thing supporting this view is that the achievements demonstrated in the book "Sun Yat-sen's Theory (Spiritual Education)" which Sun Yat-sen published in 1919 did not go beyond the philosophical frontier that Zhang Taiyan had explored. More than 10 years before the publication of this book by Sun Yat-sen, Zhang Taiyan had already criticized the vulgar evolutionism, put forth the idea of "fusion" [ju bian 5112 6239], and introduced the concept of revolution into evolutionism, holding that revolution is a means to achieve social evolution. Moreover, Li Dazhao had already become a Marxist when this book by Sun Yat-sen was published. In 1918 Li Dazhao published several articles, including "Comparison Between the French and Russian Revolutions," "The Common People's Victory," and "The Bolshevik's Victory," to introduce the Russian October Revolution and Marxism-Leninsim. And, again, he published "My Marxist View" in 1919. Thus it can be seen that the role of Sun Yat-sen's philosophy as a "pioneer" and "bridge" is just out of the question. On the contrary, it was a philosophy which lagged behind the time.

LI PENG ARTICLE ON EDUCATIONAL REFORM

HK161206 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jul 86 p 5

[Article by Li Peng: "Certain Questions Concerning Reform and Development of Higher Education (Excerpts)"]

[Text] Since the promulgation last year of the decision of the CPC Central Committee on reform of the educational system, gratifying changes have taken place on the educational front. The situation is very good. In recent years, higher education has been developing rapidly, and the reform of higher education has made certain headway. However, since the actual work of reform of the educational system is just in the initial stage, there are quite a few shortcomings and problems. We must have a clear understanding of this and make concrete efforts to solve these problems.

1. Restructure Higher Education, Improve Educational Quality

In a period to come, in the work of higher education, we should stress improving the quality of existing schools, so as to achieve more substantial results in all higher education. At present, we must concentrate our efforts on running the existing schools well. Generally speaking, we must not encourage opening more new schools. To ensure that the number of students will greatly increase during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must mainly rely on the development of the existing schools and rationally extend their scope. At the same time, we must pay more attention to readjusting the makeup and distribution and improving the quality of higher education.

An important matter for readjusting the makeup of higher education is that there should be a rational division of work among universities and colleges in light of the different needs for people of ability in society. According to foreign experiences and China's realities, universities and colleges can generally be divided into three types: 1) A small number of schools that are comparatively good in teaching and scientific research. Apart from undergraduates, they also train students studying for doctor's and master's degrees. They will gradually become the centers of education and scientific research responsible for the training of high-level talent. 2) A large number of schools that mainly offer undergraduate courses. They are also required to carry out scientific research and academic activities, especially research in applied sciences, in order to improve educational quality. They must also render scientific and technological services. 3) All kinds of professional training schools. They must take teaching as their main task and enable the students to possess both professional knowledge and technical skills. The three types of schools are different in the division of work and the training of personnel. However, they are all very important and indispensable. In short, higher education is resonsible for training various levels of personnel in accordance with the needs of society and in a rational proportion. All schools must give play to their strong points in light of their tasks and make continuous efforts to improve educational quality so that they may become outstanding schools of various types.

Under China's existing conditions, we must walk on both legs in developing higher education. While running well ordinary full-time schools, we must also vigorously develop broadcast, television, correspondence, sparetime, and night schools and offer examinations for self-taught students. If conditions allow, ordinary full-time schools must recruit more students for their correspondence and night schools. We must attach importance to developing TV education. With the progress of science and technology, TV education will gradually become an important means for the training of personnel. TV universities must recruit not only people who are working at their posts, but must also recruit graduating senior middle school students. The system of students studying at their own expense and no job assignement after graduation must be adopted so that more professional workers may be trained through this channel.

2. Reform the Enrollment Plan and the Assignment System for Graduates, Enhance the Administrative Power of Universities and Colleges

In the sphere of higher education, we must mainly grasp the following reforms this year:

The reform of the enrollment plan and the assignment system for graduates was started last year. It should be perfected this year on the basis of summing up experiences. The reform of the grant-in-aid system, which concerns the immediate interests of the students, should be carried out with caution. An experiment in this respect will be made in some selected schools and for certain professions this year in order to get some experiences, so that it may be gradually popularized later.

It is necessary to improve the enrollment and training systems for postgraduate students. In the future, in light of the different requirements of different professions, postgraduate students may be recruited either from graduating university and college students or from those who are working at their posts and who have some practical experiences, especially those who are working in fields such as the social sciences, finance, and engineering. [paragraph continues]

It is necessary to gradually reform and improve the methods for training postgraduates. Topics for the students' theses must fit in with the needs of socialist construction. It is necessary for the postgraduates to study basic courses, but there should not be too many such courses and the period for this study should not be too long. It is necessary to find more and more channels for the training of doctors so that people who are working at their posts and who have accumulated rich experiences in their long-term practice can also have the opportunity to attain this academic degree. We can also confer some new academic degrees, such as "Doctor of Engineering" and "Doctor of Clinical Medicine," so as to open up new channels for high-level practical workers to attain this academic degree.

In order to enhance the ability of universities and colleges to suit the needs of economic and social development, it is necessary to extend their administrative power while strengthening and improving their macromanagement. The State Council has promulgated the "Temporary Provisions on Duties of Higher Educational Management." This is a concrete measure for implementing the "Decision of the CPC Central Committee on Reform of the Educational System." The main spirit of these "Provisions" is to grant universities and colleges more decision-making power in school administration so that they can make bold explorations and gradually accumulate a series of experiences in light of their concrete situations and in various fields of their work, such as the reform of teaching materials, teaching methods, management over the students and scientific research, and rear-service work.

3. Improve and Strengthen the Work Concerning Selecting and Sending Students To Study Abroad and Their Management

Over the past few years, China has sent large numbers of students to study in other countries and has made marked achievements in absorbing advanced science and technology and management experiences from abroad. Most Chinese students studying abroad love their socialist motherland. They are studying hard and doing exceedingly well in their studies. Quite a few of them have made creative achievements in scientific research, winning honor for their motherland. The returned students have rendered outstanding contributions to our socialist modernization. Many have become the core members of various grades and professions and have been playing a leading role in various educational and research units. Practice shows that sending students to study abroad through various channels completely conforms to China's policy of opening up to the outside world and the needs of the four modernizations drive. We must continue to do so in a long period to come.

Of course, there are also some problems in the selection, sending, and management of students studying abroad. The main problems are that the plan for sending students abroad is not closely linked with the needs of our national construction and the system for management over students studying abroad is still imperfect. We must sum up our experiences and adopt effective policies and measures to solve these problems. We must further understand that the work of sending students abroad must proceed from China's realities and be closely linked with the needs of our production, construction, scientific research, and personnel training, so that it can help solve our problems in production and scientific research and enhance our ability of training people with advanced professional skill. [paragraph continues]

In this work, we must manage to act in accordance with the following principles: Send students abroad in light of our needs and ensure the quality of the students, who are required to study for the purpose of application; endeavor to create conditions for the returned students to apply what they have learned so that they can give play to their roles and contribute to the construction of their motherland with ease of mind.

We must strengthen ideological and political work as well as education in patriotism and communist morality among students studying abroad so that they can make up their minds to pioneer a great cause through arduous efforts and to study hard for the rejuvenation of China, and so that they can return to our country as soon as they finish their courses to participate in our national construction. We must make proper arrangements for the work of returned students in accordance with the principle of applying what they have learned. Besides, we must also help them acquire knowledge of the latest development of our internal situation, our tasks, and the party's policies and principles and encourage them to learn from the older generation of returned students their spirit of building our country through arduous efforts, so that they may work hard in their units and create conditions for their work.

To study abroad at one's own expense is another channel for training professional personnel and should be encouraged. We must show concern for and treat equally both the students studying abroad at their own expense and those sent by the state, without discrimination in their life and work.

4. Strengthen and Improve Ideological and Political Work in Universities and Colleges.

In universities and colleges, strengthening ideological and political work is an expression of implementing the educational policy of enabling the students to develop morally, intellectually, and physically, and an important content of moral education. Our purpose is to train professional personnel who have ideals, morality, cultural knowledge, and a sense of discipline and who have the communist consciousness and moral character and the spirit of serving the people and devoting themselves to the four modernizations. To attain this purpose, we must strengthen moral education and ideological and political work.

We are now in a new situation of overall reform. The main task for ideological and political work in universities and colleges is to work efficiently around the central task of the four modernizations and various reforms, especially the educational reform, to help the students as well as the teachers and staff members correctly analyze the situation, understand the party's policies and principles, distinguish between right and wrong, and conscientiously resist all kinds of erroneous trends, so as to guide their thinking and action onto the track of fulfilling the general target of building socialism with distinctive Chinese characteristics.

Our universities and colleges are of socialist nature. They should create for the students and teachers a political environment and academic atmosphere characterized by a high degree of civilization and democracy. The CPC committees of these schools must make their positions known to all in the political and ideological fields, so that people can know what they support and what they oppose. [paragraph continues]

But they must adopt methods in their work. On the question concerning people's understanding, we must not adopt simple methods and the methods of coercion and prohibition. In the contrary, we must encourage and allow young students to think and to explore, while keeping themselves within the bounds of discipline. The leaders and political work cadres must cherish the initiative of the students and treat them as equals and must be open-hearted, convince people by reasoning, and touch people by warm feelings.

In order to strengthen ideological and political work in universities and colleges, it is necessary to establish and perfect the contingent of political cadres there. We must have both full-time and part-time political cadres. We must select cadres from among the outstanding teachers and students who have both ability and political integrity. This is not only conductive to maintainging close ties with the masses but also to combining ideological work with professional work. Ideological and political work is also a subject for study, and the political cadres are also a part of the contingent of teachers. We must invite them to engage in relevant teaching work so as to stablize and develop this contingent. Teachers are responsible for both imparting knowledge and educating people. Not only should they impart their knowledge to the students, but also they should set a good example for the students and exert an imperceptible influence on them in the education in morality and consciousness. This is a basic requirement set by our party and state for the teachers.

Reform must be carried out in the content and teaching method for political and theoretical lessions. The content of political lessons can be extended, and education in the political situation and policies should be included in the teaching program. To carry out education in light of the practical problems in which the students are most interested is a vivid method of marxist education. It is necessary for leading cadres at all levels to go to schools to give lectures and hold forums. This should become a regular system and should be carried out for a long time. Education in Marxist theories is of great significance to the formation of a correct outlook on life. We must enable the students to grasp the basic knowledge as well as the stand, viewpoint, and method of Marxism. To this end, we must change the spoon-feeding way of teaching and encourage the elicitation method.

The Seventh 5-Year Plan is a period of key importance for our country in carrying out reform of the educational system and developing higher education. Our tasks are very heavy and arduous. The reform is just in the initial stage. The broad masses of teachers and leading cadres on the higher educational front must give play to their spirit of exploration and carry out the reform boldly so as to blaze a new trail in promoting Chinese-style higher education suiting our reform of the economic structure and scientific and technological system.

LEADERS URGED TO AVOID COMPLACENCY, HEED CRITICISM

HK160835 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Self-Consciousness and Social Recognition -- Third Commentary on Rectifying the Unhealthy Trend of a Trade"]

[Text] In the course of rectifying unhealthy trends in various trades, some trade leaders often indulge in self-satisfaction. [paragraph continues]

They tend to conclude that the work of correcting unhealthy trends in their trades has been effectively completed, once they see that the party committees have held some relevant meetings, have adopted some measures, and have issued some instructions to the grass-roots units, or have received some commendatory letters from the public. If they become self-satisfied just because they see such statistical data rather than the actual problems being settled, their feelings are not quite realistic. In the eyes of the masses, they may appear to self-glorifying.

Whether the general conduct of workers in a trade is good and whether any irregular practice in a trade has been effectively checked should be not be judged merely by the trade leaders' personal feelings. There is an objective criterion for judging such things — social recognition. Satisfactory work and services of a trade should be recognized by society rather than by trade leaders' personal feelings.

Some people may say that it is too hard to seek social recognition, because the work of a trade, a unit, or a worker is often simultaneously criticized and praised by different people. Then, how can a definite conclusion be reached? Indeed, it is never easy for a trade, especially a service trade, to win unanimous praise for the public. A unit which does a good job may also make some errors and may be criticized by the customers. Conversely, some units whose service quality is inferior may also win ome customers' praise as there are also some positive factors in these backward units. However, this does not mean that there is no objective criterion for judging the service quality of a trade. People often measure the work of a unit with their eyes and compare the services offered by one unit with those of another. At present, in the course of rectifying the unhealthy trend of a trade, there are no obvious differences in customers' evaluation of the work of some service trades. The problem is that the personal feelings of some trade leaders are far different for public opinion. In some trades where the general conduct of the workers is not so good, the trade leaders even feel satisfied with the state of things. They too readily give credence to the reports from their subordinate units which often hold back unpleasant information. They too easily become intoxicated with praise and compliments from leaders of other trades and simply rest content with their limited achievements. They lay too much stress on the results of such formalist activities as comparison, appraisal, and inspection, but they do not accept any sharp criticisms from the public and do not face squarely the serious problems in their trades. As a result, the masses are airing their grivances outside, but the responsible people are praising each other inside. The story about "Zou Ji's Expostulation With the King of Qi" is well-known to everyone. As this story shows, a person should have self-knowledge and should objectively judge his or her prettiness or ugliness. The subjective opinion of people who are close to him or who try to find favor with him should not be taken for granted. The only objective appraisal is public opinion. If the above-mentioned trade leaders had self-knowledge like Zou Ji, they would not be so complacent.

Now many units in various service trades have set up "social supervision posts" or installed "social supervision telephones," This is an effective method to overcome the unrealistic feelings of self-satisfaction. At the same time, we also suggest that those leading comrades who are complacent about the work of their trades go out of their offices to sound out the public feelings and to listen to the people's voice. [paragraph continues]

They may also gain some personal experience by buying goods at a shop, subscribing to magazines at a post office, staying at a hotel, travelling by train, bus, plane, or ship, seeking medical treatment at a hospital, or seeing a film at a cinema like an ordinary person so that they may find out how customers in their trades are treated and may have a clearer idea and more realistic feelings after viewing things from the angle of an "onlooker." This will help them to find out more about the real state of the unhealthy things in their trades and promote them to take resolute action tc check the unhealthy trend.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR EMPHASIZES WORK EFFICIENCY

HK170057 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 15 Jul 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Efficiency Should Be Stressed in All Work"]

[Text] At a 8,000-strong rally held in January this year, Comrade Hu Yaobang talked of the leading role of the central organs. The first requirement he set on these organs was the "enhancement of efficiency." In the past 6 months, this requirment has become a self-requirement and conscious action among more and more organs and cadres. A new drive in which people bravely overcome bureaucracy and make every effort to raise working efficiency is taking shape.

However, some localities have made no move so far. Cadres and masses at the grass-roots level there keep on complaining of the practice of evading responsibilities, the dilatory style of work, and disputes over trifles; those who are on a business trip continue to be annoyed for the bureaucracy and the "phlegmatic temperament" shown by the officers of many units they are dealing with; and foreign friends who have come to China on the mission of economic and technological exchange continue to be surprised by the extraodinary poor efficiency of some organizations.

Indeed, various bureaucratic practices charactizerized by a dilatory style and poor efficiency still have hardly been changed in certain units -- people are involved in frequent meetings without taking any real action; document are passed from one unit to another without resulting in any definite decision; protracted discussion leads to no resolution, and adopted resolutions are not implemented; some things which in fact can be accomplished within one day are always delayed for several days; some people always refuse to make decisions on something which they are in charge of but shift the responsibility onto others, remaining indifferent to some important things that the masses are seriously concerned about...Some people fail to grasp the real meaning of the slogan -- "time is money and efficiency is the lifeblood" -- although it is familiar to their ears. They are just unaware of their poor efficiency and dilatory style, staying idel all day long without achieving anything. Such an apathetic attitude toward poor effieciency is even more worrying than the poor efficiency itself. We indeed need to give them a loud shout: Hey, comrades, it is time to wake up!

The modernization process is calling for high efficiency, the refoprm is calling for high efficiency, and the drive to further rectify party style is calling for high efficiency too. Nowadays a vast number of workers, peasants, and intellectuals are attaching greater and greater importance to efficiency, and there are more and more comrades in the leading organizations at all levels calling for the enhancement of efficiency. [paragaph continues]

However, some of our comrades, especially those who are holding leading posts, remain indifferent to this appeal. Their attitude cannot but serve to slow down the development of our cause as a whole. The society is an organic whole. The reform has showed increasingly clearly that no success can be achieved with only a small number of enterprises and organs engaging in the reform and stressing efficiency. To fulfill our goal all enterprises and organs must make concerted efforts to push forward the reform and raise efficiency. The most important point is that the leading and commanding organs must take the lead in raising efficiency. Otherwise, the whole situation will be affected by these organs acting as the stumbling blocks.

In order to overcome bureaucracy and raise efficiency, the step of prime importance is to reform the old structure that hampers rapid development in various fields. But, the structural reform cannot possibly be completed within a short time. What is more, everything still has to be done by people even if a good structure and a good system are available. Therefore, from now on we must take the initiative in overcoming all bureaucratic ideas and style. We must resolutely get rid of the overlord mentality characterized by indifference toward the cause of the partry and the people and cultivate a high sense of responsibility for the cause of the party and the people. We must break away from the small producers' outmoded passive concept and individualistic aversion to discipline and attach great importance to time, efficiency, and economic results. To be sure, no movement like the "Great Leap Forward" which violates the law governing the developments of things will be launched again. However, we must seek high efficiency that can meet the needs of the development of things. Without high efficiency, there will be no modernization. Without high efficiency, there will be no bright and splendid future of the Chinese nation. Every man who wants to be involved in the reform and the four modernizations will necessarily be a man who is enthusiastic in raising efficiency.

Raising effiency is an important part and a target of the reform. One can never raise efficiency without overcoming any obstacle and carrying out any struggle. Every Communist Party member should play an exemplary role in not only observing discipline and law and working hard but also in bravely criticizing and fighting against bureaucracy. Also, our leading cadres at all levels should welcome and encourage the masses to criticize, accept their criticism with an open mind, be eager to overcome bureaucracy, and be the pioneers in raising efficiency. Now that Communist Party members and leading cadres at many organs have set good examples, we believe that more Communist Party members and leading cadres are bound to follow them.

HONGQI URGES NEW CADRES TO ACCEPT WORK AT ALL LEVELS

HK160905 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0239 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Report: "HONGQI Commentator's Article Stresses That China's New Cadres Should Also Be Ready To work at Both Higher and Lower Posts" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- The latest issue of HONGQI published today says in a commentator's article that through reform, a regulation should be laid down in the whole country: Cadres in all age groups must be ready to work at both higher and lower posts, and there should be no lifelong tenure of office.

The article says: Cadres being able to work at both higher and lower posts represents a major reform in China's cadre system. Without adopting this reform measure, it will be hard for China's economic structural reform to develop in depth.

Since 1982, hundreds of thousands of young and middle-aged cadres have been promoted to leading posts at and above the county and bureau level. These new cadres should use their specific action to implement the principle of cadres being able to work at both higher and lower posts. We should not think that once a cadre is promoted to a leading post, he will definitely hold the post until he reaches 60 years old, no matter whether he is competent or not. Now, most peope's wages are composed of a number of parts with the part determined by their work position as the main body. All incumbent cadres must observe this regulation: They should take the wage appropriate to their posts so as to change the convention of cadres enjoying lifelong high pay throughout their lives.

The article stresses that cadres who have been proved incompetent in the leading posts they hold should be resolutely removed to other post most suited to them. The leading departments should do so as soon as possible. Experts, scholars, and professional cadres who are not suited to party and administrative work, should be transferred to the leading posts of relevant departments which can bring their strong points into play. Experts with profound attainments should be allowed to concentrate on their professional work according to their own will. Cadres who are involved in serious irregularities should be resolutely dismissed from office.

The article entitled "Newly Promoted Cadres Should Be Ready To Work at Both Higher and Lower Posts" says that in China, it shoud be advocated that not only incompetent cadres should be removed, but competent cadres should also be changed regularly so as to make way for more capable and suitable people. That is, leading cadres should be changed regularly.

CHEN MUHAU REVIEWS BANK'S PROGRESS, GIVES GOALS

OW160355 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1353 GMT 15 Jul 86

[By reporter Chen Yun]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- Addressing a national meeting of branch directors of the Agricultural Bank today, Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, said that the bank has played an important role as a lever in improving the current economy. However, she noted, the shortage of funds has basically remained unsolved. Therefore, in the second half of this year, the bank should strive to promote steady improvement in the national economy by lending support to the achievement of an appropriate economic growth rate, while seeking a balance between credit and loans.

Chen Muhua described noteable achievements in the following six fields as a result of macroeconomic banking measures taken since the beginning of this year:

First, more cash has been withdrawn from circulation than in previous years. In the first 6 months of this year, 6.5 billion yuan more was withdrawn than in the same period last year.

Second, savings deposits have continued to rise at a relatively fast pace. In the first half of this year, the aggregate increase in rural and urban savings deposits was over 30 billion yuan, topping the same period last year by 47.5 percent. By the end of June total rural and urban saving deposits had already reached 192.6 billion yuan.

Third, the demand for circulating funds has been basically met. In order to alleviate the strain on circulating funds, which temporarily appeared earlier this year, the People's Bank lent support to the production of readily marketable goods and export commodities, and to the operations and material supply of energy, communications, and the raw and semi-finished materials industries, assisted enterprises to repay long-standing loans, and issued additional loans to new enterprises to meet their needs for circulating funds.

Fourth, the structure of agricultural loans has been rationalized to support the development of farming and agriculture. In the first half of this year, agricultural banks and credit cooperatives in various localities adopted a policy regarding loans for different areas and trades, and gave preferential treatment and issued more loans than last year to farming and agriculture, grain production in particular. Loans for village and town enterprises also increased, except for those used for installing equipment. Loans for impoverished areas also increased by a relatively big margin, to exceed 1 billion yuan in the first half of this year, according to statistics from 26 branch banks.

Fifth, loans for fixed assets have grown at a moderate rate

Sixth, the foreign exchange balance has somewhat increased as a result of active efforts to increase exports and limit imports.

Chen Muhua said: The current noteworthy issues are: The growth or industrial loans and industrial production is uneven, more enterprises are defaulting repayment of loans, and banks are not flexible enough in extending loans.

Chen Muhua said: Since the demand for capital is still very great in various economic sectors, banking operations during the second half of the year should be: Taking active steps to raise more capital, placing the overall size of capital construction under strict control, handling circulating funds according to the different situation in indivudual cases, and adopting more flesible measures for extending loans.

Chen Muhaua said: Capital management should stress work in the following five areas: 1) Encouraging savings. This calls for improving services, setting up more branches, and instituting various types of savings accounts. 2) Promoting postal savings services. The money obtained from such services should be reserved for use by the local People's Banks as short-term loans. 3) Extending more loans to be used a circulating funds on the basis of having attracted more savings. 4) An enterprise, new or expanded, should take positive measures to raise 30 percent of the circulating funds it needs for its operation. Should it have problems, our specialized banks may render it support by means of floating bonds or providing it special loans. 5) Providing discounts for the cashing of commercial notes to help enterprises liquidate delinquent payments, enliven the use of capital, and reduce cash input; and helping the relevant quarters and enterprises dispose of idle and overstocked commodities and curtail unreasonable credit.

Concerning capital use, Chen Muhua said that three principles should be adhered to:

1. Actively support what ought to be supported. This includes ensuring capital to purchase agricultural and sideline products; continuing to support production of export-oriented and marketable goods; providing favorable credits to enterprises which have actively carried out lateral economic ties with other regions and departments, have produced good economic returns, and are in need of circulating funds for expanding production; providing circulating funds for profitable rural enterprises whose products are marketable, and who have a good credit rating; and appropriately easing the terms in providing loans to impoverished areas. To stabilize supply, our banks should also give priority consideration to providing loans to wholesalers who need money for stockpiling a reasonable amount of goods.

2. Strictly control what should be controlled. Our banks should strictly control the size of capital construction and firmly reject loans for nonbudgeted construction projects not officially approved by the State Council. Nor should loans be extended to those unqualified enterprises whose products are unsalable, enterprises where no one will hold themselves accountable for losses, and enterprises which have misused their circulating funds for capital construction.

3. Earnestly improve what should be improved. In accordance with the requirements of a planned commodity economy, our banks should gradually improve their means for settling accounts, providing loans, and supervising operation, in order to keep up with needs.

DEMOCRATIC PARTIES END MEETINGS IN BEIJING

OW160559 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0711 GMT 15 Jul 86

[By reporter He Ping]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- The fourth meeting of the Standing Committee of the Fourth Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association and the fourth meeting of the Standing Committee of the Fifth Central Committee of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce ended here today. The meetings adopted resolutions on separate occasions, calling on organizations at all levels under the respective democratic parties to do a good job in admitting new members, in replacing the old leadership with the new and in creating a new situation in doing their work for their own party.

It has been reported that the number of new members admitted into the China Democratic National Construction Association since the beginning of last year accounted for 20 percent of the entire membership. Most of the new members are under 50, and 40 percent have received a college education. The majority are doing economic work and scientific and technical research. Many of them are factory directors, company managers, directors of research institutes, assistant professors, assistant researchers, economists, accountants, statisticians, and lecturers. In addition, the China Democratic National Construction Asociation had also set up some committees, branches, and teams in various cities and counties. Currently, it has a total of 209 local chapters. It has also gradually assigned new middle-aged and young cadres to work in its leading bodies at all levels.

At the same time, the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce also admitted more than 2,800 members from various enterprises, over 40 Chinese-foreign joint ventures, enterprises with cooperative management, and enterprises with sole foreign investments as members. Currently, the work of admitting new members is still being carried out.

The two meetings had, on separate occasions, adopted a resolution to endorse the report submitted by the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association on the work of its leading group for new membership and another resolution to endorse the report submitted by the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce on the work of its leading group for new membership. They had also adopted, on separate occasions, a resolution on the convocation of the Third Session of the Fourth Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association and another resolution on the convocation of the Third Session of the Fifth Executive Committee of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce. At the same time, they announced personnel appointments and dismissals.

Attending the separate meetings were vice chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association Sun Xiaocun, Pu Jiexiu, Tang Yuanbing, Chen Suiheng, Chen Mingshan, Wan Guoquan, Feng Tiyun, and Huang Daneng; as well as Chairman Hu Ziang and vice chairmen Luo Shuzhang, Liu Jingi, Jiang Peilu, Xiong Yingdong, Huang Liangchen, and Sun Fuling of the All-China Federation of Industry and Commerce.

REFORM OF ENTERPRISE PARTY LEADERSHIP URGED

HK040760 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jun 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "A Considerable Change Should Be Effected in the Party's Work in Enterprises"]

[Text] A considerable change should be effected in our party's work in enterprises. This is the enlightenment we should gain after reading the report carried in today's GONGREN RIBAO on how the party committee of Taoyang coalmine supported the factory director in exercising his powers.

The situation requires that a considerable change in our party's work in enterprises be effected. The reform of the enterprise leadership system is an imporant component of the reform of the urban economic structure. A key link in the reform of the economic structure during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is to invigorate enterprises, large and medium-sized state enterprises in particular, so that they can truly become relatively independent economic entities and producers and operators of socialist commodity production that are independent and responsible for their own profits and losses. For this reason, we should reform the enterprise leadership system, separate party leadership from government administration and government administration from enterprise management, and implement the system of factory directors assuming sole responsiblity for production, operation, and administrative management. Party organizations in enterprises should shift the focus of their owrk to ensuring and exercising supervision over the implementation of the principles an policies of the party and state and doing a good job of the party's ideological and organizational construction and ideological and political work. [paragraph continues]

This is an essential link in the ongoing reform of China's economic structure. If we fail to carry out the reform and effect the change, it would be impossible to invigorate enterprises and attain better economic results. Consequently, it would adversely affect the reform of the urban economic structure as a whole.

By shifting the focus of the party's work in enterprises, it will serve to improve and strengthen rather than weaken party leadership. It has been a long-standing view of certain comrades engaged in enterprise party work that party leadership means exercising management over production and appointing and removing administrative personnel. Under the influence of such an idea, many comrades undertook all administrative affairs, but slackened their efforts on the work of party organizations. By shifting the focus of the party's work, leading cadres of enterprise party organs can extricate themselves from administrative affairs; put the stress of their work on vigorously supporting the factory director's activities, ensuring and exercising supervision over implementation of the principles and policies of the party and state, and doing a good job of the party's ideological and organizational building and ideological and political work in enterprises; and give full play to the ideological and political role of party leadership.

In order to shift the focus of the party's work, it is necessary to first effect an ideological change. The merging of party leadership and government administration and party leadership over everything (in actual life, such leadership also meant undertaking everything) took shape under certain historical conditions. Facts have proved that it is not suited to the development of a commodity economy or to economic invigoration and management of modern production. Therefore, reform is imperative. Experiments conducted in some state enterprises throughout the country since 1984 have produced fruitful results. The question now is that some comrades are used to the old practice and idea of party leadership over everything and lack understanding of the importance and necessity of the reform. This question must be resolved. Without an ideological change, it would be difficult to take moves consciously with pleasure. The comrades in charge of party committee work or other work in enterprises should study hard, keep in ideological unity with the principles and policies of the CPC Central Committee, resolutely discard the ideas of matching powers and one man having the say, put reform foremost, and make concerted efforts to appropriately reform the enterprise leadership system.

RAILROAD PASSENGER TRAFFIC SHOWS DECLINE

HK170245 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] According to the ZHONGGUO XIBU KAIFA BAO [WEST CHINA DEVELOPMENT JOURNAL], average daily passenger volume on China's railroads in the first half of this year showed a decline of 400,000 compared with last year. There are four specific reasons for this: There has been a drop in the vast number of meetings and a corresponding drop in the number of cadres travelling by train to attend them; briefcase companies have folded; there has been a big development of road transport, with an increase in the number of passengers travelling by road; and prices of short-distance railroad tickets have been readjusted.

PLA TO INTRODUCE NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICER STATUS

OW041123 Beijing XINHUA in English 0707 GMT 4 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 4 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Army is for the first time to have noncommissioned officers, according to the general staff of the People's Liberation Army today.

A total of 76 administrative and technical posts such as company quartermaster and secretary, director of radio station and technicians of various kinds, jobs formerly done by Army officers will be taken assigned to noncommissioned officers. This reform is expected to be completed by the end of next year.

The People's Liberation Army has already set up two schools for noncommissioned officers and NCO training classes in 42 military academies and schools. Enrolment has started.

Candidates will be selected from male servicemen who have been in the Army for one year and have a good record. After studying in these schools, the noncommissioned officers will serve in the Army for 10 to 12 years, longer than junior Army officers, military officials said. They said that the NCO system was an important step in the reform of the Army's organization.

YU QIULI URGES AIR FORCE TO IMPROVE LEADERSHIP

OW120509 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1435 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jul (XINHUA) -- Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the Central Military Commission and director of the General Political Department, spoke today at a forum held by the Air Force party committee on party rectification and improvement in party style. He encouraged the leading bodies at all levels and the cadres with party membership in the Air Force to set high standards for themselves, fully play an exemplary role, and do better work for the service in the course of improving party style.

Yu Qiuli said: The leading bodies of the Air Force have maintained and carried forward the good traditions and work style. The members of the leading bodies resolutely implement the instructions of the party Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, and set strict demands for themselves. They are in the prime of their lives, hardworking, modest, eager to learn, and vigorous. Under the leadership of the new leading bodies, the commanders and fighters of the Air Force are working hard, and the Air Force tasks have been comparatively well accomplished.

He urged all Air Force commanders and fighters, particularly leading cadres at all levels and the cadres with party membership, to do an even better job henceforth under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the Central Military Commission.

In consideration of the realities of the Air Force, Yu Qiuli put forward three concrete demands for the leading bodies at all levels to improve themselves:

1. Leading bodies at all levels should seriously implement the guidelines of the PLA meeting on party rectification and improvement in party style. Leading cadres should set high standards for themselves and conscientiously examine and correct any problems concerning party style. The leading bodies can surely better themselves if they improve party style and play an exemplary role. The party committee of the Air Force of the Jinan Military Region, adhering to principle and setting a good example in the course of improving party style, correctly conducted criticism and self-criticism and dared to deal with the problems of headquarters and troop units. As a result, the conduct and discipline of their troops are better than others. We should seriously sum up and popularize the experience of those units good in party style to help improve the party style of the leading bodies at all levels.

2. We should pay attention to ensuring unity between higher and lower levels and among personnel at the same level. Unity is the foundation of our work. The unity which we stress is based on the party's line, principles, and policies. It is particularly important for Air Force units to ensure unity, because they have a large number of personnel and deal with many other units. First of all we should ensure unity within the leading bodies at all levels. New and old members of a leading body should respect, help, and sincerely treat each other. They should adhere to principle in major issues and stress mutual understanding in minor ones. It is necessary to be broad-minded, respect others, and judge others more by their strong points. The party committee should uphold the system of democratic centralism. Secretaries and deputy secretaries should listen to opinions from all quarters, hold heart-to-heart talks with others, pool the wisdom of the masses, and arouse their enthusiasm. While ensuring internal unity, we should also achieve unity between ourselves and fraternal units and between ourselves and local governments.

3. We should enforce strict discipline in the Air Force and improve our work style. To enforce strict discipline, we should begin with the leading cadres and organs. Leading organs and cadres at all levels can surely promote good work style and strict discipline among the troops, if they set strict demands for themselves and set a good example in work style for the troops to follow.

YANG SHANGKUN ON IMPROVING PLA PARTY CONDUCT

OW121131 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1636 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Addressing an enlarged meeting of the Beijing Military Region party committee today, Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, stressed that party organizations at all levels and the vast numbers of party members in the military must continue to work hard to carry out the Central Military Commission's instruction that party organizations of the Armed Forces must fundamentally improve their conduct ahead of schedule so as to make due contributions toward improving party and social conduct.

Yang Shangkun said: During the plenary meeting of The Beijing Military Region party committee in December last year, the Central Military Commission expressed the hope that the Beijing Military Region party committee would strive to achieve a fundamental change for the better in its conduct ahead of schedule.

Our request that party organizations of the Armed Forces achieve a fundamental change for the better in their conduct ahead of schedule was made after repeated deliberations and in accordance with the Armed Forces' actual situation. There are many factors that can help the party organizations of the Armed Forces achieve this objective. For example, party members and cadres of the Armed Forces are better educated; as military collectives, the Armed Forces are highly disciplined; and the first stage of party rectification has also laid a good foundation for improving party conduct.

Yang Shangkun fully endorsed the work accomplished by the party organizations of the Beijing Military Region in improving their conduct as well as the work accomplished by regiment-level units and below in rectifying their party organizations. He said: The Beijing Military Region has accumulated ample good experiences during the first stage of party rectification. Regiment-level units and below have quite satisfactorily rectified their party organizations and improved their party members' conduct. If they continue to work hard, they certainly can achieve the objective of achieving a fundamental change for the better in party conduct ahead of schedule.

Yang Shangkun stressed: The party organizations of the Armed Forces must resolutely respond to the CPC Central Committee's call and continue to work firmly to improve their conduct. The party organizations of the Armed Forces must help bring about an improvement in social conduct with their exemplary deeds of improving their own conduct. If each comrade can influence 3 to 5 people, then the Armed Forces as a whole can influence as many as 10 million people. By engaging in spiritual construction with the civilian sector, the Armed Forces can further help local units improve their party and social conduct.

PLA IMPROVES PARTY STYLE, ARMY DISCIPLINE

OW050541 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0731 GMT 4 Jul 86

[By reporter Liu Huinian]

[Text] Beijing, 4 Jul (XINHUA) -- This reporter has learned of the following information from a briefing held by the Central Military Commission on the PLA's party rectification and efforts to improve party style: After 6 months of solid work, the PLA has made remarkable achievements in improving party style. Now it has taken on a new look in both party style and Army discipline.

The improvement in the PLA's party style is mainly shown by the following facts:

-- the PLA has basically stopped the unhealthy practices pointed out in a previous circular issued by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. All units have earnestly examined and corrected existing problems. Now they have stopped the unhealthy practice of buying imported cars and are equipped with motor vehicles according to their table of organization and equipment. The units that must send personnel abroad have been paying more attention to exercising strict control over those who seek to go abroad, and no serious violations of foreign affairs discipline or national or human dignity have been found among those who go abroad. None of the active-duty leading cadres has taken TDY opportunities to make sightseeing trips.

The unhealthy practices of spending public funds on sightseeing, dinner parties, or gifts and of indiscriminately giving souvenirs on the occasion of meetings have been basically stopped. The problems of receiving illegitimate payments or engaging in business operations without authorization have been corrected.

-- The PLA has made a comparatively great progress in investigating and handling law and discipline violation cases, particularly those involving leading cadres. In dealing with important cases, PLA units generally guarantee results by a prescribed time and sternly investigate and handle the cases by seeking truth from facts no matter what leading cadres are involved. So far, units at and above the corps level have closed more than one half of the cases in their hands and are stepping up the handling of the unfinished ones. Some cadres who made serious mistakes have been punished. In accordance with a decision of the Central Military Commission, the Discipline Inspection Commission of the Central Military Commission has issued a circular to all PLA units on the handling of eight major cases. All major units have educated the troops with selected, typical cases. The vast number of party members and cadres say that they have been shocked and educated by those negative instances, and that the Army "truly means business now."

-- There is a good trend for the leading cadres to set a good example and take the lead in correcting unhealthy practices. Since party rectification began, most leading cadres of PLA units have become strict with themselves and honest in performing their duties. They do not flatter their superiors, nor do they vie with their peers for privileges. Some of them have, on their own accord, turned in the cars that are in excess of the authorized number. Some have canceled their car purchase plans. Others have voluntarily returned surplus public property or the gifts that they received. Still others have held family meetings to educate their dependents and relatives to strictly abide by law and discipline. When visiting subordinate units, some leading comrades have omitted their retinues, strictly abided by rules and regulations, and declined dinner invitations and gifts. The malpractice of "giving instructions, asking favors, seeking under-the-table relationships, and entering by the back door" in connection with cadre transfer and fighters' change of service status to volunteers or technical arms have been drastically reduced.

Bureaucracy has been corrected to a great extent and the leading style has greatly changed. The leading cadres and organs of major units have further established the notion of serving the grass-roots units, gone deep into the realities of life to find out the hardships of cadres and fighters, done solid work for grass-roots units, and stepped up Army building.

-- According to analyses made by major PLA units on the work style of the party committees of their subordinate units at and above the division level, a considerable number of their subordinate units have achieved or almost achieved a fundamental change for the better in party style, and a number of units and individuals have improved their party style.

PLA commanders and fighters are satisfied with the remarkable success achieved by the PLA in improving party style in the past 6 months. Many comrades say that "there are three things that they did not expect." First, they did not expect the party Central Committee and the Central Military Commission would be so serious in dealing with party style.

Second, they did not expect law and discipline violators, particularly those who are leading cadres, would be dealt with so resolutely and sternly. Third, they did not expect the work style of leading cadres and leading organs would improve so fast. However, the comrades also soberly understand that a great deal of work remains to be done to improve party style and that the efforts should never be slackened. Some comrades say that the decision made by the Central Military Commission to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in the PLA's party style within this year completely conforms to their aspirations, and that with such a decision, a fundamental turn for the better in party style can be achieved.

POLITICAL QUALITY STRESSED IN PLA EDUCATION

OW140330 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1057 GMT 13 Jul 86

[By reporter Xu Jingyue]

[Text] Wuhan, 13 Jul (XINHUA) -- A forum on ideological education of students in PLA higher-educational specialized institutions of technology, which concluded today, stressed the need to emphasize political quality in training students. It is imperative, the forum pointed out, to guide them in understanding the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method. Students must uphold a scientific world outlook and a revolutionary philosophy of life so that they will cultivate a fundamental spirit to devote themselves to national defense work.

During the forum, representatives from higher-educational specialized institutions of the entire Army exchange their experiences in conducting ideological education in recent years. They discussed current problems of this task, and studied concrete steps to be taken to further improve ideological work among students. In a speech delivered at the forum, Zhou Keyu, deputy director of the PLA General Political Department, emphasized that military academies and schools should pay attention to ideological education and reform their teaching methods to meet the needs of building a revolutionary Army. He said: The study of political theories taught by military academies and schools should be reformed. In some academies and schools, the contents of the course are rather outdated, and the teaching methods comparatively rigid. These contents and methods cannot keep pace with our current social development and the advances we have made in science, nor are they suited to the actual state of thinking in the students' minds. It should be noted, however, that the most fundamental content of the political theories course in military academies and schools should be the basic tenets of Marxism. Without this fundamental education, the students would have no basis for building their scientific world outlook and philosophy of life, nor could they analyze and apply what they have learned from the new courses opened by the academies and schools. He pointed out the need to implement the principle of integrating theory with practice, and encourage them to go to the grass-roots units and among the masses so as to be tempered and to imporve their ability through practice. He continued: The past few years have seen a variety of measures taken by military academies and schools to have their students take an active part in social practice. Some have organized the students to conduct social surveys during their vacations. Others have arranged for the students to be tempered through practical training in PLA units or on frontlines. Still others have organized their students to visit factories and villages or invited comrades from lcoal departments or PLA units to come in to give speeches.

There are also some academies and schools that have established ongoing contacts with local people through various army-civilian joint construction campaigns. All these have yielded rather good results and are measures worth promoting.

The forum on ideological education of students in academies and schools of the whole Army opened on 9 July in Wuhan.

ARMY LEADERS REVIEW PARTY CONSOLIDATION EFFORTS

OW031946 Beijing XINHUA in English 1759 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 3 (XINHUA) -- China's Armed Forces are hopeful of achieving a fundamental turn for the better in improving the Communist Party's conduct this year.

This is the view shared by delegates to a conference reviewing progress of the party consolidation drive started in 1984 within the armed forces. The 16-day meeting, which closed here today, was held by the Central Military Commission.

Yang Shangkun, vice-chairman of the commission, urged commanders at all levels to "speak the truth, do practical work, attach importance to investigations and make more extensive studies."

Yu Qiuli, director of the Chinese People's Liberation Army General Political Department, said that for a party organization, the indicator for the fundamental turn for the better in the party's conduct is whether or not the abuse of power, serious bureaucratism and undisciplined tendencies are corrected.

OFFICIALS SPEAK ON PLA PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW050408 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1515 GMT 3 Jul 86

[By reporter Liu Huinian]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Jul (XINHUA) -- The meeting sponsored by the Central Military Commission to report on the situation in the Army in correcting party style and conducting party rectification ended today. The comrades attending the meeting held: The Army hopes to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in improving party style within this year. It must continue to exert strenuous efforts.

Leading Comrades of the Central Military Commission Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Yang Dezhi, Zhang Aiping, and Hong Xuezhi and Secretary Guo Linxiang of the Central Military Commission Discipline Inspection Commission attended the meeting and made speeches.

This meeting began 23 June. Demonstrating the spirit of seeking truth from facts, the principal responsible comrades from various major units in the whole Army who attended the meeting reported the "good news" as well as the "bad news." They reviewed the situation in rectifying party style, studied how units at and below the regimental level carried out party rectification, and exchanged experiences. The meeting discussed issues of how to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in improving party style and fulfill the party rectification tasks in an overall manner and worked out various specific methods and measures in this regard.

According to the meeting, the various units of the whole army have resolutely implemented the Party Central Committee's and Central Military Commission's Directives on rectifying party style and paid great attention to the work of correcting unhealthy trends. They made even greater progress in doing such work and exposed and solved many problems after the central authority's meeting, which was attended by 8,000 people.

Some of the unhealthy practices pointed out by the central authority -- such as purchasing sedans, traveling with public funds, vying with one another to go to foreign countries, and eating and drinking extravagantly -- have been basically stopped. Some of the major cases involving cadres violating laws and party discipline have been handled, while other are under investigation. The idea of seeking truth from facts has struck deep roots in the hearts of the people, while fewer and fewer people are practicing fraud. Bureaucracy has been overcome to a great extent, and the style of leadership greatly improved. The broad masses of party members have further enhanced their consciousness in following party regulations and observing party discipline.

In his speech Yang Shangkun said: The entire Army has attained remarkable achievements in correcting party style and carrying out party rectification. This year it plans to fulfill the task put forward by the party Central Committee to unify thinking, rectify work style, strengthen discipline, and purify party organizations by means of party rectification. The Army hopes to fulfill its task in party rectification and do its job well from start to finish. The PLA is a highly centralized and unified organization. It has strictly enforced discipline. It should become a pace-setter in correcting party style and other unhealthy practices.

He said: During the second half of this year we must correct party style in close connection with party rectification. The most important thing in conducting party rectification is to strengthen the basic units. If we are able to bring the role of the basic party organizations as a powerful fighting force fully into play and build a strong core of leadership, we will definitely be able to overcome the negative factors and enhance PLA units' militancy.

On the issue of leadership style, Yang Shangkun emphatically pointed out: Leading cadres at all levels in the Army must speak the truth, do practical work, attach importance to investigations, and make more extensive studies. He called on leading cadres at all levels to improve their style of leadership and carry out their work in a down-to-earth manner. He said: Strenuous efforts must be made to correct bad work style, including telling lies and practicing fraud. All those who tell lies and practice fraud must be exposed, criticized, and educated. He also emphatically pointed out: Leading organs at all levels must adopt resolute measures to reduce the number of meetings and release fewer documents. Cadres must go deep into basic-level units to discover and solve problems on time.

In his speech Yu Qiuli said: Over the past 6 months party style in the Army has greatly improved. If we continue our efforts for a period of time, it is entirely possible for the army to bring about a fundamental change for the better in improving party conduct this year. We are full of confidence in this respect.

We urged the party committees at all levels in the army not to relax their efforts in correcting party style and to carry out their work in a down-to-earth manner during the second half of this year. He pointed out: We must continue to strengthen our education on party spirit, party style, and party discipline and step up our efforts in handling major and important cases. We must give specific guidance and deal with different units in different ways. In dealing with those units where party conduct has already been improved, we must begin to improve the system and consolidate the achievements attained. In dealing with units where problems abound, the leadership must personally take action to help consolidate such units and strive to bring about a fundamental change for the better in improving party style.

Yu Qiuli pointed out: So far as a unit is concerned, a fundamental turn for the better in party style mainly means that it has corrected both serious bureaucratic and liberalist tendencies in the political field and the practice of using one's authority to seek personal gain, that it has done a good job in handling the major and important cases, that it has basically eliminated unhealthy trends pointed out by the central authority, that it has brought the role of party organizations as a powerful fighting force fully into play, and that it has promptly exposed and solved all new problems by relying on its own efforts. So far as the whole army is concerned, such change means that the overwhelming majority of units have improved their party style and that the great majority of party members are able to consciously correct and resist unhealthy tendencies.

Yu Qiuli emphatically stressed the need to improve party conduct. He said: Efforts must be made to strengthen education on party spirit and transform our world outlook. One's party spirit is a reflection of one's world outlook. Some people have carried out unhealthy practices or even violated laws and discipline. One basic reason is that they have forgotten the purpose of serving the people, the style of work in waging arduous struggles, and the lofty ideals of communism. Only by strengthening the transformation of the subjective world will it be possible for us to strengthen our confidence in communism; oppose corruption by feudalism, capitalism, and other decadent ideologies; maintain and give full play to fine style of work; and maintain the true qualities of communists in the new situation of reform, opening the country to the outside world and enlivening domestic economy.

An important point in helping leading cadres transform their world outlook is to help them correctly deal with the authority in their own hands and do a good job in tackling the problem of making use of one's authority to seek personal interests. He said: We must impose stringent demands on leading organs and cadres and improve the democratic life within the party and the army. In selecting and promoting cadres we must pay attention to the candidates' ideas and moral standards. As more and more cadres stress party spirit and principle the general mood in the various units will become better and better.

On the issue of party rectification, Yu Qiuli said: Units at and below the regimental level belong to the last group in carrying out party rectification. Helping these units carry out party rectification is of great significance in fulfilling the overall task in party rectification and strengthening basic-level units and the entire army.

After analyzing the current overall situation in carrying out party rectification in basic-level units, he pointed out: Given the basic-level units' characteristics, in the course of solving problems we must pay attention to the following points:

1. We must place emphasis on helping party members raise their ideological level.

2. We must attach importance to solving problems with regard to cadres who are party members.

3. We must pay full attention to units where problems abound. Those units with more problems must bring about marked changes in their outlook by means of party rectification.

Leading comrades of various PLA general headquarters and of the Central Military Commission Discipline Inspection Commission also attended the meeting.

ALL-PLA CONFERENCE ON PERSONNEL WORK ENDS

OW091425 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1521 GMT 8 Jul 86

[By reporter Gai Yumin]

[Text] Beijing, 8 Jul (XINHUA) -- An all-Army troops work conference ended today. It called on the Army and local authorities to cooperate closely in successfully carrying out the work of recruiting new soldiers, demobilizing veteran soldiers, and resettling demobilized soldiers in accordance with the military service law so as to ensure the implementation of the Army's reduction-in-strength reorganization program and contribute to national defense modernization.

In his summing-up speech, Deputy chief of the General Staff He Qizong said: In accordance with the party Central Committee's decision to reduce the size of the PLA by 1 million troops, the first group of units began to carry out the program in the second half of 1985 and basically completed their task in the first half of this year. The reduction-in-strength reorganization work for the second group of units, currently being carried out in a planned and orderly way, will be basically completed by the end of this year. Carrying out the work of recruiting new soldiers and demobilizing veteran soldiers successfully concerns the realization of the party Central Committee's policy decision. Therefore, all units of the Army must attach great importance to this work and adopt effective measures to ensure it is done well this year.

Addressing the conference, Wang Daming, deputy director of the party Central Committee Propaganda Department, urged propaganda departments of party committees at all levels to regard publicizing the work of recruiting new soldiers, demobilizing veteran soldiers, and resettling demobilized soldiers as their important duty, and to further publicize the military service law. He said: The comrades of the various propaganda departments should realize that the work of recruiting new soldiers, demobilizing veteran soldiers, and resettling demobilized soldiers provides a good opportunity for conducting education on patriotism and on the legal system among the masses. The military service law is a fundamental law for national defense modernization. The promulgation of this law plays an important role in perfecting China's socialist legal system and has great significance in improving China's military service system, promoting the building of the Armed Forces, and defending the socialist motherland. Therefore, it is necessary to publicize this law constantly and year after year.

7

In his speech, Vice Minister of Civil Affairs Yang Chen stressed the need to strengthen the building of the legal system on demobilizing veteran solidiers and resettling demobilized soldiers. It is necessary to make good use of time to draw up a regulation on demobilizing and resettling compulsory servicemen, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the military service law and the requirements set forth in the CPC Central Committee and State Council's "Circular on Respecting and Cherishing the Army and on Supporting Military Reform and Building," so as to ensure that our demobilization and resettlement work is done well and according to law.

FIRST HOME-MADE NAVAL TRAINING VESSEL LAUNCHED

OW121314 Beijing XINHUA in English 1777 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 12 (XINHUA) -- China's first home-made naval training vessel was launched here today.

Built by the Qiuxin Shipyard in Shanghai, the "V-856" vessel, with a maximum displacement of 5,500 tons, can be used for training missions on high seas with 200 cadets and 30 instructors on board.

Officials at the shipyard declined to specify when the vessel will be put into active service, but disclosed that she will be equipped with modern navigation and pollution control facilities so that she will be fit for calling foreign ports.

LEADERS INSCRIBE FOR LAWYER ASSOCIATION

OW081446 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1346 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- A National Lawyers' Association was founded in Beijing today. This is the first national social group of lawyers for the masses since the founding of new China. Liu Fuzhi, deputy secretary and secretary-general of the Central Commission for Political Affairs and Law, was appointed honorary president, and Zou Yu, minister of justice, president.

Comrade Hu Yaobang inscribed the name for the association. Peng Zhen, Deng Yingchao, Hu Qiaomu, Chen Pixian, Lu Dingyi, Peng Chong, Rong Yiren, and other comrades also wrote inscriptions or poems for the establishment of the lawyers' association. Peng Zhen wrote: "To ensure the accurate execution of the socialist legal system and to serve the people righteously according to the law are honorable duties of China's lawyers." Deng Yingchao wrote: "To be a people's lawyer is the highest honor." Hu Qiaomu's poem reads: "Here you come wearing a crown of thistles and thorns; here you come holding the sword of justice. Lawyer, you are a gate of holiness, yet also a gate to hell, but you see nothing of dangers or temptations. Your motto is: All men are equal before the law, and only the objective fact is the highest authority." Chen Pixian wrote: "Make full use of lawyers' functions and perfect the lawyers system." Lu Dingyi's inscription reads: "All men are equal before the law." Peng Choing's inscription says: "Expand the contingent of lawyers and raise their quality."

Rong Yiren wrote: "Congratulations to the founding of the National Lawyers' Association. Strive to implement the principle that in China 'all citizens are equal before the law'!"

At the National Congress of Lawyers which closed today, a constitution of the association was approved, and the association's council was elected. [passage omitted]

Addressing the closing session of the congress, Zou Yu, minister of justice and president of the association, said: The official founding of the National Lawyer's Association is a great event in reinforcing China's socialist democracy and perfecting the socialist legal system. It can be anticipated that the association will play an active role in, and have a far-reaching influence on, promoting China's socialist modernization and developing exchanges with the outside world by unifying lawyers of the nation, and by applying legal means.

WENZHAI BAO ON PROBLEMS CAUSED BY RETIRED CADRES

HK151311 Beijing WENZHAI BAO in Chinese No 327, 6 Jul 86 p 4

[Article summarized by Yang Hongxin from issue No 6 of LINGDAO KEXUE [SCIENCE OF LEADERSHIP]: "New Problems Caused by a Vast Contingent of Investigators"]

[Text] Since the reform of the administrative structure, large numbers of leading cadres have become investigators (including inspectors, supervisors, and assistants) after their withdrawal to the second line. Henan now has 50,000 cadres on the second line who are serving as investigators. Such as vast contingent of investigators has brought forth some new problems.

First, the investigators are permanent staff members. Although they enjoy the political treatment and remuneration of leading posts, they have failed to fulfil the corresponding duties. Thus, they occupy the posts in name only. If the number of these people increases within a unit with a limited establishment, the number of those doing practical work will decrease. Otherwise, the total number of staff will exceed the establishment. The actual size of an economic committee of a certain country was not yet determined, but some comrades said that the maximum number should not exceed 25. This organ now has four chairmen and vice chairmen and seven investigators at the chairman or vice chairman level. With an addition of seven to eight section chiefs, there will be only a few vacancies left for people doing practical work.

Second, if too many investigators are crowded in a unit, it becomes difficult to fully exploit their role. According to our investigation of 3 bureaus in a certain city, the ratio between members of the leading group and investigators was 8 to 12. Our investigation of 8 units in a certain county indicated that the ratio between members of the leading body and investigators was 32 to 24. The investigators can neither make policy decisions and direct work at leading posts as they did in the past nor serve as regular cadres. No wonder some leading cadres said: "It is really difficult for us to play the role of investigators. How could such a small grass-roots unit as ours have enought problems to justify such frequent investigation?"

RENMIN RIBAO CARRIES HONGQI TABLE OF CONTENTS

HK170233 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Jul 86 p 7

["Table of Contents of HONGQI No 14, 1986"]

[Text] Forum: "Learn To Properly Handle Inner-Party Contradictions"

HONGQI commentator's article: "New Cadres Should Be Ready To Work at Both Higher and Lower Levels"

Article by Jiang Liu: "Reform and Socialism"

Article by Rui Xingwen: "The Issue of Cultural Development Strategy in the Period of Reform"

Article by Wu Jieping: "Helping Young People Grow More Rapidly Is an Important Task for Old Scientists"

Article by Yu Ji: "Reasons for the Shortage of Working Funds and Methods of Solving This Problem"

"Socialist Spiritual Civilization Development and Theoretical Work -- Excerpts of Speeches at a Forum"

Article by Xu Junxi: "Something About Consideration in Realistic Literature"

Article by Wang Chunyuan: "Literary Critique and Cultural Psychological Structure -- a Discussion on Methodology of Literature and Art"

Article by Zhang Yongmin: "Fully Understand the Role of a Strengthened Legal System in Promoting and Guaranteeing Reform"

Article by Wu Weimin: "Why Should We Actively Expand Export of Technology?"

Article by Yang Rupeng: "Why Do We Say that the "Spark Plan" Is a Good Form for Science and Technology Serving the Rural Economy?"

Article by Ding Fucun: "Continuation of 'Various Kinds of Judges'"

Article by Lei Da: "Unceasingly Enhancing Medical Attaintments as the Heavenly Principles Are Always the Same -- Reading the Book 'Legend About Famous Doctor Liang Youzhi'"

Article: "Being Resolved To Accomplish a Great Cause Rather Than To Become a Big Official"

Article: "Correctly Understand and Evaluate Western Literature of the Modernist School -- a Book Review About 'On Western Literature of the Modernist School'"

LIANG BUTING ADDRESSES SHANDONG MAYORS' MEETING

SK100606 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] After a 6-day session, the provincial conference for mayors and commissioners from various cities and prefectures concluded in Dongying City on 8 July. The conference was another important meeting to discuss economic work since the economic work forum sponsored by the provincial CPC Committee in Zibo City in June this year.

At the conference, the participants relayed and studied the spirit of speeches given by the central leading comrades with regard to economic work. By bearing in mind the actual situation in the province, they also analyzed the economic situation in the period since the beginning of 1986 and discussed the tasks for economic work for the latter half of this year.

At the conference, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Li Changan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province, delivered important speeches.

At the beginning of the conference, the participants heard a report given by the responsible comrade of the Shengli oil fields with regard to the work in construction and prospecting of oil fields. Also, they inspected the expanded site of the (Gudong) Oil Field. Upon seeing the oil field crew doing pioneering work arduously and waging tenacious struggles displaying the revolutionary spirit, they were greatly inspired and encouraged.

The conference held that the province's economic situation in the first half was good. Under the leadership of the party committee and the government at all levels, localities throughout the province dealt with the problems in economic work, which need to be dealt with urgently, in a timely manner. This has been favorable to promoting economic development. During the January-June period, the total industrial output value showed a 4.1-percent increase over the figure of the corresponding 1985 period. The increase scored by the cities and prefectures including Jinan, Qingdao, and Yantai, reached more than 10 percent. Despite the serious drought, the province still reaped a good summer grain harvest. The total output is estimated to show an increase over the 1985 figure. Meanwhile, the province has better fulfilled the tasks for both spring and summer sowing, had a bigger growth of seedlings, and laid a foundation for reaping a bumper autumn harvest. The province has also achieved new development in agriculture, animal husbandry, sideline production, fishery, and the diversified economy. The province has basically brought under control the scope of investment in capital construction among the state enterprises covered by the budget, increased in volume of investment in the key projects of energy resources and transportation, and accelerated the pace of building the projects. The increase scored in financial revenues has surpassed that scored in industrial production. The province has also realized a large-scale increase in local commodities, foreign trades, and exports, basically maintained the stability of commodity prices, and made the markets in both the urban and rural areas prosperous.

The conference held that the current problems in economic work are the low quality of some products and the increase of product cost; the product structure is not reasonable and the economic result is not ideal; the scope of the capital construction has not been brought under strict control; and the financial expenditure has shown an excessively rapid increase. As for these problems, efforts should be made to fully understand and deal with them at an early date in order to maintain the good trend of developing the national economy in a steady, stable, and harmonious manner.

The conference pointed out that the tasks of economic work for the latter half of this year are very heavy. Efforts should be made to concentrate on implementing the policies and measures that have been adopted to conduct economic work. During a certain period in the future, the departments at provincial and city-prefecture levels should organize some personnel to go deep into the grass-roots units to carry out investigation and study and to render service to them. In conducting reforms in economic systems, efforts should be made to earnestly examine and sum up the experiences gained in the reforms in line with the demand of consolidation, digestion, supplement, and improvement. We should persistently carry forward the measures which have been enforced in conducting reforms and been favorable for promoting the development of productive forces, and should gradually improve the measures which have been proved as inadequate. In line with the unified arrangement made by the central and provincial authorities, we should carry out the measures adopted to correct the major problems. As for the measures adopted to correct the minor problems, we should boldly carry them out as long as we deem them right. Meanwhile, in line with the emphasis of conducting reforms during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, efforts should be made to organize investigation and studies in a planned and step-by-step manner in order to create conditions for making greater progress in conducting reforms in 1987 and 1988.

In concluding the conference, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered an important speech on enlivening the rural economy. He pointed out: Developing the township- and town-run enterprises represents a strategic measure to make the province's economy comprehensively prosperous.

At the conference, Li Changan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province, also delivered a speech on analyzing the work done in the first half and making work arrangements for the latter half of this ear.

Attending the conference were responsible comrades from the provincial level departments concerned.

SHANDONG TRANSFERS MILITARY TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

SK160916 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] As of 26 June, our province had completely concluded the work of transferring the People's Armed Force departments of 137 counties, cities, and districts to the local governments.

The province's work in this regard was thoroughly carried out within 3 months, including the pilot work on transfer. During the period the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial people's government, and the provincial military district organized a leading group in charge of this work and held many meetings to make well-conceived arrangements for the work. Leading comrades in the provincial military distict persistently went deep into the grass-roots level units to carry out the work in a down-to-earth manner and to sum up and popularize in a timely manner the experiences gained in the pilot work, so that they ensured smooth progress in conducting the work.

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

GUANGDONG'S LIN RUO VISITS TYPHOON-HIT AREAS 16 JUL

HK170243 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] By 1900 on 15 July, the flood waters in Meicheng had fallen below the warning line, and by this morning, the water had receded in most parts of the town, except for waterlogged low-lying areas. More than 100,000 marooned cadres and masses were out of danger, the town's communications are gradually returning to normal, and shops have reopened. Following Vice Governor Ling Botang's aerial inspection of Meixian prefecture on 14 July, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Lin Ruo personally went to the prefecture today to comfort the disaster victims, inspect the damage, and provide guidance for relief and rescue work.

HENAN COUNTY DISMISSES INCOMPETENT TOWNSHIP LEADERS

HK141158 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Text] According to HENAN RIBAO, in the first half of this year, the CPC Committee of Yanling County demoted and dismissed six incompetent township leading cadres. This caused great shock in the country.

Some comrades held that they were new cadres who made no mistakes and were young and that it seemed unreasonable to demote and dismiss them. But the county CPC Committee educated the people that though they made no mistakes, they had not made any breakthroughs for a long time. This would cause delay to the party's undertakings. It was outmoded thinking that to demote or dismiss them was unreasonable, though they made no mistakes.

The county CPC Committee took appropriate treatment for the demoted and dismissed comrades in connection with their cases. The CPC Committee offered relevant jobs to comrades who possessed special skills. The six cadres now express satisfaction with the party's arrangements, and are working hard at their posts.

While reporting this news story, HENAN RIBAO also published a commentator's article entitled "Promotions and Demotions of Cadres." The article says: Recently, a large number of young comrades has taken up leading posts. Facts have shown that most of them are competent. But there are also some who are incompetent. This is by no means a strange phenomenon. The bureau for selecting cadres must go through the process of examination and selection when promoting a cadre. But the process does stop when the cadre assumes a leading posts. Once it is discovered that a comrade is incompetent in handling the work of leadership, arrangements must be made for him so that he can do what he can and full play is given to his skills. This is a way of showing responsibility for the party's undertakings, as well as taking good care of him.

The article says: We should develop a common practice in which the promotions and demotions of cadres are a normal phenomenon. In particular, departments in charge of cadre affairs must not take demotion as only a means of disciplinary measure. After being demoted, the incompetent leaders can still become good engineers, good teachers, good doctors, good workers, or outstanding workers at other fronts. In the wake of popularizing the systems of recruiting cadres and hiring cadres for a term of office, cases of promoting and demoting cadres will become more common. While relatively stable, the contingent of cadres will constantly receive new blood. Only thus can we maintain the best performance of the cadres and make our undertakings always full of vitality.

ZHAO DI SPEAKS ON HENAN CADRES' ROLES IN REFORM

HK150605 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] The middle-aged and young cadres should strive forward and make contributions in the course of carrying out reforms. This statement was stressed by Zhao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, on the morning of 14 July at the provincial Party Schools sixth short-term class for advanced studies, which will be soon be completed, and its fifth class for leading party group cadres.

Zhao Di said: What we take over from the aged comrades is by no means only their posts but also responsibilities, undertaking, hopes and great trust, which are more important. He stressed: The middle-aged and young cadres must have a strong sense of political responsibility, as well as the sense of undertaking an historical mission.

Zhao Di said: The present development of the situation, as well as the trend of reforms, have offered our middle-aged and young cadres plenty of room and favorable conditions to give play to their skills and make contributions. Since the objective conditions are now available, whether or not they can make contributions rests with their subjective efforts.

Zhao Di emphatically stressed: We must develop among the middle-aged and young cadres a general, good practice of emulating each other's study, practice, revolutionary tradition and contributions. The middle-aged and young cadres must do well in their study, do more practical work, be hold in making innovations and strive forward.

Zhao Di said: Every leader should take as his motto the statement that "one who makes no contributions commits a mistake." As leaders assume important posts and are vested with authority, they should work hard and make contributions for the state and the people Cadres who make few mistakes but have not made any great contributions cannot be regarded as good cadres, even though they are honest.

In connection with his thinking, Comrade Zhao Di also spoke on the relations between work and study, between succession and innovation, between human relationships and moral qualities, between major issues and trifles, between career and family, and so on.

Comrade Zhao Di also analysed the present situation in the province's leading groups at various levels in the work of building themselves. He pointed out: From now on, the principle for building the leading group is to basically maintain a stable situation, to gradually readjust and to perfect the structure, and to improve the quality.

Zhao Di said: Our focus is to do well in improving the quality, as well as strengthening the ideological building and work style of the leading groups. We should expend great efforts improving the leaders' political quality and professional skills. We must select and recruit cadres in accordance with the party's principles, and resolutely overcome and correct unhealthy tendencies concerning the selection and recruitment of cadres.

XIZANG'S WU JINGHUA ADDRESSES MINORITY ATHLETES

OW150438 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1158 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Lhasa, 14 Jul (XINHUA) -- A Tibetan sports team will soon leave Lhasa for a competition.

The summer sun is radiant in Lhasa, capital of Xizang; the scenery at Luobulinka in Lhasa's suburbs is particularly enchanting. This is where the athletes and coaches of the Tibetan team have gathered to train for participation in the Third National Traditional Minority Games. [passage omitted]

Before their departure for the competition, members of the team gave an exhibition of their sports' skills before leading comrades of the autonomous region on 6 July. Those watching the performance with great interest included Wu Jinghua, secretary of the autonomous regional party committee; Pagbalha Geleg Namgya, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee and vice chairman of the autonomous regional People's Congress Standing Committee; Redi and Dan Zeng, deputy secretaries of the autonomous regional party committee; and Gyibug Puncog Cedain and Tuddao Doje, vice chairmen of the autonomous regional people's government. [passage omitted]

The Tibetan team's horses were safely transported to Urumqi on 1 July, where a horse race will be held. [passage omitted]

Leading comrades of the autonomous region cordially received all members of the team. Wu Jinghua said: "The forthcoming national traditionally minority games will be a grand meeting, characterized by the great unity of all minority nationalities in our great motherland. It will be a great honor for Xizang's minority athletes to take part in such a grand sports meet." He encouraged the athletes by saying: "It is our desire to strive for good results, but this is secondary. What is more important is to learn from various fraternal nationalities' noble moral character and lofty spirit in loving and building the motherland and to learn from their advanced experiences in developing their traditional sports in order to contribute more to building a new, united prosperous, and cultured socialist Xizang."

YUNNAN ISSUES CIRCULAR ON INTELLECTUALS

HK141410 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Text] The organization, propaganda, and united front work departments of the provincial CPC Committee recently issued a circular to party organizations at all levels in the province on inspecting and accepting implementation of policies on intellectuals, urging all areas and units to grasp the implementation of policies on intellectuals and resolve properly all problems left over from history. The circular reaffirms the criteria for acceptance of implementation of policies on intellectuals:

1. By adopting the attitude of seeking truth from facts, we must correct all wrong and frameup cases against intellectuals during and before the Cultural Revolution. The conclusions of reexamiantion must be made known to the persons concerned.

2. We must reasonably place those intellectuals who could not bring into play their role in the past and resolve their problems, such as husbands and wives living in different places and changing the agriculture household registration of their family members to nonagricultural household registration.

3. It is necessary to retroactively pay intellectuals salaries that were wrongly deducted or withheld during the Cultural Revolution.

4. It is necessary to return to intellectuals all money and property confiscated during the Cultural Revolution.

5. It is necessary to return to and make compensation for all private houses forcibly occupied during the Cultural Revolution.

6. It is necessary to resolve the problems of discriminating against the wives and children of intellectuals who agree wrongly dealt with or who made mistakes or committed crime, in their education, employment, and join the party.

7. It is necesary to reexamine intellectuals who were wrongly dealt with since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, including in the struggle against economic and criminal activities.

The circular stresses that in the course of solving these problems, whether or not the persons concerned have complaints, the units concerned and public security, procuratorial, and court organs must reexamine and properly deal with their cases in accordance with the relevant regulations.

BEIJING SECRETARY SPEAKS AT PARTY COMMENDATION RALLY

SK121236 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpts] The Beijing municipal rally to commend excellent Communist Party members and advanced party branches opened amid thunderous applause in the Great Hall of the People where flamed-red flags fluttered on 29 June. [passage omitted]

Chen Xitong, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee and mayor of the municipality, presided over the rally. Jin Jian, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, read the decision of the municipal CPC Committee on carrying out the activities of learning from excellent communist party members and advanced party branches. Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, delivered a speech at the rally. Attending the rally were Duan Junyi, Standing Committee member of the Central Advisory Commission; Cao Zhi, deputy director of the Central Organizational Department; Wang Daming, deputy director of the Central Propaganda Department; and leading comrades of the municipal Discipline Inspection Commission, and municipal People's Congress, the municipal government, and the municipal CPPCC Committee, including Xu Weicheng, Ye Lin, Ye Zilong, Han Boping, and Bai Jiefu. [passage omitted]

In his speech, Li Ximing, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, extended warm greetings and lofty respects to the representatives of excellent Communist Party members and advanced party branches that have been commended on behalf of the municipal CPC Committee. He said: Just like the 14 excellent party members, including Zhang Jieshi, and the 5 advanced party branches, including the party branch of the workshop of the steelworks of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company, who were commended by the municipal CPC Committee in the preceding stage, the 113 excellent party members and 37 party branches to be commended this time are outstanding representatives of the excellent Communist Party members and advanced party branches throughouut the municipality as well as advanced models with the spirit of the age.

In his speech, Li Ximing called on party members and party organizations at all levels throughout the municipality to pay attention to emulating the three spirits of the excellent party members and advanced party branches that have been commended.

First, we should emulate their spirit to keep forging ahead. Communist Party members should first possess the spirit to keep forging ahead to bring into play their exemplary vanguard role under the new situation; and simultaneously, the party branches should also possess this spirit to give play to the role as a fighting bastion. We should stand in the forefront of reform, dedicate ourselves to reform, support and protect reform, and strive to create a new situation in our work. Party members and party organizations at all levels throughout the municipality should get rid of old ideas such as sticking to conventions, not forging ahead, and attempting nothing and accomplishing nothing; enhance the sense of being urgent to conduct reform; be good at linking the party's line, principles, and policies with the actual conditions of their units; set the highest possible demands on themselves; be brave in doing pioneering work; diligently forge ahead; and strive to create first-class work.

Second, we should emulate their spirit of being selfless. Just as they have done, we should link the pursuance of communist ideals with solid and conscientious implementation of our work and combine the work of carrying out reform and blazing new trails with the job of honestly performing our duties so that we will certainly be loyal public servants in order to build the party and implement policies to serve the interests of the people, really not be affected by unhealthy practices, money, and corrosive ideas; consciously resist wrong ideas such as putting money above everything else, practicing selfish departmentalism, and working according to payment; be brave in resolutely waging the struggle against various unhealthy practices and the activities in violation of the law and discipline; and take the lead in straightening out party style.

Third, we should emulate their spirit of making arduous efforts. We should eliminate bureaucratism and the idea of loving comfort and being lifeless, enhance revolutionry vigor, study hard in the course of reform and the four modernizations, arm ourselves with Marxist threory and modernest scientific knowledge, strive to scale new heights in a down-to-earth manner, and make efforts to become representatives of advanced productive forces.

Comrade Li Ximing pointed out: The year 1986 is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The tasks ahead of us are glorious and arduous. Thus, the Communist Party members throughout the municipality should certainly enhance their revolutionary vigor, strive to make contributions to the party and the people, and unite and lead the people of the whole municipality to push forward the great cause of socialist modernization.

XING CHONGZHI ADDRESSES HEBEI RETIRED CADRES

SK160611 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] On the afternoon of 28 June, the provincial CPC Committee held a forum of retired veteran cadres who had retreated to the second or third line to solicit their opinions and suggestions on the construction of the party and the work undertaken by the party and the province.

Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the forum with the attendance of Xie Feng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province, and Lu Chuanzan, secretary general of the provincial CPC Committee.

On the eve of the 65th anniversary of the CPC's founding, comrades attending the forum happily got together to jointly review the brilliant history of our party, which has greatly developed and grown in strength, and to jointly discuss the grand plan for building the four modernizations.

At the forum, the participating comrades stated with an intimate knowledge of the party's work: Without the Communist Party there would be neither new China, nor construction of the four modernizations. They also put forward very favorable, constructive suggestions on the province's issue of how to enhance the building of the party and how to further consolidate and develop the results scored in the party rectification drive and on the province's work in the fields of industry, agriculture, finance, and culture.

In conclusion, Comrade Xing Chongzhi, on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech in which he stated that the provincial CPC Committee will certainly live up to the expectations of the veteran party-member cadres and will resolutely make a success in the work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, which will certainly be better than that in the Sixth 5-Year period.

SUN WEIBEN AT HEILONGJIANG PLA DISTRICT CPC PLENUM

SK120404 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] When speaking at the 16th Plenary Session of the 5th CPC Committee of the provincial Military District, which ended on 11 July, Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and first secretary of the provincial Military District, pointed out: We should first attend to the self-construction of the troops, and should, if possible, transfer some human and material resources to directly develop economic construction.

Comrade Sun Weiben pointed out: That the Army should sumbit to the overall situation of the state is the comprehensive and general strategic ideology as well as a high-level principle for making policy decisions. Some units have lacked an understanding of the specific form of submitting the Army to the overall situation of the state, and have confined their work only to the form of directly training the armymen and providing materials. As a grass-roots unit, so long as it has conscientiously implemented the relevant principles and policies in their practical work, it has, in fact, submitted itself to the overall situation of the state.

To attain the general task of the party for the new stage, concerted efforts of all fronts are needed. Not only the comrades on the economic front are required to vigorously developed their work, but the comrades on the military front are also required to work hard in order to provide a tranquil environment for the smooth development of peaceful construction. Therefore, the Army should regard the fulfillment of their own tasks as the major way and form of submitting themselves to the overall situation of the state.

Those units which possess the conditions should vigorously organize forces to support the construction of the localities on the premise of not affecting the work of the troops. The People's Armed Forces departments should actively mobilize and organize the militiamen and reserve duty personnel to take the lead in building material and spiritual civilizations in order to engage in economic construction in a more direct manner.

GAO DI ADDRESSES JILIN ADVISORY COMMISSION PLENARY SESSION

SK150808 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] The first Jilin Provincial Advisory Commission held its sixth plenary session in Changchun City from 10 to 12 July. The session was aimed at relaying and implementing the spirit of the forum sponsored by the Central Advisory Commission with the forum sponsored by the Central Advisory Commission with the participation of chairmen of the advisory commissions of various provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions.

Attending the session were Wang Daren, chairman of the provincal Advisory Commission; Zhang Shiying, vice chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; as well as the Standing Committee members and members of the provincial Advisory Commission -- more than 60 persons in all. Eleven Standing Committee members and member of the provincial Advisory Commission, including Xiao Chun, vice chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, were absent due to sickness or leave.

Comrades Wang Daren and Zhang Shiying presided over the plenary session.

At the session, the participating members relayed and studied the speeches given by Comrade Bo Yibo and Song Renqiong at the forum sponsored by the Central Advisory Commission with the participation of chairmen of the advisory commissions of various provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. They reviewed the work done by the provincial Advisory Commission in the past and made the following work arrangements for the latter half this year in line with the three expectations raised by Comrade Bo Yibo in his speech and by bearing in mind the actual situation in the province:

1. A good job should be done in being the advisers and assistants of the provincial CPC Committee and in actively supporting the work arranged by the provincial CPC Committee. This is the unshirkable responsibility of veteran comrades. In the future they pledged to strive to take more action in delving into reality to learn the opinions of the masses and the situation in society. They pledged to often keep the provincial CPC Committee informed of the situation and to put forward their opinions and suggestions. Efforts should be made to fully trust and respect the provincial CPC Committee and to pay attention to preventing interference from cropping up in work.

2. Efforts should be made to enhance study; to master the ways of applying the stand, viewpoint, and method of Marxism in looking into or analyzing issues, correctly appraising the situation, and in accurately keeping the provincial CPC Committee informed of the situation; and to earnestly study the important documents issued during the period since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the speeches given by the principal leading comrades of the central authorities in order to consciously act in unison politically with the central authorities.

3. A good job should be done in making living arrangements for the members of the provincial Advisory Commission and showing concern over work of dealing with the affairs of retired cadres and of the cadres on convalescence leave.

Prior to the conclusion of the session, Comrades Wang Daren and Zhang Shiying delivered speeches.

Comrade Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended the session and delivered a speech in which he fully acknowledged the work done by the provincial Advisory Commission. In his speech he stated: The provincial Advisory Commission has actively done a great deal of investigation and study work in the previous period and put forward large number of good and most favorable suggestions that have played a role in helping or supporting the work undertaken by the new leading body of the provincial CPC Committee. In his speech he also analyzed the situation in industrial and agricultural production throughout the province and the problems cropping up in production, and put forward a preliminary plan for further making a success in the province's economy and for a strategy of social development. He urged the provincial Advisory Commission to continuously play its role in making a success of various fields throughout the province.

DUAN JUNYI, GAO DI AT JILIN RIBBON-CUTTING RALLY

SK160231 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Summary from poor reception] "Today marks the 30th anniversary of the founding of the Changchun No 1 Vehicle Plant. The Jiefang CA 141-model light car, the second generation of the Jiefang-model car of our country, will be put into small batch production beginning on 15 July." A ribbon-cutting ceremony is going to be held at the general assembly workshop of the plant on the trial production of the Jiafang CA 141-model light car.

At 0840 on 15 July, (Liu Yutang), secretary of the CPC Committee of the Changchun No 1 Vehicle Plant, declared the ceremony open. Present at the ceremony were Duan Junyi, Standing Committee member of the Central Advisory Commission; He Guangyuan, vice minister of machine-building industry; Gan Zhijian, vice minister of the State Planning Commission; Gao Di, secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee; Gao Dezhan, governor of Jilin Province; Liu Jingzhi, chairman of the Jilin Provincial CPPCC Committee; Huo Mingguang, vice chairman of the Jilin Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Liu Shulin, vice governor of Jilin Province; Wu Yixia, secretary of the Changchun City CPC Committee; Wang Jiatong, mayor of Changchun City; and (Shi Mingwu), vice chairman of the Changchun City People's Congress Standing Committee. Also attending the ceremony were former leading comrades of the Ministry of Machine Building Industry; leading comrades of some state organs; and more than 50 comrades who had hold the leading posts of the Changchun No 1 Vehicle Plant.

GAO DI ATTENDS JILIN FAMILY PLANNING CONFERENCE

SK170606 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] The provincial family planning work conference which ended today stressed: We must never ignore family planning work and should firmly grasp it. In the future, our province should countinue to advocate the one-couple, one-child policy and to strictly control the excessively rapid increase of population.

Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; and Gao Dezhan, governor of the province, made speeches at the conference. Gao Wen, vice governor of the province, presided over the conference.

Population growth will enter the peak period in the next 10 years. The province will have 260,000 newly married couples annually during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. Thus, the task for birth control is extremely difficult.

The conference called on the party committees and the governments at all levels to further enhance the idea that it is necessary to control the population, to place the family planning work as an extremely important work and on the course of spiritual civilization, to make unremitting efforts to firmly attend to the work, to pay attention to the elimination of the idea that it does not matter to have more children under the situation in which the people are getting richer and richer along with economic development, and to educate the vast number of cadres and the people to gradually eliminate the traditional idea of childbirth. The departments should closely work together with each other and vigorously support the family planning work.

The family planning work departments at all levels should strengthen the propaganda and education on family planning work among the grass-roots areas, achieve the service work, comprehensively upgrade the level of family planning work, and strive to fulfill the tasks for population control during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

The conference also further perfected and readjusted the policies on birth control in the rural areas.

LIAONING'S QUAN SHUREN RECEIVES DPRK DELEGATION

SK070520 [Editorial Report] Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin at 2100 GMT on 6 July carries at 1.5-minute report on the arrival of the North Pyongyang provincial friendship delegation of the DPRK in Shenyang City by train via Dandong City on 6 July. "That evening, Quan Shuren, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province, gave a banquet in honor of the Korean guests." During their stay in the province, the delegation will participate in he celebrations for the fifth anniversary of the signing of agreements between the two provinces on production.

LIAONING OFFICIAL ON STRAIGHTENING OUT PARTY STYLE

SK110353 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 9 Jul 86

[Text] At a meeting to exchange experiences in straigthening out party style held in a (? zinc) plant of Huludao on the morning of 8 July, Gao Zi, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, made a speech on the issues concerning whether or not unhealthy practices are brought about by reform and whether or not the development of reform can be hampered by the straightening out of unhealthy practices.

He said: Straightening out party style is in keeping with reform. It is theoretically wrong that we separate, and even isolate, the improvement of party style from reform. Such practices will get us nowhere.

Gao Zi said: Some people attributed the unhealthy practices existing in society to reform at the preceding stage. Recently, another group of people also spread such slanderous rumors that the development of reform had been hampered by the work of straightening out unhealthy practices. Therefore, some comrades with misgivings have lost enthusiasm for doing their work. We should absolutely get rid of such ideas. Reform is a matter relating to the readjustment of a series of key links, such as political, ideological, educational and superstructural systems, as well as a matter to accelerate the elimination of the rigid economic structure which hampers the development of productive forces. Thus, we will certainly meet obstacles and obstructions in all fields in the course of reform. Our purposes for straightening out party style and unhealthy practices and to get rid of obstactles and obstructions for reform and to create fine social and political environments.

Gao Zi emphatically pointed out: Cadres of the discipline inspection enthusiastically support and protect reform, and proceed from the thinking of serving reform to explore new paths for straightening out party style.

Gao Zi called on personnel in charge of the discipline inspection work to unswervingly support reform and protect the enthusiasm of reformers on one hand, and to persistently grasp party style and protect the enthusiasm of the comrades in charge of grasping party style on the other. Only by doing so can we ensure that good party style, reform, and the work of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy will develop along a correct direction.

LIAONING HOLDS PARTY RECTIFICATION CONFERENCE

SK121251 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] From 16 to 23 June, the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee held a conference on party rectification. Attending the conference were deputy secretaries of various city CPC committees who are in charge of party rectification work; secretaries of various county and district CPC committees; directors of various city, county, and district offices in charge of party rectification; and responsible comrades of departments concerned at the provincial level.

The major discussion topic of this conference was to relay and implement the guidelines of the forum on party rectification with the participation of secretaries of CPC committees of the 11 provinces and municipalities in north China, northeast China, and northwest China; and to sum up and arrange for the rural grassroots-level party rectification and for the work of consolidating and developing the achievements scored by the units at or above the county level in party rectification.

At the conference, Comrades Xu Shaofu and Chen Suzhi respectively delivered reports on further attending to rural party rectification and on consolidating and developing achievements in party rectification.

The conference maintained that great achievements have been scored in the province's rural party rectification. Thanks to party rectification, we have further strengthened the building of leading bodies, and enhanced the fighting capacity of party organizations; have further stepped up party spirit, and straightened out party style; and have further corrected the ideology guiding rural work, and effectively promoted the in-depth development of reform and economy. At the same time, the political competence and awareness in communism of the vast number of party members have been obviously improved, and their vanguard and exemplary role has been strengthened. In addition, our organizations have been purified, and the building of party organizations has been intensified. The town and township party rectification has been carried out in line with definite guiding ideology, with prominence to major aspects. Thanks to the town and township party rectification, problems of some localities and units have been solved in a relatively thorough manner. The conference also maintained that considerably more towns and townships have set low standards for their party rectification, and have failed to thoroughly solve the problems of their leading bodies, particularly the evil trend of abusing one's powers to extort personal favors. A few units have carried out party rectification in a poor manner, have failed to learn their problems and grasp the major aspects, and have yielded poor results in party rectification. Some units have carried out party rectification in a superficial manner.

Comrade Sun Qi delivered a summing-up speech. He said: To achieve greater success in party rectification and in correcting party style, we must make an objective and realistic estimation of the current situation. In the party rectification of the past 2 years, our province has successfully accomplished the tasks of unifying the thinkings and purifying organizations. However, some problems still exist in the fields of rectifying work style and enforcing discipline. In taking stock of party style, our judgment should be based on two fields, one is the party line, policies and the inner-party political life, and the other is party organizations, and the work style of party members and cadres. It is wrong to regard all contradictions in society and within the party as a problem in party style, and as evil trends. In particular, in the process of reform, many new situations and problems will certainly emerge. We should solve the problems which have emerged. With regard to the guiding ideology that party rectification should ensure and promote reform and economic development, Comrade Sun Qi said: In carrying out party rectification over the past 2 years, we have conscientiously implemented this guiding ideology. At present, along with the deepening of reform, various kinds of new problems and complicated contradictions have emerged in practice. Leading comrades at all levels should conscientiously study and profoundly comprehend the far-reaching significance of the demand of the central authorities on simultaneously grasping the "two civilizations," and should not pay more attention to one than to the other. Comrade Sun Qi stressed in conclusion that we should actually strengthen the leadership over party rectification . He said: Experience gained in party rectification over the past 2 years shows that where the leadership is effective, party rectification can be carried out successfully, and the key to achieving success in party rectification in lies in the efforts of top leaders. At present, we should overcome impatience and laxity, and should adhere to conducting party rectification by high standards and correcting party style.

GANSU PARTY SECRETARY VISITS FACTORY FIRE SITE

HK151532 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 14 Jul

[Text] Yesterday morning, Comrade Li Ziqi and other provincial and Lanzhou city leaders went to Lanzhou's (Changjing) electrical machinery plant to visit the site of a fire and look into its cause. They also expressed hope that cadres and workers of the plant would enhance their vigor to rebuild the plant and resume production as soon as possible.

A large fire occurred in the (Changjing) electrical machinery plant on the morning of 12 July. The fire destroyed th emain workshops and products of the plant. Yesterday morning, in front of the damaged electrical machines for export, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Li Ziqi said: The products that can be repaired must be repaired so as to minimize the loss. While analyzing the cause of the fire, Li Ziqi said that this fire has exposed poor business management of our enterprises and our weakness in fire prevention. He expressed the hope that other enterprises would draw a lesson from the case and examine their fire prevention work to ensure accident-free production.

Vice Governor Zhang Wule inquired about the plant's plan for resuming production. He pointed out that after resuming production, the plant must produce better products to protect the market and reputation of the plant. He told the responsible comrades of Lanzhou city and the provincial Economics Commission on the scene that provincial-level enterprises and Lanzhou city must do their utmost to help the plant repair equipment and provide places, so that the (Changjing) electrical machinery plant can resume production and make up its losses as soon as possible.

SHAANXI LEADERS DISCUSS COALFIELD DEVELOPMENT

HK170247 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] According to SHAANXI RIBAO, on 15 July the provincial government summoned responsible comrades of its subordinate organs and other units concerned to study the exploitation of the Shenfu coalfield. Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Bai Jinian demanded that all sectors of the province support this work and spur economic development in northern Shaanxi. Governor Li Qingwei and Vice Governors Zhang Bin and (Zhang Guoxing) spoke on how to develop the coalfield as soon as possible.

The provincial government has set up a preparatory group for exploiting the coalfield, headed by Vice Governor (Zhang Guoxing), to organize preparatory work in various departments.

SHAANXI COMMENTATOR ON SLANDER AGAINST REFORMERS

HK140219 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jun 86 p 1

[Commenator's article: "The Heart That Reformers Should Have"]

[Text] An old saying says: "Achievements are likely to bring slanders in their wake." This saying is now more convincing following news reports published recently in newspapers that some reformers are in a sorry plight after they were falsely accused by anonymous letters.

Who trumps up charges against reformers by means of anonymous letters? It is believed that those who dare not reveal their names are certainly not fair and square. According to a fact-finding survey, people like them are mostly steeped in the ideology of individualism in the reform. Some of them nurse a grievance because they are not promoted, or because they are not promoted to certain positions that they expect; some are discontented because their selfish desires are not fed or because they are criticized for their mistakes. Therefore, once there is a chance, these people immediately seized the opportunity to capitalize on the vulunerable points of reforms and injure them by underhand means.

If leaders are enlightened, they certainly hate these false charges and take good care of and safeguard reformers. If leaders stick to old ways and are jealous of worthy persons and too particular about trifles, they certainly chime in easily with those who lodge false accusations through annonymous letters, and get reformers into deep trouble.

At present false charges are real obstacles to the reform and are the most vicious obstacles. Under certain circumstances, reformers may be hurt by one or two anonymous letters as if they have been hit by arrows shot from hiding, and lost their posts, and the reform in the units where they work may come to a stop. Sometimes, one or two anonymous letters may result in brave reformers being beset with rumors and slanders, chill their enthusiasm, and cause them to be at a loss what to do. Consequently, the practice of "eating from the same big pot" may be resurrected, enterprises may suffer setbacks and heavy losses, but those who lodge false accusations will be complacent.

To push forward the reform, all trumped-up cases should be seriously investigated and dealt with. Ma Shengli, a well-known reformer of the country and director of the Shijiazhuang City paper mill, was terribly distrubed by anonymous letters and letters of false accusation, not long after he scored certain success in the reform. Thanks to the firm support given to him by the central departments concerned, and the CPC Committee and people's government of Shijiazhuang City, the whole truth came out, through repeated investigation, that it was Liu Guangyi, secretary of the mill's general party branch, who had trumped up a charge against him. Liu was immediately relieved of his post for self-examination. This has encouraged Ma Shengli to have more courage to carry out reforms.

Frame-ups are handled by party organizations, but reformers should be aware that to achieve something, they should prepare themselves against attacks, suspicion, jealousy, opposition, ironical rermarks and sarcastic comments. "Sturdy grass withstands strong winds." Well-known reformers in history were all tried by adversity. As long as we adhere to the party's policies, refrain from abusing power for personal gain and violating the law and discipline, pay attention to bureaucratic practices, and work for the people without selfish desires, we can certainly stand firm. When we find out shortcomings and commit mistakes, we must conscientiously make self-criticism and correct them. While resolutely carrying out correct instructions by the higher authorities, we must take the initiative in listening to criticism and suggestions from the masses of people. Even if their criticism is not correct, we must take the attitude of "correct mistakes if you have commited them, and guard against them if you have not." We set slanders with ulterior motives at naught and should not be vexed by them, nor should we be disheartened, because we are reformers and not cowards. We must be strong-willed, stand on a higher plane, and take purely ficticious slanders as a force pushing us forward. This is the broad-mindedness that reforms should have.

'WAR' INDUSTRY BASE, SHAANXI ENTERPRISES COOPERATE

HK120546 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 11 Jul 86

[Text] After smashing barriers between different departments or regions, base 067 of the Ministry of Astronautics has developed lateral economic and technological ties with many local enterprises so that advanced technology of war industry can be used for the development of the national economy.

Base 067 has a large number of senior and middle-grade scientists and technical personnel and possesses relatively modern technology and equipment. The base was completely cut off from the outside world for a long time in the pst because of the system of separating departmental management from regional management. In the course of switching to civilian production while maintaining military needs, the base removed barriers existing between different departments or regions and made efforts to develop lateral economic cooperation with some cities of our province and some enterprises of other provinces. More than half of the 35 contracts, which the base concluded with local enterprises for technology transmit, consultancy service and production cooperation, have been executed. Aside from this, it has also established cooperation with the Shaanxi motor car plant and the Xian boiler factory. With the development of lateral economic cooperation with local enterprises, scientists and technical personnel working at the base can now display their abilities and talents, and all research units and workshops of the base are now full of vigor and vitality. Comrades of the department in charge of civilian production of the base told this reporter that the income earned from the projects jointly run by the base and local enterprises as well as the output value of civilian products this year are estimated to top 20 million yuan, registering a 100 percent increase over last year.

SONG HANLIANG, OTHERS ATTEND URUMQI LAW COURSE

HK151326 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] A study course in legal knowledge held for leading comrades of the region by the general office of the regional CPC Committee opened in Urumqi yesterday afternoon. This shows that leading comrades of the region have taken the lead in studying legal knowledge and in strengthening the building of the legal system. Attending the study course are leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee, Advisory Commission, Discipline Inspection Commission, People's Congress Standing Committee, People's Government, CPPCC Committee, and Production and Construction Corps, including Song Hanliang, Tomur Dawamat, Janabil, Li Shoushan, Amudong Niyazi, and Zhang Sixue; and responsible persons of the Public Security Department, procuratorate, and court. Like students in school, they have listened with rapt attention and carefully taken notes.

The first lesson yesterday was given by (Zhang Li), secretary of the Xinjiang Political and Legal Administrative Cadre College CPC Committee. He discussed grasping construction in one hand and the legal system in the other. (Qin Guozheng), secretary of the Judicial Department party group and deputy department director, introduced the situation in popularizing legal knowledge throughout the region. Feng Dazhen, regional CPC Committee Standing Committee member and Propaganda Department director, discussed the arrangements for the study course. From now to the middle of December, this course will have a lesson each week. Experts, scholars, and leading comrades of the regional judicial department and colleges will be invited to lecture on the legal knowledge of 12 branches of law, including the constitution, law of regional autonomy of minority nationalities, criminal law, civil law, and marriage law to introduce the principles, guiding ideology, and [words indistinct] of the administration of public security, trial work, lawyers, and notarial work.

PROBLEMS, CHANGES FOR TAIWAN'S DIPLOMATIC POLICY

HK111337 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 p 22

[Article by Wang Peiyu: "A Glimpse of Taiwan's 'Diplomatic' Policy"]

[Excerpts] In early June, Interpol's 82d executive committee meeting unanimously adopted a resolution that: In view of the situation in which the Taiwan authorities refused to take part in Interpol activities under the name of the Police Organization of the Region "Taiwan, China," it has been decided that the secretary general and all members of Interpol should execute the resolution of the 53d plenary session of the organization, and stop Taiwan's police organization from taking part in any of the organization's business and activities. This is the second severe setback concerning international organizations experienced so far this year by the Taiwan authorities.

Before this, the Asia Development Bank, after admitting the PRC as a member, asked Taiwan to stay in the organization under the name of "Taipei, China." But the Taiwan authorities dealt with this by taking an attitude of "not changing the name, not withdrawing from the organization, and not participating in the activities." The authorities thus caught themselves in a dilemma.

It is just as Yu Kuo-kwa, Taiwan's "Executive Yuan premier," said on this year's international ituation, "we are still in an ever-changing and difficult environment."

The status of Taiwan in the international community has continued to drop since the 1970's. At the beginning, the PRC was restored its legitimate seat at the United Nations. Then, China and the United States established diplomatic relations. At present, an absolute majority of the world's countries (134 in number) have established diplomatic relations with the PRC Government, and acknowledge that the PRC Government is the only legitimate government representing China, while Taiwan is part of China. [passage omitted]

In order to overcome its difficult situation in the international community, Taiwan has begun "changing" its "diplomatic policy." At a press conference, Fredrick F. Chien, "representative to the United States of the coordination committee for North American affairs," stated that Taiwan "should focus its future security consideration on the Soviet Union." It is widely known that Taiwan has long claimed that Mainland China poses a great threat to the security of Taiwan. But the "new point of view" proposed by Fredrick F. Chien is the first "change" to take place on a formal occasion.

This "new point of view" has attracted general attention among international circles. Public opinion in the West holds that over a long period in the past, people living on and outside of Taiwan island were generally dissatisfied with the ossified "diplomatic" policy of the KMT authorities. Proposal of this "new point of view" may pacify Taiwan's people and change the "government's image of being ossified," as well as possibly winning more support from people living overseas.

In order to change its impression upon the European and American countries, Taiwan began its so called "substantial diplomatic" offensive. It sent more than 10 teams to the United States for "tactical procurement," each of which brought a turnover value of some $1 billion. It also sent several teams to Europe for large-scale procurement. The aim of this move was to reduce Taiwan's favorable trade balance with this region and to give them a good impression of Taiwan. People called this kind of diplomacy "money diplomacy" [passage omitted]

However, acting on behalf of the "government," "Executive Yuan premier" Yu Kuo-hwa repeatedly stressed the principle of "the four unchanges," that is, we shall by no means change the "state system" formulated by the Constitution of "Republic of China," or the general goal of "Republic of China" to fight communism and restore the country, and so on.

International public opinion pointed out that the Taiwan authorities now face a more difficult situation in terms of "diplomatic" relations. If they do not face the reality about China and the international community, they will be unable to change their situation of being isolated in the international community.

OFFICIAL REFUSES TO DISCUSS TAIWANESE SPY REPORT

HK151408 Hong Kong AFP in English 1404 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (AFP) -- Chinese authorities refused to discuss a Hong Kong newspaper report Tuesday that a Taiwan spy thought to have died in 1975 was in fact living in the south of China.

"This is not your business," the spokesman for the Public Security Ministry told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE by telephone when asked about the report.

(A pro-Beijing newspaper in Hong Kong, WEN WEI PO, said that the spy, Zhu Tong-lang, was thought to have been captured and killed by Chinese authorities in 1975. In fact, the newspaper said, he is living happily in the southern province of Jiangxi.

(Zhu Tong-lang was sent to China on a spying mission in 1961 and was arrested by the authorities 11 years later, WEN WEI PO said. He was later released and given a job in the forestry bureau of Shanyou county, Jiangxi Province where his parents were staying, it added. Mr Zhu married a local girl 20 years his junior in 1980 and fathered a boy and a girl, the newspaper said.)

KMT URGED TO PURSUE COOPERATION WITH CPC

OW110011 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0130 GMT 9 Jul 86

["Forum on State Affairs" program hosted by Liu Wei]

[Excerpts] Dear listeners, the 60th anniversary of the Northern Expedition falls on 9 July this year. Sixty years ago, the Kuomintang [KMT] and the CPC collaborated with each other, fought our enemies, and shed blood together, filling glorious pages in the Chinese revolutionary history. The historical significance of the Northern Expedition should be remembered forever. [passage omitted]

While commemorating the 60th anniversary of the Northern Expedition, we cannot but think of the incomplete unification of our motherland, for Taiwan and the mainland are still separated. This is a product of long-term turmoil from within and externally throughout Chinese history, and a result of interference by foreign powers. It is against the will of all the Chinese people, including the people in Taiwan. The separation has inflicted great losses upon our country, nation,and people. [passage omitted]

As you all know, the CPC and the government of the motherland have successfully solved the Hong Kong issue according to the scientific idea of "one nation, two systems."

The Taiwan issue, different from the Hong Kong issue by nature, is not a matter of regaining sovereignty, but a matter of peaceful reunification of the motherland concerning China's internal affairs. However, it can be solved according to the ideas of "one nation, two systems." Moreover, the conditions can be more flexible. I think this policy of the CPC and the government of the motherland for a peaceful reunification has given priority to the interests of the nation, and also absolutely conforms to the interests of the Taiwan people and those of the Taiwan authority.

Dear listeners, "unification leads to stability while separation leads to danger" is a conclusion made by history. The Chinese people have long suffered from internal disputes and fighting. Shall we continue the state of separation between Taiwan and its motherland, or shall we end this as soon as possible in order to fulfill the reunification of the motherland? I think it is not difficult for anyone who is patriotic to make a rational and correct decision. [passage omitted]

Dear listeners, another inspiration derived from the revolutionary course of the Northern Expedition is that the fate of our nation heavily depends on the relationship between the KMT and the CPC. As you all know, the first round of cooperation between the KMT and the CPC brought about victory in the Northern Expedition, which made the KMT the nation's party in power. The second round of cooperation between the KMT and the CPC resulted in the victory of the anti-Japanese war, which swept away China's insulting history of having lost every war over a period of 100 years. The KMT regained its prestige from that as well. The cooperation between The KMT and the CPC on these two occasions not only conformed to the basic interests of the country and the people butalso was favorable to both the KMT and the CPC. History has proven that coooperation between the KMT and the CPC is a greate blessing to our nation and people.

Some people in the KMT said that the KMT suffered losses from those periods of cooperation. This is absolutely contrary to the historical facts. In fact, the KMT suffered no losses but obtained a lot of benefits from them. It has suffered losses only from pursuing anti-communism. What has the KMT gained from its anti-communist posture in these decades? It hurts not only the nation but itself. [passage omitted]

Today, to unify the motherland and invigorate China is also a historical trend. Then why can't the KMT and the CPC once more cooperate with each other in order to accomplish the great cause of the motherland's reunification and to promote China's prosperity?

TEXTILE INDUSTRY URGED TO UPGRADE, DIVERSIFY

OW170349 Taipei CNA in English 0255 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 16 (CNA) -- Economics Minister Lee Ta-hai said Tuesday that this nations exports of textile products to the U.S. have been frozen by the U.S. government at last year's levels, and urge the textile industries to upgrade the level of their products and diversify their markets to weather the difficult situation.

Lee told reporters that the nation's textile industries will sooner or later face freezes on quotas of textile products exported to the U.S., the most important market for ROC textile manufacturers.

To alleviate the impact of the quota freeze, Lee urged that the textile industries here should develop value-added products and promote sales in markets other than the U.S.

Lee's warning remark followed a foreign wire service report which said the ROC has reached an agreement with the United States in the third round of textile talks in Geneva. The report said the new agreement will allow the ROC's textile exports to the U.S. between 1986 and 1988 to grow by only 0.5 percent based on the 1985 level.

But the U.S. side estimated that the shipments of ROC textiles to the U.S. market this year will be cut by about seven percent as a result of other import restrictions.

Vice Economics Minister Wang Chien-hsien also called on domestic textile producers to further improve their design ability, manufacturing technology, and marketing system to take on various challenges.

BRIEFS

JOINT JAPANESE SOFTWARE ACCORD -- Taipei, 12 Jul (CNA) -- The Taipei-based Prosperity Information and Computer Industry Inc. [Prosinfo] signed a joint-venture agreement with the well-known Japanese computer software group Kyodo Computer Co. Saturday. Under the agreement, Kyodo Computer will invest NT $8.8 million to acquire 40 percent of Prosinfo's stakes. The Japanese company will also transfer the most advanced expertise in developing application and system software packages to its Chinese partner. The Prosinfo-Kyodo agreement followed a similar cooperative pact between the ROC's Institute of Information Industry [III] and the U.S. - based Sun Micro Systems signed earlier this week. Ko Chih-shen, director of the III's Product Development Division, said that local software technology has reached a sophisticated stage. But local software industry has been hampered by a lack of comprehensive sales networks. Ko said that both III and Prosinfo expect to launch into overseas markets by entering into cooperation with Sun Micro and Kyodo Computer, both of whom are leading software developing companies in the world [Text] [Taipei CNA in English 1408 GMT 12 Jul 86 OW]

DAYA BAY SYMPTOM OF DEEPER SCHISM AMONG LEADERSHIP

HK150851 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 15 Jul 86 p 8

[Editorial: "Chinese Puzzle in Top-Level Arguments"]

[Text] The fall-out from China's nuclear energy program has already claimed a casualty, before the first concrete of the Daya Bay project has been poured. The victim is the facade of unity which Beijing tries to present to the world.

Daya Bay and the other nuclear plants which China is planning -- one near Beijing and the other in Qinshan, near Shanghai -- have emerged as key issues in what is ostensibly competition among third-tier leaders vying for top posts which should become available in the next year or two. The mammoth Three Gorges hydroelectric project, which will straddle the boundary of Sichuan and Hubei provinces in the middle reaches of the Yangtse, has also become involved.

The technocrats and others backing these new energy projects see them as crucial both to China's modernisation program and, of course, to their own advancement. Those senior officials who wonder where all this modernisation is leading say the nation already has adequate traditional energy resources.

The debate thus has a wider focus than is first apparent. It is not simply a matter of clashing personalities and ambitions, but one which could determine the course which China is to take and which could have repercussions for overseas interests committed to an investment role in the country's modernisation drive. The real fate of Mr Deng Xiaoping's reforms will be determined by the generation of party leaders who will take over after Premier Zhao Ziyang and the party's General Secretary, Mr Hu Yaobang. The arguments surfacing over Daya Bay indicate there is fundamental disagreement on the ultimate direction those reforms will take.

Mr Li Peng and Mr Tian Jiyun are the principal protagonists clashing in the field of energy. Both have their sights on the prime ministership, which will become vacant when Mr Zhao becomes President, probably at the party's next congress, in September next year.

While Mr Li and Mr Tian both subscribe to the basic philosophies which underpin the Chinese bureaucracy, their differences of approach represent either end of the official political spectrum. Their rivalry typifies the schism which is emerging within the leadership. Mr Li is generally regarded as belonging to the old guard. His revolutionary credentials are traceable to his father, who was killed by the Kuomintang. He was then adopted by the much-revered Zhou Enlai. Mr Tian, on the other hand, is typical of the new breed of bureaucrats, coming from Sichuan and indebted to Mr Zhao Ziyang for his rise to the central leadership. Both men joined the Politburo last September.

Other young leaders are also aiming for the top, notably Mr Hu Qili, a protege of Mr Hu Yaobang; and Mr Qiao Shi, who seems to represent a conservative wing of the reform group and has been in charge of the anti-corruption drive launched this year. Their connections or relationships with Mr Li or Mr Tian, if indeed there are any, are obscure.

The old guard are bonded by experiences through the turmoils of more than four decades of struggle. They have held virtually unchallenged power ever since the People's Republic was founded. Even though they have different views of the way the country they have helped build should be run, their sense of comradeship largely transcends differences of policy.

The new, ambitious leaders who are eager for more power are different. Often from the provinces and enjoying their first taste of life at the centre, they are not trammelled with allegiances formed long ago, under conditions far different from those which prevail today.

There are other signs of disarray, for instance the contradictory statements recently by Mr Hu Yaobang and Mr Zhao Ziyang over the prospects for changes at the top. Mr Hu indicated in Europe last month that several top leaders might step aside next year to make way for younger officials. Mr Zhao soon afterwards said there would be little change in the party leadership at the next national congress. There have also been somewhat contradictory statements about the drive against economic crimes, which increasingly appears to be aimed at people who have been deeply involved in the modernisation drive.

All this seems to point to considerable confusion at the top levels about the direction the modernisation drive is meant to be taking. The leadership seems to have pinned its hopes on this push for progress, and yet there is clear evidence that many urban reform programs, which only a year ago were a dominant topic, have come to a halt. Even rural reforms, once seen as the hallmark of the achievements of Mr Zhao and his senior deputy, Mr Wan Li, are beginning to be questioned.

Repeated claims that the modernisation clock has not been turned back may perhaps be doubted, and foreign investors would be well advised to think carefully before committing themselves fully.

Overall, there is more than a suspicion that the leadership is not as decisive as it once was, that there is an air of uncertainty in the top echelons. Is Mr Deng, 82 this year, losing his grip? Most China observers say not, but it would seem time for him to exercise his authority and display the resoluteness which launched China on its rocky voyage into the modern world.

PRC GOLD SHIPMENTS TO HONG KONG REPORTEDLY CEASE

HK160451 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 16 Jul 86 p 3

[Text] China's massive gold shipments into Hong Kong came to a sudden halt in May after more than $850 million had been brought in during the first four months of this year.

Trade figures for May released by the Census and Statistics Department yesterday showed no imports of gold bullion or bars from China, though reexports to China for the month were valued at $1.45 million.

In March and April China unloaded $157.81 million and $692.59 million -- totalling more than 10 tons. The total gold imports for the whole of 1985 was only $2.21 million.

As the SUNDAY STANDARD reported last week, the 375-fold increase on last year in China's export gold bullion to the territory has startled and puzzled local dealers.

LI PENG'S WIFE HEADS DAYA BAY'S BEIJING OFFICE

HK150856 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 15 Jul 86 p 3

[By David Wong and To Yiu-ming]

[Text] China has appointed the wife of Vice-Premier, Mr Li Peng, to head the Beijing office of the Guangdong Nuclear Power Plant.

This fact emerged yesterday as Chinese sources ruled out any conflict between Mr Li and another vice-Premier, Mr Tian Jiyun, over the Daya Bay plant issue in vying for the premiership. Mr Li has been known as a strong advocate for the controversial nuclear plant, but it is not common knowledge that his wife is also working on the project.

His wife, Mrs Zhu Lin, graduated from an institute of foreign languages in Harbin in 1955 and now heads the Beijing office of the Guangdong Nuclear Power Plant, sources in Beijing told the STANDARD.

The office is understood to serve chiefly as a link between the Guangdong project and Beijing. But Chinese officials were tightlipped about the nature of her job when questioned.

She and Mr Li were married in 1958.

The disclosure about Mr Li's wife further fuelled speculation that the vice-premier had personal reasons for supporting the project.

But local leftwing sources pointed out that the political career of Vice-Premier Li Peng would not hinge on the Daya Bay plant issue or the Three Gorges project, although he is noted for his strong support of these two controversial projects.

There is much opposition to the Three Gorges project which is a series of three dams across the Yangtze River to produce electricity. Opposition objects to their placement, because of the resultant flooding of the countryside that will take place.

It was a Hong Kong Chinese newspaper that first broke the news that serious differences had erupted among China's top leadership over the Daya Bay nuclear plant issue, with two vice-premiers opposing each other.

A report carried by The HONG KONG DAILY NEWS on Sunday, quoting sources from Beijing, said that vice-premiers Mr Li and Mr Tian held opposing views on whether the plant should be constructed at Daya Bay.

Mr Li, a noted technocrat, was said to be fully in favour of building the plant whereas Mr Tian was said to be firmly opposed to the plant.

Both Mr Li and Mr Tian are strong contenders for the premiership as Mr Zhao Ziyang is expected to relinquish the post within two years.

However, Chinese sources said that they had reservations about the truth of the report, as it was inappropriate to "personalise" the Daya Bay issue with Mr Li or Mr Tian.

"It is very natural for leaders to have different opinions on a public issue, and the Daya Bay plant is no exception. Different views can be constructive and are essential for policy formulation.

"But it seems doubtful anyone would attempt to exploit this issue for political gain when running for the premiership," a Chinese source said.

After taking into consideration the political sensitivity of the plant issue and its significance in China's energy policy, the source said, any decision about its fate must be decided by the highest decision-making body -- the Politburo or its Standing Committee.

"It's not a matter of personal likes or dislikes, but an issue of national interest which has to be decided by collective leadership", the source said.

Another source said that whether China should go ahead with the plan will be thoroughly examined by the State Council, which will hold collective responsibility for it.

"It is not a matter for a Vice-Premier or even the Premier to decide at their discretion," he said.

It is understood that divergent views over the Daya Bay plant are prevailing among the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference (CPPCC).

A Chinese source pointed out some members of the CPPCC expressed reservations about the Daya Bay plant during the last session in April.

But leftwing sources saw the existence of differing opinions within the leadership as a normal phenomenon for such a large country as China.

A source pointed out that when Beijing gave the green light for the project in December 1982, after a feasibility study that took two years, Li had only been a member of the Central Committee for about three months.

OFFICIAL REPORTS FOREIGN VENTURES EXCHANGE DEFICIT

HK160441 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 16 Jul 86 Business Post p 3

[By Oliva Sin]

[Text] Foreign ventures operating in 19 key provinces and cities in China reported a total foreign exchange deficit of US$579.87 million last year, according to a senior Beijing official.

Mr Chu Baotai, deputy director of the foreign investment administration of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade (MOFERT) said the findings were revealed in a survey done by the government on foreign enterprises, including joint ventures.

Cities covered by the survey included Guangzhou, Xizmen, Tianjin and Beijing, while provinces included Fujian, Guangdong and Qinghai.

The total number of ventures sampled was not disclosed.

Mr Chu told a press conference yesterday only Qinghai had a foreign exchange surplus of US$30,000 while the others suffered from a shortfall.

He said the deficits were attributed to the huge imports of vehicles and raw materials by foreign enterprises in 1984 and last year.

Guangdong alone accounted for almost half of the $578.87 million deficit, he said.

(Guangdong has a concentration of foreign investment in view of its proximity to Hong Kong).

The survey also revealed that foreign enterprises spent $1.28 billion on importing parts and raw materials last year.

In contrast, they could generate only $472 million by exporting their products.

Nevertheless Mr Chu said the figure could not be taken to reflect the foreign exchange capacity of foreign ventures in China since the survey included many new ventures in the pilot stages.

He said many of the problem ventures were manufacturing operations which relied on imported parts and components but sold their products on the domestic market.

As a result, they failed to balance their accounts in foreign exchange because their earnings were in yuan but expenditures in hard currency.

He said many of these ventures were engaged in manufacturing TV sets, automobiles, meters, telecommunications and well drilling equipment.

"The shortage of these supplies on the domestic market means that joint ventures can sell at a higher price than export," he said.

That is why, many of these ventures have accumulated handsome profits in Chinese currency which their foreign partners cannot repatriate.

(Chinese currency is not freely convertible, except when authorized by the State Administration of Exchange Control.)

Mr Chu cited the example of TV manufacturing point venture set up by the Japanese firm Hitachi in Fuzhou.

Mr Chu said the Japanese firm instead of exporting the TV sets, sold them locally and is now having foreign exchange problems.

Meanwhile, he said China has relaxed the extension of credits to joint ventures to help them solve funding problems.

The measure, which came earlier this month, inlcudes both foreign exchange and yuan loans.

China imposed a freeze on credits last year after the country experienced a drastic drop in its foreign exchange reserves.

As a result of the credit squeeze, many state-owned enterprises and joint ventures suffered from cash flow problems.

A number of joint ventures could not get off the ground because they failed to obtain bank support.

Mr Chu said the credit relaxation will be implemented by the Bank of China and other specialised banks, such as the Industry and Commerce Bank.

Nevertheless, observers said the move does not mean China will loosen its grip on foreign exchange.

They said China will continue to adopt stringent measures to restrict the import of consumerables, production lines for the manufacture of electronics appliances and unnecessary raw materials.

One source said there is little hope for China to relax its use of foreign exchange in the next 12 months.

Mr Chu, who earlier spoke at an investment conference organised by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, said China's foreign exchange reserves will improve this year.

"We have successfully controlled the buying spree and our exports have been growing in recent months," he said.

Mr Chu admitted that foreign investors were worried over the drop in China's foreign exchange reserves.

MEETING ON SEZ LAWS, REGULATIONS CONCLUDES

HK111152 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 2

[Special dispatch from Zhuhai by reporter Kuang Yu: "The State Council Recently Held a Meeting To Study the Formulation of Laws and Regulations for Special Economic Zones"]

[Text] A seminar on the feasibility of regulations for all special economic zones in China, presided over by Zhang Ge, deputy director of the Special Economic Zones [SEZ] Office of the State Council, ended yesterday. The purpose of the 2-day meeting was to explore and study how to formulate national laws and regulations for special economic zones in the future and to do preparatory and advisory work in this respect. Chinese and foreign businessmen who make investments in the special economic zones will have detailed and unified legal documents to follow.

The meeting was held at Baiteng Hu, Zhuhai. Participants at the meeting were responsible persons and professionals concerned from Xiamen, Zhuhai, Shantou, and Shenzhen Special Economic Zones, and responsible persons concerned from Beijing and Guangdong Province.

The meeting mainly carried out initial study and exploration in accordance with the new situation of the special economic zones at present, new problems emerging in the foreign-oriented economy of various special economic zones, and the respective characteristics of the various special economic zones. It is hoped that when conditions are ripe, realistic and far-sighted national laws and regulations for special economic zones will be formulated for deliberation and approval by the NPC.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

China

Vol I No 138 18 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

- Soviet Union Seeks Closer Economic Ties With OPEC A 1
- Overseas Joint Venture Enterprises Expanding [JINGJI CANKAO 1 Jul] A 1

UNITED STATES

- N.Y. TIMES Reporter Detained in Beijing [AFP] B 1
  - Official Declines Comment [AFP] B 1
- Impact of Trade Protection Bill on Sino-U.S. Trade [GUOJI SHANGBAO 10 Jul] B 3
- U.S., USSR To Discuss Limiting Nuclear Tests B 4

NORTHEAST ASIA

- RENMIN RIBAO on Tian Jiyun's Trip to DPRK [16 Jul] D 1
- DPRK Condemns U.S. Tripartite Talks Refusal D 3
- NODONG SINMUN Condemns ROK Military Exercises D 4
- Li Peng Calls for More Balanced Trade With Japan D 4

SOUTHEAST ASIA & PACIFIC

- PRC Official Condoles on Lao Official's Death E 1
- Democratic Kampuchea Letter Urges New SRV Policy E 1

WESTERN EUROPE

- Zhao Ziyang Continues European, Africa Trip G 1
  - Meets Overseas Chinese in Madrid G 1
  - Arrives in Turkey G 1
  - Welcomed by Turkish Counterpart G 1
  - Talks With Turkish Prime Minister G 2
  - Zhao, Ozal Address Banquet G 3
  - Further on Banquet Remarks G 3
- XINHUA Analyzes Italy's 'Political Crisis' G 4

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

- Regulations Issued on Nuclear Plant Safety K 1
  - France To Assist in Safety Checks K 2
- Decision on Abolition of FEC's Still Pending [AFP] K 2

Economist on Importance of Economic Information [RENMIN RIBAO 12 Jul] K 4
LIAOWANG on Handling Contradictions Within CPC [LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION 14 Jul] K 4
RENMIN RIBAO on Reform, Theoretical Flowering [11 Jul] K 6
CHINA DAILY on HONGQI Literary Theory Debate [18 Jul] K 11
Zhu Houze on Political Structure Reform [RENMIN RIBAO 15 Jul] K 13
Seminar Views Political Structure Reform K 14
Vice Minister on New Cultural Leadership's Policy K 14
Product Quality, Plant Efficiency Drive Launched K 16
Economic Commission Stresses Quality Control K 16
Commentary on Building Spiritual Civilization [GONGREN RIBAO 3 Jul] K 17
CHINA DAILY Commentator on Need for Rule by Law [17 Jul] K 18
Official Urges Tax Departments To Enforce Laws K 19
Commentary Stresses Need To Respect Tax Workers K 20
Vice Finance Minister Seeks Stricter Tax Policy K 21
LIAOWANG on Extrabudgetary Capital Construction [7 Jul] K 22
Deng Xiaoping's Son Calls on Yunnan Frontier Guards K 23
Yu Qiuli Addresses Meeting on Army Reform K 24
Yang Dezhi on Improving Quality of Soldiers K 24
Li Peng at Satellite Communications Ceremony K 25
Greater Attention to Agriculture Urged [NONGMIN RIBAO 3 Jul] K 26
Deng Liqun Tours Jiangxi; Briefed by Wan Shaofen K 28
Ulanhu Addresses Regional Autonomy Law Forum K 29

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

Xiamen Curbs Exaction of Charges From Joint Ventures O 1
Shandong Holds Forum To Improve Social Order O 1

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

Henan Secretary Speaks at Party School Graduation P 1

SOUTHWEST REGION

Hu Jintao at Guizhou Prefecture Leaders Meeting Q 1

NORTH REGION

Rural Beijing Promotes Party Rectification R 1
Ni Zhifu Meets With DPRK Trade Unions Delegation [TIANJIN RIBAO 30 Jun] R 2
Ni Zhifu Attends Party Founding Anniversary Rally [TIANJIN RIBAO 1 Jul] R 2

NORTHEAST REGION

Heilongjiang Secretary at Meeting on Party Style S 1
Liaoning Completes Transfer of Armed Forces Departments S 1

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Hong Kong-EEC Textiles Agreement Expected Quickly [HONG KONG STANDARD 17 Jul] W 1
Pre-1949 British Rail-Bond Debt Will Remain [HONG KONG STANDARD 17 Jul] W 1
Guangxi To Limit Foreign Investment in Services [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 17 Jul] W 2

GENERAL

SOVIET UNION SEEKS CLOSER ECONOMIC TIES WITH OPEC

OW171937 Beijing XINHUA in English 1749 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Kuwait, July 17 (XINHUA) -- A senior Soviet official said here today that the Soviet Union is ready to open its markets for industrial products of the OPEC countries to ease the burden of plummeting oil prices on their economies.

In an interview with Kuwait News Agency (KUNA), Konstantin Katushev, member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party and member of the Supreme Soviet, said his country would accept products of the OPEC members if these states cannot pay foreign currency cash in the trade exchange with the Soviet Union.

Katushev, who is also chairman of Soviet State Commission for Foreign Economic Relations, accused unnamed countries outside OPEC of creating "an artificial oil crisis" which adversely affected the world economy and swelled problems of debtor nations.

He said that OPEC and non-OPEC countries are now negotiating a price structure ranging between 19 and 24 dollars per barrel.

Speaking of his meeting with the Kuwait defense minister, the Soviet official said that "we have received a better understanding of Kuwait's military needs."

The Soviet official said he agreed with Kuwaiti officials on the broad lines for future economic cooperation and on establishing joint ventures in Kuwait and the Soviet Union, but he did not elaborate.

However, he said Kuwait and the Soviet Union will carry out joint investment schemes at other countries including the Arab states.

The Soviet economic delegation arrived here on Monday for an official visit aimed at boosting joint ventures in the fields of economy, oil and investment.

Earlier, Kuwait's Finance Minister Jast al-Khurafi has announced that Kuwait will direct its investments to the Soviet Union, China and some developing nations in addition to the Western markets.

OVERSEAS JOINT VENTURE ENTERPRISES EXPANDING

HK151314 Beijing JINGJI CANKAO in Chinese 1 Jul 86 p 3

[Roundup by JINGJI CANKAO reporter: "Make Efforts To Expand Economic Cooperation With Foreign Countries -- China's Overseas Joint Venture Enterprises Are Developing"]

[Text] Since 1980, China has made great efforts to expand economic cooperation with foreign countries, actively made investments in foreign countries, and built joint venture enterprises in foreign countries. China has now already run 144 joint venture enterprises or wholly owned enterprises in 34 countries and in the Hong Kong and Macao regions, involving a total investment of U.S. $239 million. [paragraph continues]

These enterprises are mainly involved in the development of resources, product processing, navigation services, finance and insurance, consultancy services, and the running of construction companies and Chinese restaurants and so on. These businesses are mainly spread over the United States, Japan, Canada, Western Europe, northern Europe, Latin America, the Middle East, Africa, South Asian countries, the Hong Kong and Macao regions, and so on. Besides these, more than 300 joint venture projects are now under discussion; these will be spread mainly over Asia, Africa, Latin America, and some other regions.

Selected Overseas Investments

According to China's actual situation, China's investment in establishing joint venture enterprises in foreign countries should mainly concentrate on the following aspects: 1. To jointly develop such natural resources as forestry, fishery, mining industry, and so on so that China will not only be able to help develop the economy in the foreign countries but also obtain timber, paper pulp, aquatic products, mineral products, and so on which are badly needed by China. Although sometimes, the resources to be developed are not needed by China, China should still carry out cooperation with the countries concerned to develop their resources so long as the resources are needed by the countries concerned and are capable of finding a good sale on the world market. 2. To develop enterprises specialized in the production, assembly, and repair of all types of mechanical products. The equipment, technology, and component parts of the products should be provided by China and the products should be processed and assembled abroad and then sold on the world market. 3. To establish jointly managed contracting companies through joint investment and management so as to contract projects and expand cooperation in labor services. At present, China has 54 companies specialized in contracting international projects. These companies have a strong actual strength and rich experiences in constructing projects at home and abroad. They are capable of organizing the design, construction, and contracting of all types of industrial and civil construction projects; special projects; municipal works; the survey, development, and well-digging of the mines, highways, bridges, railroads, harbors, hydroelectric power stations, thermal power stations, and some other projects. 4. To use local resources and conditions to establish comprehensive enterprises capable of carrying out both industrial and agricultural production that is greatly needed by the relevant countries and whose products should first of all satisfy the domestic needs of the relevant countries. 5. To jointly run Chinese restaurants. Chinese cuisine has a long history and is well known in the world. In recent years, many countries have proposed to jointly run Chinese restaurants with our country. 6. To establish and run jointly managed enterprises that are capable of combining industry with trade and combining technology with trade. The Sino-foreign joint management of these enterprises will help China import advanced foreign technology, equipment, and component parts so as to serve China's domestic production, scientific research, and the technological transformation of China's existing enterprises.

When investing in running joint venture projects abroad, China should concentrate its efforts on medium-and small-sized enterprises and try its best to establish and run enterprises that require less investment but can produce quick economic results.

The Encouraging Results Produced by the Joint Venture Enterprises

Over the past few years, China has started and run 13 projects specialized in developing such resources as forestry, fishery, and minerals in foreign countries. The plywood factory built in Brazil by the Ministry of Forestry of China now produces 10,000 cubic meters of plywood annually and its production situation has been gratifying since October 1984 when it formally began operation. The Ministry of Forestry of China has also successfully carried out cooperation with the United States, Brazil, and some other countries in developing forest reserves. In the first half of 1985 only, over 500,000 cubic meters of log were transported to China from these countries.

In order to protect China's offshore resources and develop the deep-sea fishing industry, China has signed fishing cooperation contracts with Senegal, Guinea-Bissau, the United States, Sri Lanka, and three other countries. The deep-sea fishing fleet organized by China for the first time has begun operating in the sea areas of these countries. In October 1985, for the first time, Beijing residents tasted fresh fish shipped from West African sea areas. It is predicted that in 1 or 2 years, there will be a significnt increase in the catch of deep-sea aquatic products.

China is now actively cooperating with Australia, Canada, and some other countries in opening up iron, bronze, diamond, and gold mines, some of which will go into production in 1986.

Besides, China has also jointly invested in and established 19 international construction companies with businessmen from Nigeria, Cameroon, Rwanda, Thailand, the Yemen Arab Republic, and the Hong Kong and Macao regions. These construction companies have been cooperating with other foreign construction companies in contracting overseas projects. Over the past few years, these companies have altogether contracted construction projects involving several hundred million U.S. dollars and have achieved marked successes. In addition, a number of Chinese restaurants either wholly invested by China or jointly invested by China and foreign businessmen is now spread over more than 10 foreign countries. Over 100 cooks who come from Sichuan, Guangdong, Beijing, Shanghai, Liaoning, and other provinces and cities to work in these overseas Chinese restaurants have earned nearly U.S. $3 million of foreign exchange for China with their special Chinese gastronomic skills.

N.Y. TIMES REPORTER DETAINED IN BEIJING

HK180104 Hong Kong AFP in English 0037 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, Jul 18 (AFP) -- A U.S. newspaper reporter was detained here early Friday morning after he attempted to leave for Hong Kong following a visit to an area of China off limits to foreigners, a friend of the reporter's said.

John Burns, Beijing correspondent for THE NEW YORK TIMES, was being held in detention centre here where he was expected to remain for "a week or ten days, but was hoping it will be less," said a friend of Mr. Burns who answered the phone at his home.

Mr. Burns had attempted to board a plane to Hong Kong on Thursday but was prevented by Chinese officials and subsequently detained, said the friend, who declined to identify herself.

The detention was in connection with a trip to a northwestern China that Mr. Burns made recently with a U.S. friend on a Chinese motorcycle with a sidecar, the friend said. The pair had intended to travel from Beijing, through Mongolia in the northwest, to Sichuan in the southwest but were stopped by Chinese officials when they attempted to pass through a closed area, sources close to Mr. Burns said.

Mr. Burns has returned to Beijing about 10 days ago and was not known to be in trouble with the Chinese authorities over the incident.

A spokesman for the U.S. Embassy said that they had yet to receive any information about Mr. Burn's situation but noted that as he was a British citizen the matter might be handled by the British embassy. British officials could not immediately be reached for comment.

Official Declines Comment

HK180844 Hong Kong AFP in English 0836 GMT 18 Jul 86

[By Lawrence Macdonald]

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (AFP) -- The United States on Friday expressed strong concern over the detention of NEW YORK TIMES correspondent John Burns, who was reportedly being investigated on possible spy charges here.

A spokesman for the Beijing Public Security Bureau refused to discuss details of the case against Mr. Burns, who was stopped at Beijing airport early Thursday and taken to a detention center after 15 hours interrogation. "The case is currently under investigation, so there is nothing to tell," the spokesman said in China's first public comment on the detention. He said there was not likely to be any new information for at least a day.

(THE NEW YORK TIMES reported that Chinese officials in Beijing had told a U.S. diplomat that Mr. Burns, 41, was being investigated on suspicion of "entering an area forbidden to foreigners, gathering intelligence information and espionage.)

A U.S. Embassy spokesman said "we have expressed our very strong concern to the Chinese authorities," and were seeking further information. U.S. officials declined to comment on THE NEW YORK TIMES report.

The spokesman for the Beijing Public Security Bureau declined to say what Mr. Burns was being investigated for or how long he might be held. He advised reporters to call back "in a day or two."

The incident was the most serious between Chinese authorities and a foreign correspondent since (?1980) when Tiziano Terzani, an Italian journalist working for the German magazine DER SPIEGEL, was expelled for allegedly illegally exporting Chinese cultural relics.

The last American known to have been expelled from China for espionage was Lisa Wichser, an American teacher who was held incommunicado by Chinese police for three days of a week-long detention in late May and early June 1982. Miss Wichser, who was at the time engaged to a Chinese student, was released and expelled after signing a confession, but denied after her return to the United States that she ever had been a spy.

Mr. Burns, a British citizen, was detained as he attempted to leave with his wife and two children for a vacation in Hong Kong and Canada, family friends said. His wife, Jane Scott-Long, remained with him throughout a 15-hour interrogation at the airport, one friend said.

(THE NEW YORK TIMES said Mr. Burns and his wife were then brought back to their apartment in Beijing, where 10 security men with videotape cameras conducted a systematic search.)

It was then that Mr. Burns managed to send a cable to his office in New York and to talk briefly with an editor on the telephone.

Mr. Burns was held in the Pao Zhu detention centre in northern Beijing where he was expected to remain for "a week or 10 days, but we hope less," said the friend, who declined to give her name. The journalist's wife was not available for comment.

Embassy officials said the United States was concerned about the incident because Mr. Burns represented a U.S. newspaper. They said they were in contact with the British Embassy, which has also expressed its concern to Chinese authorities.

A friend at Mr. Burns' residence said the detention was in connection with a trip through the countryside he made recently with a visiting U.S. professor on a Chinese motorcycle with a sidecar. The pair had intended to travel from Beijing, through Mongolia in the northwest, to Sichuan in the southwest. But they were stopped by local officials as they passed through a closed area in northwestern Shaanxi Province, sources close to Mr. Burns said.

The pair, who were travelling with a Chinese companion, were instructed to write self-criticisms which they were told would not be used against them, the sources said.

Mr. Burns had frequently complained to friends that foreign backpackers travelling on their own through China had seen much more of the country than Beijing-based correspondents.

IMPACT OF TRADE PROTECTION BILL ON SINO-U.S. TRADE

HK180457 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese 10 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by Zhang Yuqing [1728 3768 0615]: "Impact of the New U.S. Trade Protection Bill on Sino-U.S. Trade"]

[Text] On 22 May, the U.S. House of Representatives approved a new trade protection bill, requiring the U.S. Government to negotiate with its major trading partners who have trade surpluses in their trade with the United States and to retaliate against the countries who have violated U.S. trade regulations and implement an import quota system against them.

This bill, which is entitled the "reform of trade and international economic policies bill, 1986," extensively revises and supplements a series of existing U.S. administrative trade laws and regulations and is filled with trade protectionism. In the main, this bill is not directed against China, but once it formally becomes law, it will certainly seriously affect Sino-U.S. trade.

First, there will be even more stringent restrictions on the export of Chinese products to the United States, including the excessive requirements of the U.S. "antidumping act," "antisubsidization act," "Article 201 on Immunity," and "Article 406 on countries of nonmarket economy." For the new bill relaxes the conditions for prosecution in all these acts and articles, enlarges the scope of prosecution, and adds punishment clauses to them. This can roughly be analyzed as follows:

The scope of interested people has been enlarged. For example, producers of primary agricultural products can be interested parties affected by the industry that processes agricultural products and are empowered to invoke the "antidumping act" to sue against dumping of imported processed agricultural products.

Cumulative calculation means that the effect of the dumping of products (no matter how large the volume of the import of the products) by two or more countries can be taken into consideration in totality. At the same time the effect of the government or nongovernment subsidies on the sales of products of the same kind should be taken into consideration together with the above cumulative effect of dumping. Certainly, this will make it more possible for people to regard the import of products as being "harmful" to U.S. industry. It introduces the concept of "export goals" in applying the legislation. In other words, on the question of whether any harm has been brought to U.S. industry, it is necessary to consider whether the import of the commodities is directed against a certain sector of U.S. industry. It also introduces the concept of "indirect dumping."

The question of whether that kind of products are being dumped in other GATT members. If the answer is in the affirmative, it means that the products constitute a threat to U.S. industry and an antidumping tax should be imposed on them.

An article on "inspecting later products" has been introduced. In other words, if an antidumping tax above 15 percent was imposed on a certain raw material or component in the past 5 years, the U.S. Department of Commerce can inspect the exports to the United States of finished products made from this raw material or component. If it finds that the volume of import of these finished goods increases by more than 5 percent each quarter, the U.S. Government will consider imposing a higher tariff on them.

U.S. companies are allowed to sue on their own for damages from the dumping of foreign commodities. As a result, in addition to paying higher tariffs on the so-called dumped commodities, foreign exporters have to pay huge amounts of damages.

In addition, last year, the U.S. International Trade Court decided that the antisubsidization act applied to countries of nonmarket economy. If the U.S. Federal Appeals Court makes the same decision, then the "antisubsidization act" will constitute a serious threat to China's exports to the United States, particularly because the new trade protection bill revises and adds many more stringent clauses to the "antisubsidization act."

Finally, according to the bill, procedures will be simplified for the United States to enlarge the scope of commodities that it exports to China.

In Sino-U.S. trade, there has always been a trade deficit unfavorable to China, of which the accumulated total amounts to over $16 billion. The new U.S. Trade Protection Bill will only further aggravate this and thus seriously hinder the normal development of trade between China and the United States.

U.S., USSR TO DISCUSS LIMITING NUCLEAR TESTS

OW170638 Beijing XINHUA in English 0611 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 16 (XINHUA) -- The White House announced today the United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to hold an expert-level meeting to discuss issues on limiting nuclear tests but not on nuclear test ban.

Meanwhile at the State Department today, spokesman Bernard Kalb ruled out the possibility that the United States will join the unilateral Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing.

The White House announcement came following a statement made by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze in London today that Washington and Moscow have agreed to resume talks on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

White House spokesman Edward Djerejian said that the United States has long sought a meeting with the Soviets "to present our concerns about the verification provisions" of the two existing test limitation treaties signed in the 1970's -- the threshold test ban treaty and the peaceful explosions treaty. He added that the two sides have agreed to begin the talks "without preconditions."

However, he said, "We are willing to listen to views, including Soviet views, on comprehensive test ban or any other issues related to nuclear testing. However, he stressed, a comprehensive test ban is "a long-term objective" that can be achieved only when the United States "does not need to depend on nuclear deterrence to ensure international security and stability."

At the State Department, the spokesman said that the extension of the Soviet moratorium on testing is an issue for the Soviet Union to decide. As far as the United States is concerned, "a nuclear testing moratorium is not in our security interests nor in that of our friends and allies," he declared.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TIAN JIYUN'S TRIP TO DPRK

HK171207 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 16 Jul 86 p 7

["Newsletter From Korea" by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Xu Baokang and XINHUA reporter Gao Haorong: "China and Korea Are Dear to Each Other as Brothers, and Their Friendship Is Cemented With Blood"]

[Text] A silver eagle carrying the Chinese party and government delegation left Pyongyang's airport and thrust into the skies. At the airport, tens of thousands of the masses of Pyongyang city were still waving national flags of both China and Korea and bouquets in their hands to bid farewell to the Chinese party and government delegation.

The Chinese party and government delegation headed by Tian Jiyun, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, member of the CPC Committee Secretariat, and vice permier of the State Council, came to Pyongyang and spent 5 significant days in the city to take part in the activities marking the 25th anniversary of the signing of the China-Korean Treaty of Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance. Once the Chinese comrades set foot on the beautiful land of Korea, they were warmly welcomed and cordially treated by the Korean comrades. They were immersed in an atmospere of friendship. Some 6,000 people in Pyongyang held a rally to make the occasion, and some 50,000 people in Nampo participated in a rally to welcome the Chinese delegation. The Korean artists performed songs and dances permeated with friendly feelings, and youngsters in Pyongyang performed a large group callisthenics exercise to sing the praises of Sino-Korean friendship and the achievements of China in the four modernizations program. The Chinese comrades were deeply touched by this moving scene. The Korean comrades maintained that the visit of the Chinese party and government delegation was an encouragement to the Korean people, and that the visit demonstrated the friendship between the two countries to the people of the world. When talking about this, Comrade Tian Jiyun said with deep feeling: All this has made the Chinese comrades deeply feel once again that the Korean party and government value the friendship between the two countries above everything else, and that the Korean people have cherished a deep love for the Chinese people. All this has made the Chinese comrades further believe that the great friendship between the Chinese and Korean people, which is cemented with blood, has been deeply rooted in the hearts of the two peoples and that no force on earth can destroy it.

On this happy occasion, the Chinese and Korean comrades reviewed together the course of struggle in the 25 years since the signing of the treaty. They were unanimously satisfied with the development of friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries in the fields of politics, economy, culture, and so on. All these are truly a fact. Over the past 25 years, in accordance with the spirit of the treaty, the Chinese and Korean peoples have mutually cooperated, aided and learned from each other. This has become a good practice. During the short stay of the Chinese party and government delegation in Korea, the Chinese comrades learned much precious experience from Korea. On 11 July, during the Chinese delegation's visit to the Pyongyang People's Great Study Hall, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun had a careful look of the facilities of the hall and kept raising questions about the management of the hall. He told Im In-ok, deputy director of the People's Great Study Hall, about his impression of the hall: The people's Great Study Hall is not only a library but a complex educational facility which is of great importance to the enhancement of the cultural and intellectual standard of the whole society and which can foster a large number of qualified personnel. We should learn from you. [paragraph continues]

At Nampo Water Gate, the Chinese comrades toured with great interest the 8-kilometer long dike and the huge ship lock that lie across the wide river and watched a ship of 10,000 tonnage passing through the ship lock after the 1,000-ton revolving bridge was opened. They highly appreciated the Korean people's wisdom and ability. After writing some remarks in the visitors' book, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun said: This is a great project of vital and lasting importance which will bring tremendous benefits to the Korean people. Kang Kon Military Officers' Complex Training School is a well-known military school in Korea. After watching a military drill performed by the students of this school, Vice Premier Tian Jiyun praised the school for its "strict requirements, scientific training, and efficient operation," saying that the Chinese Army will learn from its Korean counterpart.

What has moved the Chinese delegation is that the Korean people have never forgotten the Chinese people's support and cooperation. When briefing the Chinese guests on the progress made by the People's Great Study Hall in exchange of books with foreign counterparts, Im In-ok, deputy director of the hall, expressed his special thanks to General Secretary Hu Yaobang, who presented 15 books to the Great Study Hall when he visited Korea in 1982. On 12 July President Kim Il-song met with the Chinese party and government delegation and the CPC goodwill visiting group headed by Wang Fang, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC committee. He asked Xu Huizi, deputy chief of the General Staff, who was present at the meeting: "How many times have you been to Korea?" Xu Huizi told the president that this was his second visit to the country; he joined the army and went to Korea to fight against the U.S. invading forces when he was 20 years old; then he returned home in 1953. On hearing this, President Kim said: "Thank you." At an evening banquet, President Kim told Wang Fang that the bamboo saplings he had brought home from Hangzhou during his visit to the city in 1958 were transplanted in Kaesong and its vicinity, and all were growing well. He said: Whenever I see that luxuriant bamboo, I immediately think of Hangzhou."

The Chinese and Korean peoples have always closely united with each other, sympathized with each other, supported each other, and made common efforts to safeguard peace in Asia and the world. This relationship between the two peoples was fully displayed during the Chinese party and government delegation's current visit to Korea. At report meetings, mass rally, and commemorative banquets, speeches delivered by Vice Premier Tian Jiyun on behalf of the CPC, the Chinese Government, and the Chinese people repeatedly aroused warm applause among the Korean comrades present at the gatherings, whenever the vice premier praised the Korean people for their marvelous achievements made in their socialist revolution and construction and whenever he reiterated the Chinese people's firm support for all the fair and reasonable proposals put forth by Korea with a view to relaxing the tense situation on the Korean peninsula, to striving for peaceful reunification of the motherland, and to safeguarding peace in Asia and the world. We have had a deep impression of their feelings. The applause fully showed the Korean people's keen desire for a peaceful environment in which they can build their country and live, as well as their firm faith in the realization of the reunification of their motherland based on the principle of peace and great national unity with the initiative kept in their own hands. As the Korean people had made great national sacrifice in fighting against external aggression and defending their peaceful home, they profoundly understood the value of hard-won peace in light of their personal experience and their practice in the booming socialist construction. And that is the very reason why they especially cherish peace. [paragraph continues.]

The Korean leaders have not only vigorously supported the Chinese people in their great struggle for the reunification of their motherland but also highly appreciated the promising development and prosperity currently emerging on the vast territory of China, acclaiming all the changes which have proved that the CPC's line is correct and in keeping with the actual circumstances of the Chinese revolution as well as the Chinese people's interests and wish.

President Kim Il-song also appreciates and supports the efforts that China is currently undertaking. He cheerfully told Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, who was visiting Korea for the first time: Your country is undergoing a stage in which the new generation is replacing the old generation, and the young generation is now taking up leading posts. After Tian Jiyun briefed President Kim on China's reform and the progress of production in the country this year, President Kim repeatedly remarked: We have always supported what you did. The CPC has rich experience and has also taken some risks. It always handles things with a sure hand. So long as you have done a good job, we will have a strong rear base. We are really glad to see this.

"China and Korea are dear to each other as brothers; their friendship is cemented with blood." The Chinese party and government's delegation's visit to Korea has further consolidated and enhanced the friendship, cooperation, and unity between the Chinese and Korean peoples. We Chinese and Korean comrades wish that this friendship and cooperation will continue to develop in depth under the care of the leaders of the two countries and with the common efforts of the two peoples, and that the Sino-Korean friendship will blossom more splendidly.

DPRK CONDEMNS U.S. TRIPARTITE TALKS REFUSAL

OW180639 Beijing XINHUA in English 0546 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] United Nations, July 17 (XINHUA) -- A diplomat of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today criticized the United States and South Korea for refusing a DPRK proposal for Tripartite detente talks among the military authorities.

Pak Il-yon, the permanent observer of DPRK to the U.N., told a press conference this afternoon that the U.S. forces and the South Korean side had refused under "unreasonable pretext" to receive a series of letters containing new proposals for peace talks sent by the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army (KPA) to the Military Armistice Commission at the truce village Panmunjom.

He warned that "the situation in our country is becoming more acute and the deadlocked multi-channel North-South dialogues are in danger of breakup" owing to the rejection of the peace proposal by the U.S. and South Korean authorities and their continued policy of confrontation. "The United States and the South Korean side revealed themselves that their cry for detente, peace and dialogue is false and sham and they, in actuality, pursue confrontation and war only," Pak said.

He said the DPRK side "had no other choice but to send over radio the letters" addressed to the commander of the U.S. Eighth Army and concurrently commander-in-chief of the U.N. Forces in South Korea, and to the South Korean defense minister. "By opposing our proposal for talks of military authorities to take practical measures for detente and peace, they made it plain that the 'threat of southward invasion' over which they cry every day does not exist in fact and it is a fiction to justify the U.S. troops' occupation of South Korea and redress the internal crisis of South Korea," Pak said.

Meanwhile, DPRK's KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported Wedresday that DPRK rejected a South Korean proposal to resume their suspended Red Cross talks, which aimed to reunite millions of Korean families separted when the Korean peninsula was divided at the end of World War II in 1945 and by the 1950-53 Korean war.

The talks were broken off in January as a result of a joint U.S.-South Korean military exercise in February. DPRK charged that the maneuvers, "Team Spirit '86", which ended in April, were provocative and offensive.

DPRK's Red Cross delegation rejected the proposal Tuesday saying, "military authorities concerned for the heightening of tensions should meet, before any other talks, and immediately take measures to ease the tensions."

NODONG SINMUN CONDEMNS ROK MILITARY EXERCISES

OW161125 Beijing XINHUA in English 0947 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 16 (XINHUA) -- The Pyongyang press today strongly condemned the South Korean military exercise which started July 14. The six-day annual exercises -- code named "Ulchi 86" -- continue to create difficulties for the peaceful reunification of Korea and aggravate the tension on the Korean peninsula, the press reports charged.

In a commentary today, the Korean paper "NODONG SINMUN" said that because of the tension, the North-South Korean dialogue has not been reopened. The commentary added that now is the time for discussing the relaxation of tension, rather than talking about humanism and economic cooperation.

The exercises, which follow a series of earlier military exercises including the large-scale "Team Spirit 86" jonint U.S.-South Korean exercises held in February, are aimed at testing war preparations and dealing with emergencies.

LI PENG CALLS FOR MORE BALANCED TRADE WITH JAPAN

OW171753 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng said here today Japan should buy more Chinese coal to help end the trade imbalance between the two countries. Li made the remark at a meeting preceding Friday's opening of a Japanese food technology exhibition in the Beijing Exhibition Hall. "I hope the exhibition will be a successful one," Li told a delegation of Japanese industrialists this afternoon.

He asked the Japanese to increase imports from China to solve problems of imbalanced bilateral trade. "With the development of China's economy, China can expect more coal to Japan while increasing its traditional exports," he said, adding that China is "willing to conclude a long-time cotton export agreement with Japan." The vice-premier also asked the Japanese to offer low-interest loans to support China's imports of Japanese equipment.

The 15-day exhibition, to be held in the Beijing Exhibition Center, will display food processing, circulation and storage equipment. Over 100 Japanese firms will take part. Also on display will be samples of China's leading processed foods.

PRC OFFICIAL CONDOLES ON LAO OFFICIAL'S DEATH

OW171206 Beijing XINHUA in English 0642 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Liu Shuqing this morning went to the Lao Embassy here to offer condolences on the death of Faidang Lobaliayao, vice-president of the Supreme People's Assembly of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and vice-chairman of the Central Committee of Lao Front for National Construction.

Lobaliayao died on July 12th in Vientiane at the age of 76.

Wreaths presented by the Chinese National People's Congress Standing Committee, the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference and the Foreign Ministry were placed in the memorial hall where a portrait of the late vice-president was hung.

DEMOCRATIC KAMPUCHEA LETTER URGES NEW SRV POLICY

OW161104 Beijing XINHUA in English 0702 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- The Kampuchean people have expressed the hope that Vietnam will change its aggressive policy and seek a settlement to the Kampuchean problem in accordance with the eight point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK).

The Kampuchean desires were expressed in an open letter sent to the Vietnamese people and their new leadership by the Kampuchean people on July 14, Radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today.

The letter said that the eight-year old war launched by Vietnam against Kampuchea has killed numerous Kampuchean civilians and put Vietnam itself in a difficult position militarily and economically. Now the Vietnamese authorities are very isolated from the rest of the world, it added.

The letter went on to say that the eight-point proposal is the best way to sovle the Kampuchean problem because it can ensure peace for both Vietnam and Kampuchea, to the interests of the peoples of both countries. Therefore, the Kampuchean people hope that the Vietnamese new leadership genuinely changes its aggressive policy in Kampuchea.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES EUROPEAN, AFRICA TRIP

Meets Overseas Chinese in Madrid

OW180015 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0626 GMT 16 Jul 86

[By reporter Yu Guangsheng]

[Text] Madrid, 15 Jul (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang cordially met this evening at the Chinese Embassy in Madrid with representatives of Overseas Chinese in Spain and local Chinese, Chinese students in Spain, and the staff of the embassy, and had a photo taken with them.

At 1930, when Premier Zhao and his entourage entered the embassy reception room in company with Cao Yuanzin, Chinese ambassador to Spain, they were greeted with warm applause by over 80 representatives of Overseas and local Chinese. Through them, Premier Zhao extended his warm regards to over 6,000 Overseas and local Chinese living in various localities in Spain. Premier Zhao expressed three hopes for them. He said: "First, I hope you foster a good relationship with the local people and get along well with them; second, I wish all of you success in your undertakings; third, I hope you make greater contributions to forging friendly relations between the Chinese and Spanish people."

The Spanish Overseas and Local Chinese Association presented a wall clock to Premier Zhao at the meeting. On the clock is written: "We are concerned about the motherland's four modernizations," to express the Overseas Chinese warm love for the motherland.

After Premier Zhao Ziyang's meeting with representatives of the Overseas and local Chinese, he met Chinese students in Spain and the staff of the Chinese Embassy in Madrid.

Arrives in Turkey

OW171416 Beijing XINHUA in English 1354 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here at 13:50 GMT today from Madrid for a seven-day official goodwill visit to Turkey. Turkey is the fifth leg of his current six-nation tour. He visited Yugoslavia, Romania, Greece and Spain before he came here and will proceed to Tunisia on July 23.

At a press conference in Madrid yesterday, Zhao said he achieved what he expected from his trip to Spain and added he is confident that relations between China and Spain will advance to a new level. Before his departure for ankara this morning, Zhao met Vice General Secretary Enrique Curiel of the Spanish Communist Party (SCP) and member of the SCP Secretariat Simon Snachez Montero in his living hotel.

Welcomed by Turkish Counterpart

OW171545 Beijing XINHUA in English 1500 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal gave a red-carpet welcome to Zhao Ziyang, the first Chinese premier to visit Turkey, at the Esenboga airport this afternoon.

Zhao's six-day visit to the Eurasian nation is the fifth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour. The purpose of Zhao's trip is to broaden understanding, enhance friendship, promote mutual cooperation and maintain world peace. Zhao noted in a written statement that the friendship between China and Turkey dates to ancient times.

"The bustling traffic along the silk road illustrated the frequent trade exchanges between our two countries in ancient times," he said, "I am pleased that exchanges of visits and contacts between the leaders and personages of all circles of the two countries have been increasing in recent years, instilling continuously fresh vitality to the cause of Sino-Turkish friendship."

Ozal, in an interview with XINHUA Wednesday, said Turkish and Chinese people have opened a historic friendship road -- the silk road in ancient time, which started from China and ended in Turkey. Since establishing diplomatic relations in 1971, Ozal said, relations between the two countries have grown in all areas. "I sincerely wish the friendly relations between Turkey and China still greater development," especially in the economic sphere, he added.

After Ozal greeted Zhao, a Turkish girl presented Zhao a bouquet of flowers. Then, after the national anthems of both nations were played, Zhao and Ozal reviewed an honor guard.

Also at the airport to meet the Chinese premier were Turkish Deputy Prime Minister Kaya Erdem, Minister of State Mesut Yilmaz, Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu, Minister of Industry and Commerce Cahit Aral, Turkish Ambassador to China Behic Hazar and other high-ranking officials.

Chinese Ambassador to Turkey Zhan Shiliang, diplomats and staff members of the Chinese Embassy in Ankara, representatives of the Chinese students in Turkey also attended the ceremony. A dinner in Zhao's honor was scheduled this evening.

Talks With Turkish Prime Minister

OW172344 Beijing XINHUA in English 2335 GMT 17 Jul 86

["Chinese, Turkish Premiers Start Official Talks" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Ankara, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, shortly after his arrival here this afternoon on an official goodwill visit, met his Turkish counterpart Turgut Ozal for talks on bilateral relations and world issues.

The talks, which were a restricted session, lasted for over an hour and proceeded in a cordial and friendly atmosphere, a Chinese Foreign Ministry official said after the meeting.

Their exchange of views covered a number of international issues, regional problems and the ways for promoting the friendly and cooperative relations between their countries, the official added.

Present at the talks were their chief aides including Turkish Foreign Minister Vahit Halefoglu and Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen.

Zhao, Ozal Address Banquet

OW172340 Beijing XINHUA in English 2330 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Prenier Zhao Ziyang and Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal agreed that there are broad areas and great potentials for cooperation between their two countries, which had been linked by tha ancient "silk road" over 1,000 years ago.

Speaking at a banquet given here this evening by Turkish Prime Minster Ozal in honor of Premier Zhao, the Chinese and Turkish leaders outlined prospects for such cooperation, especially in the economic and technical fields.

Both China and Turkey are developing countries, said Premier Zhao, and it is their common task to shake off and end the state of underdevelopment. "We can and need to learn each other's strong points to offset each other's weaknesses and supply ech other's needs," said Zhao.

Premier Zhao flew in here from Madrid this afternoon on an official visit at the invitation of the Turkish Prime Minister. This is the fifth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour.

In his toast at the banquet, Turkish Prime Minister Ozal reviewed with satisfaction the new development and expansion of the traditional ties between Turkey and China.

If the economic relations between the two countries should reach the level compatible to the potentials of the two countries, the prime minister said, it will not only be beneficial to the people of both countries but also set an example in south-south cooperation.

The two premiers met for official talks prior to the banquet.

Further on Banquet Remarks

OW172356 Beijing XINHUA in English 2340 GMT 17 Jul 86

["World Future Hinges on People's Will and Struggle, Says Chinese Premier" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Ankara, July 17 (XINHUA) -- The future of the world depends on the will, determination and struggle of the people of all countries, said Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here this evening.

Speaking at a banquet given in his honor by Turkish Prime Minsiter Turgut Ozal, Zhao said each nation, big or small, strong or weak, rich or poor, can contribute its share to maintaining world peace.

The Chinese premier arrived here this afternoon after a four-day visit to Spain. This is the fifth leg of his Balkan-Mediterranean tour. He has completed visits to Romania, Yugoslavai, greece and Spain and will visit Tunisia later.

The main purpose of the visit is to boost China's relations with these countries and seek peace in the world, the Balkan and Mediterranean regions in particular.

He drew attention to the recent escalation of military conflicts and war in the Mediterranean and the Middle East, sayng that has not only aggravated the turbulent situation in the areas but also directly jeopardized international security.

He condemned the two superpowers for their contention and arms race, which, he said, have posed a serious threat to world peace and made the long-drawn-out regional conflicts last, unsettled.

The Chinese premier praised the Turkish Government and people for their efforts to develop the economy internally and to develop relations of friendship and cooperation with other countries and seek stability and peace in its own region, ease the tense international situation and safeguard world peace.

Turkey, with a geographical location that links the East with the West, has a unique role to play in international affairs, the premier said.

Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal said that Turkey would "conscientiously and firmly perform its obligations in the effort for peace and security in both its own region and the world as a whole."

He said that the policy of peace pursued by the Turkish Government dictated that this country intends to settle issues with other countries, especially with neighboring countries, through dialogue and by peaceful means.

Though Turkey is a European country politically, its geographical location determines that it puts much importance to developing relations with the Middle East and Asian countries and safeguarding peace and stability in the regions.

He called for a just and lasting settlment of the issues in the Middle East, between Iraq and Iran in Afghanistan, Kampuchea and southern Africa.

The prime minster reiterated his support for the sincere efforts for disarmament that will stand the test of the times, so as to prepare a good environment for world peace and put the existing resources to the most extensive use for the development of various countries.

He criticized the protectionist tendencies of industrialized countries, which, he said, have gone so far as to obstruct the efforts by developing countries to invigorate their economies.

XINHUA ANALYZES ITALY'S 'POLITICAL CRISIS'

OW141952 Beijing XINHUA in English 1737 GMT 14 Jul 86

["News analysis: Italy's Political Crisis Deepens (by Yu Zailin)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Italy has recently plunged from its greatest political stability for 40 years into a crisis so severe that it might lead to a premature general election.

Italy's two-week-old political crisis worsened on Friday as outgoing Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's Socialist Party formally rejected the choice of caretaker Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, a veteran Christian Democrat, as head of Italy's 45th postwar government.

"The crisis has been pushed into a blind alley, we will do what we can to get out of it, but it will not be easy," said Craxi, who resigned on June 27 after losing a secret vote in Parliament on a local financing bill but has remained on as caretaker premier.

President Francesco Cossiga gave the 67-year-old Andreotti, who has been Italian premier five times, a mandate to end the government crisis and form a new government following two weeks ofd unsuccessful attempts to revive Craxi's fallen coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Republicans, Liberals and Social Democrats.

Premier-designate Andreotti, who starts intensive talks today with all political party leaders on resolving the government crisis, faces enormous difficulties and his chances of constructing a viable administration seem slim.

The Socialists, the third largest party in Italy and one whose participation is essential if Andreotti is to form a government with a majority in Parliament, are openly hostile to his efforts.

Clandio Martelli, Craxi's right-hand man, said the Socialist rejection was not aimed at Andreotti personally but at "the brutal and unilateral" manner in which the Christian Democrats are seeking to assert "their domination of the political life of the country and the leadership of the government."

The Socialists have accused the Christian Democrats, Italy's largest party, of deliberately maneuvering to ousted Craxi from the premiership, despite the success of his government in bringing stabilty to Italy.

They also claimed that, by custom, President Cossiga -- a Christian Democrat -- should have given Craxi the first opportunity to form a government. Finally, they argued that Andreotti's candidacy was not the result of consultations between the five coalition parties, but a unilateral Christian Democrat decision.

Observers said the root cause of the crisis, which brought down Craxi's 34-month-old government, was non-stop squabbling between the Christian Democrats and Socialists.

Since Craxi's governoment fell, the power struggle between the two parties has centered on the premier's post. The Socialists want another Craxi-led government for an unlimited term. But the Christian Democrats said Craxi, who has served for a postwar record of nearly three years, should either hand over the premiership by the end of this year or keep it until general elections in 1988 on the condition that a Christian Democrat would be prime minister for the next five years.

In recent days the government crisis has worsened and the danger of early elections increased as the Socialists and Christian democrats apparently moved further away from a compromise.

In these circumstances, Andreotti might eventually beforced to form a minority government or admit defeat. In either case a general election would likely follow, possibly as early as the autumn and nearly two years ahead of schedule.

Political analysts said if Andreotti cannot reach agreement with the Socialists, one possibility is a Christian Democrat minority government through the rest of the summer, what the Italians call a "seaside" cabinet.

Should Andreotti fail to form a new government, early elections are also possible, analysts said. The next polls are not due until 1988, the end of the current parliamentary term.

Leaders of the three other coalition partners -- the Republicans, Liberals and Social Democrats -- said that early elections may be necessary unless the two major parties come to terms. No party has a majority in Parliament, and both the Socialists and Christian Democrats have refused to govern together with the Communists, Italy's second largest party.

The Socialists clearly hope Conssiga will offer Craxi the next chance to patch together the coalition if Andreotti's attempt fails because of the Socialist refusal to support him. But in view of the Socialist rejection, political analysts doubted the Christian Democrats would back a Craxi bid.

Not long ago, Italy still appeared to be enjoying the benefits of its most stable political period since the foundation of the Republic in 1946, with Socialist Premier Craxi at the helm of a five-party coalition government, the 44th and longest-lived of Italy's postwar administrations.

Craxi had won international prestige for his stewardship over a period of unaccustomed stability which helped Italy make important economic gains, including a sharp cut in inflation, and greatly improved the country's image abroad.

On July 4, President Cossiga gave Senate President Amintore Fanfani "an exploratory mandate" to mediate the crisis, but Fanfani's mission did not lead to a breakthrough.

The period of stability under Craxi appears to have hidden a simmering dispute between his Socialists and the Christian Democrats which finally erupted following a Sicilian regional election last month.

Andreotti has been foreign minister since Craxi's government was formed on August 4, 1983. He supported Italy's close ties with the United States and NATO membership, but also called for better relations with the Soviet Union.

The start of the crisis on June 26 took Craxi by surprise. He was forced to rush back from a European community summit in The Hague and the depth of the crisis shocked and astonished the public and many political commentators. Now it seems a continuation of the deadlock could lead to premature elections or at the best to a short-term minority government to tide the nation over the summer season.

REGULATIONS ISSUED ON NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

OW171034 Beijing XINHUA in English 1015 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- China issued four sets of regulations on the safety of nuclear power plants on July 7, the National Nuclear Safety Administration (NNSA) told XINHUA today.

The four sets of regulations are about the siting, designing, operation and quality assurance of nuclear power plants, said Shi Guangchang, deputy director of NNSA, which drafted the regulations.

"Safety regulations on the siting of nuclear power plants" say that detailed surveys and evaluation must be made as to the necessary natural and man-induced events relating to the site of a nuclear power plant.

The events refer to those that might affect the safety of nuclear power plants, including rainfall, flood, wind, wave, earthquake, surface movement, plan collision, and forest fire.

This set of regulations stipulates in principle the detailed requirements for seismic and population evaluation, atmospheric dispersion, hydrogeology, foundation safety, plant site surveys, flood, meteorology and radiation protection.

According to the "safety regulations on the design of nuclear power plants," the design of a nuclear power plant, especially that of relevant structures, systems and parts of the plant must accord with safety requirements. And an appraisal must be made of postulated initiating events that might be believed to affect the safety of the nuclear power plant, and protective measures must be planned.

Multi-protective screens must be designed to prevent radioactive fallout.

Drawing lessions from the Three Mile Island incident in the United States, this set of regulations stipulates that the work environment must be designed in line with the principle of human engineering. The regulations also list detailed requirements for the design of reactor cores, components, meters and intruments control, protection system, cooling system, emergency power system, safety containment system, radiation protection, fuel loading, unloading and storage system, and explosion-proof, fire-proof, security and emergency measures.

"Safety regulations on the operation of nuclear power plants" set forth stipulations for the commissioning, operation, maintenance and decommissioning of such plants and the total responsibility for the safe operation on the part of the operating organization. Nuclear power plants must accept NNSA supervision over their safe operation.

The operating organizations must have an adequate number of competent operation managers and operators who have the licence for guiding and operating nuclear power plants after training and examinations.

Nuclear power plants must have the license for their commissioning and operation after they are examined and approved by NNSA.

"Safety regulations on the quality assurance of nuclear power plants" require all organizations involved in nuclear power plant projects must carry out relevant programs on quality assurance. They also set strict demands on documentation and records relating to these projects.

At present, China is building two nuclear power stations, Qinshan in east China's Zhejiang Province, which is designed by China itself and has a designed generating capacity of 300 mw, and Dayawan in south China's Guangdong Province, which has a designed generating capacity of 1,800 mu and its equipment is imported from France and Britain.

Appropriate development of nuclear energy constitutes part of China's policy on boosting the country's power industry.

France To Assist in Safety Checks

HK180729 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1414 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Report: "Jiang Shegjie Says China and France Will Jointly Check the Safety of the Daya Bay Nuclear Power Plant"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Today Jiang Shengji, director of the Chinese Nuclear Safety Bureau, told this reporter that the Chinese and French departments concerned reached an agreement not long ago to jointly check and approve safety at the Daya Bay Nuclear Power Plant.

France has rich experience in checking and approving nuclear power plant safety and it will provide gratis to the Chinese side the data and materials needed for checking nuclear power plant safety, he said.

Jiang Shengji said: China bought nuclear power equipment from France, because it has strict quality control standards and its equipment is of high quality. France has developed nuclear power faster than any other country in the world, at a rate of 4 to 5 reactors a year. Nuclear power-related products made by France, such as pressure shells and pressure pumps have a good reputation in the world.

According to Jiang Shengjie, China will buy analog machines for nuclear power operation training from foreign countries to train its operators and then send them to other countries to receive an on-the-job operational training. Before taking a job in the operation and management work of nuclear power plants, all operators must obtain certificates of qualification issued by the State Nuclear Safety Bureau after an examination. China will also strictly select nuclear power operators, stressing that their intelligence and ability to cope with emergencies must be higher than those of personnel in conventional power plants.

DECISION ON ABOLITION OF FEC'S STILL PENDING

HK171054 Hong Kong AFP in English 1042 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Peking, July 17 (AFP) -- China has yet to decide how and when to abolish foreign exchange certificates (FEC), the special currency that has spawned a thriving black market, a senior Chinese banking official said Thursday.

"The departments concerned have yet to make a final decision," Zhu Xingxing, chief of China's Foreign Exchange Management Bureau said in a telephone interview.

"The abolition of the FEC is not a simple matter that can be accomplished in a day or two. It concerns the continued implementation of the open policy and other related questions, he said.

Mr Zhu curtly dismissed remarks by Qian Jiaqu, a leading Chinese economist, who was quoted in a Hong Kong newspaper Thursday as saying that Beijing had "fixed a date in the near future," for the withdrawal of the FEC.

"Qian Jiaqu is only a member of the People's Political Consultative Conference," he said, referring to the economist's post in China's honorary but powerless body of academics and other non-communists.

"He has never participated in any important meeting concerning the abolition of the FEC. Therefore his point of view cannot represent a formal decision by the state but only his individual guess."

(Mr Qian, who spoke with the Hong Kong newspaper while on a visit to the neighbouring Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, was reported to have come at the invitation of Shenzhen's mayor to study the zone's economy.)

Speculation about the abolition of the FEC, which has the same official value as the yuan but has traded on the black market for up to 70 percent more, has mounted since Chinese officials announced last April that the special notes would eventually be abandoned.

Trading in Chinese currency is strictly controlled by the government, which has cut the yuan's value by about 60 percent against foreign currencies in the past two years, including a 16 percent devaluation this month.

Analysts said the devaluation was moving in the direction of creating a currency whose official value was closer to its market value, but Chinese leaders have said that withdrawal of the FEC is separate from the question of having a freely-traded Chinese currency.

The issue is critical to foreign ventures doing business in China and taking as much of their income as possible in FEC, which they can exchange directly for foreign exchange.

Rumours about the FEC's impending withdrawal have had their strongest effect among urban Chinese, who until recently paid steep black market rates for the notes in order to buy imported consumer goods not otherwise available.

In recent months such people are no longer seeking FEC's so avidly but instead hoping to change their accumulated stores directly for U.S. dollars, observers said.

ECONOMIST ON IMPORTANCE OF ECONOMIC INFORMATION

HK160711 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jul 86 p 2

[Article by Qian Jiaju: "We Should Attach Importance to Economic Information"]

[Text] On 5 July, People's Bank of China president Chen Muhua announced that as of 5 July the exchange rates of renminbi against foreign currencies were to be adjusted downward by 15.8 percent, namely, the exchange rate of $100 against 320 yuan in the past was due to be adjusted to $100 against 370.36 yuan.

In economically developed countries, an important decision like this would certainly be carried as a major news item on the front page, along with a list of the new exchange rates. This is because it will have a great effect on China's import and export trade (I support this decision because it can stimulate our exports and restrict our imports). However, of the newspapers I saw, only RENMIN RIBAO carried this news on the front page. With the exception of the new exchange rate between renminbi and the U.S. dollar, there was no news about the rates between the renminbi and other foreign currencies, such as the Japanese yen, the Hong Kong dollar, DM, Franc, and the British pound in RENMIN RIBAO, GUANGMING RIBAO, or BEIJING RIBAO on 6 July. What is stranger is that some newspapers, which regard reporting economic news as their duty, have failed not only to publish the new exchange rates but also to carry Chen Muhua's talk. This is really quite surprising. This shows that these newspapers attach little importance to economic information.

LIAOWANG ON HANDLING CONTRADICTIONS WITHIN CPC

HK171311 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 28, 14 Jul 86 p 1

["Letter From Beijing" by Bao Xin: "On How the CPC Handles Contradictions Within the Party"]

[Excerpts] Dear brother: In commemoration of the 65th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Communist Party on 1 July, Chinese papers published the speech of Hu Yaobang, CPC Central Committee secretary general, "The Question on the Correct Handling of the Two Kinds of Contradictions Within the Party." At the time of the speech's publication, correction of party style and party rectification work were in progress; reforms were being carried out; and an atmosphere of democracy, loosening up, and harmony were being shaped. Thus, the importance of this speech goes without saying. While it dealt with the question of correctly handling contradictions within the party, however, due to the leading and ruling position of the CPC in the country, the issue is also of great significance outside the party and in the entire country. If contradictions within the party could be properly handled, this could set an example, give impetus to the correct handling of contradictions among the people, and consolidate as well as develop stability and unity in the country. [passage omitted]

Viewing the contents and manner of manifestation of contradictions, Hu Yaobang in his speech classified internal CPC contradictions into two categories: One is contradictions involving differences of opinion in work and understanding; the other is contradiction of personal interest with the interest of the party and the people. This corresponds with the CPC's reality. Some people overseas exaggerated the contradiction within the CPC; a few even conjured up stories of the CPC being divided into "two factions," so-called "consvervatives" and the other, so-called "reformers." Still others went to great length to describe the "struggle for power" within the CPC. Due to differences in experiences, education, and of perspective in the deliberation of issues, people have differing proposals and opinions in work in understanding. This is a common phenomenon in life and is indeed normal. How can they be casually tagged as "x xx factions"? During the "Cultural Revolution," factionalism was indeed quite rampant for a while. People were divided into "loyalists," "rebels," "indifferents," etc. This was the doing of the "gang of four," whose purpose was to attack people. Today, the pernicious effects of such factionalism have been gradually eliminated. As for a "power struggle" among party members now, there are certainly some people who have inflated individualism and are overly ambitious for power. They would spare no effort to achieve personal gains, even to the extent of seriously violating the law. This kind of people gravely jeopardize the interest of the party and the people. They cannot be tolerated by party and state law and must be rectified. This cannot be said to be "power struggle within the CPC." [passage omitted]

As for the very small nunber of antagonistic contradictions, such as serious violations of economic law and serious law infringements in other aspects, it is necessary to apply party and state laws. If not sternly handled, not only would the people's anger not be pacified it could also foment evil trends, set bad examples for other cadres, and have a corrupting effect. At present, the CPC's handling of this kind of contradiction tends primarily to be soft. Some major incidents were even toned down, and minor ones turned out to be no problem at all. In order to overcome this weak approach, the CPC has ordered the central bodies to take the lead to conscientiously strengthen the political life of party organization at all levels, strengthen democratic centralism, and enforce strict party discipline. Naturally, violators of the law will be treated according to the law.

On the question of handling contradictions within the party, the CPC has had numerous experiences and lessons, including some extremely painful ones. Today, at a critical time of comprehensive reform of the economic structure, it is timely that the CPC leaders have brought up the question of properly handling two kinds of contradictions within the party. This would help continue promoting the fine political and economic situation at present.

Yours truly,

[Signed] Bao Xun

[Dated] 6 July 1986

RENMIN RIBAO ON REFORM, THEORETICAL FLOWERING

HK161018 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 5

[Article by Da Jiang: "Practice in Reform Calls for Flourishing Theories -- Comments on the Shanghai Cultural Development Strategy Seminar"]

[Text] The sun shone brightly and the wind blew gently in Shanghai this May, where music of reason, a blend of calmness, leisureliness, activity, and liveliness was played. Some 300 people, including theoretical and practical workers, leading comrades from the Central Propaganda Department, the Ministry of Culture, and the municipal CPC committee, and veteran fighters on the cultural front, assembled in a hall to discuss things on an equal footing, each airing his own views, and to jointly explore Shanghai's cultural development strategy. A variety of different opinions were expressed in heated discussions. While sharing similar views on the goals, the participants at the meeting reserved differences with pleasure. Although the topics under discussion were unrestrained and far-ranging, the central topic was clear and definite, and although the participants had their own views, their goals were identical. The seminar stirred up enthusiastic discussions on reform, opening up to the outside world, science, and democracy, not only among the participants but also outside the meeting.

This is Shanghai's "cultural fad," as people have called it recently.

Praise and Censure of the "Shanghai Style"

In discussing cultural affairs in Shangai, people will naturally touch on the "Shanghai style," which has a long history. The "Shanghai style" of the past was related to concessions, which were related to foreigners and big commercial firms. In traditional views, commerce is despicable; moreover, concessions were the product of the policy of aggression of the imperialists. Therefore, the "Shanghai style" has always had a bad reputation. Sometimes, it was almost regarded as the synonym of imperialism, capitalism, and bourgeoisie. Today, 30-odd years have passed since the founding of the PRC. However, the ulcers of old China are still used as grounds to oppose the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world, the bad habit of despising merchants which has lasted for several thousand years is combined with fear of the commodity economy, and egalitarianism, the practice of "everybody eating from the same big pot," and the product economy are regarded as socialist, the commodity economy as capitalist, and all these concepts are regarded as orthodox Marxism. For this reason, many comrades deeply feel that chronic illnesses are so deep-rooted that it is imperative to change these concepts. At the current seminar, many comrades restudied the characteristics of the "Shanghai style" culture and its role in history. All seminar participants agreed: Practice since the founding of the PRC has shown that the rapid development of Shangai's economy is inseparable from the party leadership and its original foundation or its superiority in the economic, technological, and cultural sectors. However, pratice over the last 30 years or more has also shown that the reason Shanghai's economy failed to develop at a more rapid rate lies precisely in the fact that the numerous outdated concepts and rigid economic patterns have stifled the vitality of its economy. [paragraph continues]

To carry forward the fine traditions of the Shanghai culture, it is necessary to be good at deriving nourishment from the cultures of other places and blazing new trails and bold in clearing the way to forge ahead continuously. Continued and sustained efforts should be made to combat the decadent feudal and capitalist ideas, in particular, the leftover influence of feudalism. Efforts should also be concentrated on eliminating the influence of "leftist" ideology. As far as Shanghai is concerned, on no account must this point be ignored.

From the very start, the seminar was confronted with a strong demand for smashing old concepts.

The Continuity of the Discussion on the Criterion of Truth

Why can this "cultural fad" emerge on China's soil in the mid-1980's? Many seminar participants associated the current situation with the discussion on the criterion of truth that took place 8 years ago. Now everybody is already very clear about that discussion. When history develops to a certain period, it calls for rational reflection of its general trend and cleaning out of old concepts that hinder its advance. If at that time the "two whatevers" were not refuted and the party's ideological line was not corrected, there would not have been the situation in which we are living today.

At the meeting, many comrades said that in discussing the criterion of truth, a passage by Lenin was widely quoted. Lenin said: After experiencing a fierce revolutionary struggle, revolutionary parties cannot continue "without a return to elementary questions and without new training to help them 'digest' lessons of unparalleled richness and make it possible for incomparably wider masses again to march forward, but now far more firmly, more consciously, more confidently, and more steadfastly." ("Collected Works of Lenin" Vol 17, p 25) By again studying these remarks of Lenin and relating them to our own experience over the last 8 years, we will be able to gain a relatively conscious understanding of the current "cultural fad."

Since the 3d Plenary session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our reform, starting from the rural areas, has developed into all-round reform with focus on cities. This is a profound social change affecting the interests and behavior of different sectors of society, a change not comparable with the debate taking place 8 years ago both in breadth and in depth. The reform going on today in China is an all-round, comprehensive, and dynamic social systems engineering project involving the whole society's economy, politics, culture, and the ideology, concepts, lifestyles, and psychology of the people. Practice over the last few years has proved that without relevant political and cultural changes, progress in economic reform would be difficult to make and what we have gained in the reform might be lost again.

Most participants at the seminar on Shanghai's cultural development strategy agreed with this assessment, asserting that the current "cultural fad" was indeed the continuity and development of the disucssion on the criterion of truth. However, the historical mission it takes on seems more arduous.

Another Movement To Emancipate the Mind

At the seminar, some comrades said that there were two reasons for the current "cultural fad." First, economic structural reform rocks traditional culture and concept of value. [paragraph continues]

In other words, social development challenges traditional values. Second, in the course of reform, people have begun to realize that traditional culture and concept of value hinder the progress of reform. In other words, traditional values resist social development. The struggle between the two forces in the course of history has led to emancipation of people's minds.

All seminar participants traced the question of traditional culture and emancipation of people's minds to the 4 May Movement, which took place 5 decades or more ago. At the beginning of this century, the advanced elements of the Chinese nation gradually came to see that modernization of China could not be based on partial reform of the old empire but instead it called for an all-round cultural and social change, in particular, throughout elemination of the feudal culture and the concept of value based on such a culture which had held a dominant position in China for several thousand years. Hence, there was the famous 4 May Movement. In the course of the movement, the Chinese ideological community was very active in criticizing traditional culture and introducing Oriental and Western civilizations. This can be called the first "cultural fad" in modern Chinese history. The movement raised the resounding slogan of "down with the shop of Confucius," and promoted dissemination of the science introduced from the West -- Marxism -- in China. It has made contributions never to be obliterated in history. However, the movement failed to solve the problem of achieving modernization in China. Historically, this task fell to the Chinese Communists.

The comrades participating in the seminar pointed out: During the period of democratic revolution, our party concentrated its main efforts on seizing state power by armed force. In the 30-odd years following the founding of the PRC, great achievements have been made. However, we failed to shift in good time the focus of our work to the historic task of achieving modernization in China. Just when we launched one political movement after another under the guiding ideology of "taking class struggle as the key line," many countries in the world were moving ahead in big strides. We have thus lagged far behind them. It was not until the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that we came soberly to realize this problem. History has once again assigned us the task we should have fulfilled in the past but failed, a task of carrying out an overall reform. Through several years of practice, people have ultimately come to see the truth of "reform in China's second revolution." The task of China's reform, though the self-improvement and self-development of the social system, is very arduous. The reform to modernize China's society is a systems engineering project designated to resolve complicated, multi-level, and overlapping social problems rather than a move to reform the economy, science and technology, and education alone (of course, reform in these areas is very important). The pressing task now is to eradicate the old habits and concepts of value hindering the reform. Many comrades agreed that the "cultural fad" now prevailing in the ideological community in China with Shanghai in the lead is not only the continuity of the emancipation of people's minds started from the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, but it will also be China's second emancipate-the-mind movement since the 4 May Movement. [paragraph continues]

The task of the current movement to emancipate the mind is to mobilize the whole nation to smash the trammels of old concepts and to establish a new concept-of-value system commensurate with the needs of developing the socialist commodity economy and achieving modernization.

Do Not Forget the Teachings of the "Manifesto"

An important aspect of the "cultural fad" is the attitude toward the achievements of the different civilizations in the world. This was a topic both at and outside the meeting. Many participants said that our country takes Marxism as its guiding ideology and it is an open science. However, some people are more used to the practice of closing the country to international intercourse. People who stick to this practice are more in dread of the world culture than the Chinese who lived 100 years ago. Basically, they discriminate against the research developments of social sciences in foreign countries, such as the various schools of thought, ideological trends, and theories existing in the current workers movement and the new concepts and ideas put forth in the course of scientific development. Although the practice of overthrowing all based on the notion of "taking class struggle as the key link" is quite rarely adopted, there exists a spiritual fence based on ready-made philosophical conclusions acting as a brake on exchanges between different ideologies. Anyhow, this will not help achieve modernization.

Many comrades pointed out: Beyond doubt, the policy of opening up to the outside world might bring in some bad things and even decadent ideologies. But how can a socialist spiritual civilization possibly be built if the communists are not confident of overthrowing these things? Instead of placing this important historical mission on specific talented individuals, we must derive nourishment from the achievements of world civilization. To explain this argument fully, the seminar participants not only repeatedly quoted Lenin's commendable well-known saying -- "Proletarian culture is not clutched out of thin air; it is not an invention of those who call themselves experts in proletarian culture. That is all nonsense." ("Selected Works of Lenin" Vol 4, p 348) -- but they also studied again and again the teachings of the "Manifesto of the Communist Party." This monumental Marxist classic work says: "In place of the old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency, we have intercourse in every direction, universal interdependence of nations. And, as in material, so also in intellectual production. The intellectual creations of individual nations become common property. National one-sidedness and narrow-mindedness become more and more impossible." Many comrades said: One hundred or more years later, today, with the rapid development of modern science and technology, the achievements of human civilization have gone beyond the separation between different countries, with each deriving from, permeating through, and blending with the other. Whoever wants to resist this trend will be tossed to the rear by the course of history. This is independent of man's will.

Practice Is Calling

The comrade participating in the seminar widely agreed that our reform is a completely new undertaking and there is no ready formula to follow and apply. [paragraph continues]

Many comrades said: Marx' political economy cannot solve all problems in the socialist economy, because Marx and Engels did not have the practical experience in building socialism. Socialism is built in China on a semifeudal and semicolonial basis. The society envisaged by Marx in those years was society without commodities, but we are now giving priority to commodity economy. We want to develop a commodity economy under socialism. When it comes to Marxism, this is a new topic. Many comrades pointed out: for a considerable length of time in the past, we propagated Marxism in a seriously mechanical, dogmatic, and pragmatic way. During the 10 years of turmoil, Marxism was distorted beyond recognition. The ideological line upheld by the party since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, a line of emancipating the mind and seeking truth from facts, has restored and developed the scientific spirit and creativity and vitality of Marxism. In their understanding of socialism, people have freed themselves from the trammels of numerious rigid "leftist" concepts. The central authorities' decision on reform of the economic structure scientifically explains the question of a planned commodity economy and has really enriched the ideological arsenal of Marxism. Developing Marxist theory is the demand of the socialist practice in the contemporary era. If a theory fails to provide answers to new problems cropping up in practice and if it fails to develop itself along with the development of practice, it will become completely useless dogma. All participants agreed that the debate on the so-called adherence to and development of Marxism currently underway among theoretical circles can be easily solved if people have thorough understanding of the consistent spirit of Marxism.

On various occasions during the seminar on Shanghai's cultural development strategy, with all sorts of feelings welling up their minds and full of confidence, the participants believed that to develop Marxism and make culture, education, art, and learning prosper is not an easy job. It requires the broad massas of theoretical, artistic, scientific, and practical workers and all interested people with lofty ideals to make bold explorations and assiduous study and to strive for creation. This calls for, among other things, an environment in which our explorers can fearlessly seek truth. In the course of seeking truth, error is permitted. The previous unreasonable and organized so-called "academic criticism" should not be repeated. If a project in natural sciences requires 606 experiments before it is successful, in other words, 605 failures or defects are tolerable, why would people make a fuss over some errors occurring in the study of social sciences or in literature and art creation, thinking the sky is falling and even easily resort to big sticks?

All participants said: It is necessary to create a sound environment so that our reformers and explorers can bring their creativity into play without restrictions. This is the important guarantee for the smooth progress of reform in our country.

The seminar on Shanghai's cultural development strategy held that the 30th anniversary of the promulgation of the double hundred principle was unexpectedly lively, harmonious, and open. It was of profound singificance. It has proved from one aspect that reform calls for flourishing theories, which in turn will give a push to the vigorous development of the reform. This is the historical meaning of the newly emerged "cultural fad" in our country.

CHINA DAILY ON HONGQI LITERARY THEORY DEBATE

HK180309 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 18 Jul 86 p 4

[By Zhang Xiaogang]

[Text] Chinese literary criticism often do not mention the names of the persons being criticized "in order to save each other's 'face'," as some writers say, not without a little distaste.

When one literary criticism did mention a name, it took people by surprise. On April 16, the magagzine RED FLAG, a party theoretical journal, ran an article signed by Chen Yong accusing Liu Zaifu, director of the institute of Literature of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, of deviating from Marxism.

Fortunately, however, this has not proved to be the signal for a new political campaign directed against academic freedom. Liu is continuing his theoretical pursuits and RED FLAG has run another criticism -- but this time it mentions Chen's name.

Liu Zaifu graduated from Xiamen University, Fujian Province in 1963 and is now in his 40s. His literary research in recent years has been widely read and he was elected director of his institute by his colleagues about a year ago.

Chen Yong distinguished himself as a literary theorist in the 1950's, but was then persecuted by the "anti-rightist" movement, according to RED FLAG. He then became a teacher in a northwestern province and is now a policy researcher for the Communist Party.

Liu Zaifu observed that studies of literary theories were recently moving from the studies of literature's relations with politics to the "aesthetic characteristics' of literature itself. Chen argued that the former was actually the internal factor of literature while the latter was of less importance.

"The essence of literature would be utterly incomprehensible" without probing into the writer's relations with politics and economics, ideological outlook and life itself, Chen said.

Liu attempted to distinguish "man in existence" from "man in practice," another unacceptable point to Chen, who attacked Liu for leaning towards either "mechanical materialism" or "subjective idealism."

Looking back on the experience of China's revolutionary literature, Liu tends to suggest that there is a need to re-examine the "basic theories, concepts, and ways of thinking." This Chen opposed strongly. He argued that all the basics of Chinese revolutionary literature have always remained Marxist, even during periods of crisis. They were "enriched and further developed under extremely difficult circumstnces."

To conclude his article, Chen Yong fiercely attacked "some people" for trying to "discard marxism, even denigrate Marxism," under the pretext of "developing Marxism."

Liu's Response

After reading the criticism of his theories, Liu Zaifu told CHINA DAILY that, while he was pleased to see that theoretical debates were becoming livelier recently, he would continue to proceed with his theoretical research.

He also said that discussion about his studies of literature had long been going on in the academic journal run by his institute -- Research of Literature. It was purely academic, he added.

Not long after the publication of Chen Yong's article, a lively discussion began in the academic and literary circles calling for more freedom of creation and academic research in the light of the policy of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend."

Many articles written by decision-makers, policy researchers, and academicians in May to mark the formulation of the policy three decades ago stressed the need to separate to differing views.

RED FLAG also called a symposium on literary theories. At the meeting, the journal reported, some regarding Chen Yong's criticism of Liu Zaifu as "an important work." They said they had not read a great work like this "for quite a long time."

Reporting the meeting, which was attended by about 40 people, RED FLAG also indicated its disappointment that Liu Zaifu did not show an interest in participating in the debate in its journal, although he had been invited to do so.

The criticism of Chen Yong that RED FLAG has just published indicates that, except for the point of "man in existence" and "man in practice," the critic does not seem to share much common ground with Chen.

The author, Wang Chunguan, accuses Chen of "lacking adequate patience and enthusiasm for the new atmosphere in the theoretical study of literature and art," and of "starting from an anachronistic angel to view the realities."

As for culture, the author says, "how can the phrase 'reflections of politics and economics' generalize all its aspects?"

The author further adds that, to his surpise, Chen even went so far as to relate his own view of the situation of China's literary development to the "fate of Marxism in China," and "the fate of socialist literature and art in China." Wang says he does not think the work of a scholar like Liu Zaifu would be a "spiritual nuclear bomb" to finish off Marxism in China.

Wang Chunyuan also ways: "If anybody tends to regard Marxism as a panacea, he is actually opposing science and supporting a myth. Marxism cannot be a panacea, because it is a science; and why should we insist that Marxism be regarded as a panacea in the study of literature and art when it is no panacea at all?"

ZHU HOUZE ON POLITICAL STRUCTURE REFORM

HK180211 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Jul 86 p 4

[Report: "Zhu Houze Speaks at Theoretical Discussion Meeting on Reform of the Political Structure"]

[Text] The Theoretical Discussion Meeting on Reform of the Political Structure ended on 12 July at the Central Party School. During the 3-day discussion, the more than 100 participants aired their views.

At the meeting, Zhu Houze, head of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, said that, at present, reform of the economic structure, reform of the political structure, and changes in ideology and culture coordinate and influence each other so that the overall reform develops in scope and intensity step by step. Therefore, we should also take a farther and deeper view in studying problems. He stressed that in carrying out reform of the political structure, we should conduct more investigation and study and make more analysis on the actual situation at present. We should find out what are the obstacles to the continued development of the reform of the economic structure caused by the political structure. We may also make some historical investigation on the realities of the present political life. We may, for example, review the practice and thinking of the reform of the political structure since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. We may also make comparisons with other socialist countries and Western countries. Zhu Houze put forward that while encouraging vigorous ways of thinking, we should also advocate a rigorous style of study. We should study and grasp various aspects and layers of the new situation and the new thing.

Many participants to the meeting pointed out that in discussing the reform of the political structure at present, we must first of all see that since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have done a lot of work and made great achievements in the reform of the political structure. For example, the normalization of political life, the restoration and perfection of the principle of centralization and unification, the restoration and development of a united front, the building of the socialist legal system, the abolishment of the cadres' life tenure system, the division of power between the central authorities and a various localities, the creation of a harmonious atmosphere in the ideological and cultural fields, and so on. Seeing these can strengthen our confidence in reform and seriously summing up experience and drawing lessons are also helpful to further reforms.

In discussing the necessity and urgency of the reform of the political structure, many comrades held that, on the one hand, the reason for putting forward the reform of the political structure is that many bad practices of the structure are seriously obstructing the progress of the reform of the economic structure and the reform of the political structure reflects the inevitable demand of the reform of the economic structure as the latter develops in intensity. On the other hand, the reform of the political structure has its independent significance. This is particularly so in a country like ours in which remnants of feudalism exist to a great extent. The meeting chiefly discussed questions centering round the relations between the party and the government.

SEMINAR VIEWS POLITICAL STRUCTURE REFORM

HK150759 Xian XIBEI XINXI DAOBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Report: "An Academic Seminar Points Out That Economic Reform Will Certainly Lead to Reform of the Political Structure"]

[Text] The yought academic seminar recently held in Beijing on "the reform and development of China's political structure" jointly sponsored by CHINA'S SOCIAL SCIENCES, the Youth Social Science Forum of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, and the Editorial Department of STUDY OF POLITICAL SCIENCE held that the reform of China's economic structure will inevitably lead to political, ideological, and cultural changes and development.

The seminar noted that fully ensuring socialist democracy is one of the major targets of the reform of China's political structure. As China is an economically underdeveloped country, the only way to reduce the gap between China and the economically developed countries as quickly as possible is to ensure and strengthen centralized control by the state over natural resources. While deliberating the reform of the political structure, this reality must be taken into account. "Democracy and centralism" are not contradictory. The opposite of "democracy" is "dictatorship," while the opposite of "centralism" is "decentralism." By fighting dictatorship, which runs counter to science, with democracy, we can effectively avoid decentralism and concentrate our forces to carry out the key construction projects. This is also the target of the reform of the political structure.

The seminar held that the lateral ties now established between enterprises can serve as a pivot combining the reform of the political structure with that of the economic structure. The conditions for carrying out competition on an equal and fair basis, effective legislation and judicature, and the relevant rights and duties required for promoting lateral ties between enterprises can only be attained by effecting a corresponding change in the political structure.

The seminar also held that the reform of the political structure is a complicated, sensitive issue. Instead of evading the issue with a passive attitude or letting it slide, we should gain the initiative and carry out the reform vigorously. Only in this way can we make the most of the opportune moment created by the economic development and reform of the economic structure and give impetus to social progress.

VICE MINISTER ON NEW CULTURAL LEADERSHIP'S POLICY

HK180517 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1250 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Report by Lin Hua. "The New Leading Body of China's Ministry of Culture Is Keen on Carrying Out Reform"]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Following the complete reogranization of the old leading body of the Ministry of Culture, the average age of the members of the new leading body, headed by Wang Meng, is under 54.

The vigorous new leading body is keen on carrying out reform, concentrating on effectively leading a contingent of one million literature and art workers throughout the country, and striving for long-term stable development of China's literature and art work.

This is the main topic of the 7-day national meeting of the heads of cultural departments (bureaus). At a closing ceremony today, executive Vice Minister Gao Zhanxiang delivered a concluding report entitled "Cultural Leadership Work Should be Adapted to the New Situation in Reform and Opening Up."

He said: In his report at the opening ceremony, Minister Wang Meng stressed the question of the changing functions of leading bodies. This is a new problem we face in the new period. It is a new subject and the leaders of cultural departments should devote themselves to its study. The Ministry of Culture should concentrate its energy on investigating, studying, and solving practical problems.

Gao Zhanxiang particularly discussed the question of having a better sense of reform. He said: We should find a way out, acquire vitality, attract the audience, and attain better economic results through reform. For example, he said, during the past year the Shanghai People's Art Theater, led by dramatist Sha Yexin has put on eight dramas. Such operas as "In Search of Dauntless, Unyielding Man" run to capacity audiences because they are well received by the yong audience. Putting on a song-and-dance duet at an open-air theater, the Jilin Folk Art Troupe sold as many as 11,000 tickets for a show. It was indeed a typical example of "10,000 people crowing round to watch the song-and-dance duet." Some spectators said: "I would rather miss a meal than the song-and-dance duet." These are all typical examples of the reform weeding out the old to bring forth the new. They show that the reform is an arduous path but it is also a path to prosperity and rejuvenation and a path leading from a place "where the mountains and the rivers end" to one "where the shade of willows and riotous flowers beckon."

Gao Zhanxiang expressly pointed out: Being a new thing , the reform neither has a precedent for us to go by nor a pattern for us to indiscriminately copy. Reform means making explorations and starting something new. For this reason, errors should be permissible. We should adopt a correct approach toward the errors in reform, characterized by "drawing lessons and being merciful." But there are also people who take advantage of the reform to engage in dishonest practices. They are not reformers but the targets of our attack.

Talking about the question of having a better sense of cultural strategy, Gao Zhanxiang said it is necessary to ponder and study cultural development strategy in order to promote the coordinated development of culture, politics, and economy. He said that after defining the objective of the state's economic development strategy, people will naturally take into consideration the question of cultural development strategy. Raising the modernization level of people is a strategic requirement for achieving socialist modernization. He said: Striving for a long-term stable development in China's literature and art work, as put forward by Wang Meng, is a strategic guiding principle. The word "stability" is directed against "reversals" and "stirring up winds." Stability does not mean marking time but forging head gradually and in harmony.

In concluding the report which he made on behalf of the new leading body of the Ministry of Culture, Gao Zhanxiang called on all people to have a better sense of service: He said: "Leadership means service and cadres are public servants." Literature and art are currently in the best historical period since the founding of the PRC. But there are still a lot of difficulties. It is hoped that leaders of cultural departments at all levels will forge ahead in the face of difficulties and open up a new situation in cultural and art work.

PRODUCT QUALITY, PLANT EFFICIENCY DRIVE LAUNCHED

OW161131 Beijing XINHUA in English 0958 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 16 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government will use loans, wage incentives and other economic measures to stimulate industrial enterprises to improve the quality of their products and cut consumption of raw materials over the next five years.

According to a decision made public today, departments of the State Council, the country's highest governing body, will specify norms of three classes of enterprises -- special class, first class and second class.

It urges all of China's industrial enterprises, especially its larger ones, which are state-owned. to "draw up plans and take practical measures" to meet the standards.

The council decided that product quality, material consumption and overall economic efficiency will serve as "principal indexes" for assessing management of the country's industries.

Special-class industries will be expected to meet current international standards for product quality and raw material and energy consumption.

Those in the first class will be expected to meet international standards of the late 1970s or early 1980s for product quality and 1985's highest domestic standards for material consumption.

Second-class industries, which include enterprises producing high-quality goods for the domestic market, will be expected to meet 1985's highest domestic standards for material consumption.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION STRESSES QUALITY CONTROL

OW071040 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Jul 86

[Text] The State Economic Commission on 3 July reiterated that a plant director should be resolutely removed from his or her post if the plant's products repeatedly fail to pass inspection and the plant director fails to attach importance to quality control and to seriously improve product quality. The Commission today issued Bulletin No 6 on state supervision and spot-checks of industrial product quality.

The bulletin indicates that the quality of products of some enterprises in our country remains very poor, and that one-third of the enterprises selected for spot-checks failed to pass inspection.

The responsible persons of the Bureau of Quality Supervision and the State Bureau of Standardization urged the leading cadres of all enterprises to attach importance to product quality and to adopt measures to improve quality, and not stop at merely paying lip service. They also hoped that the departments in charge of industrial enterprises refrain from overemphasizing output and output value when evaluating enterprise operations and from overburdening enterprises with excessive output quotas. Product quality should be the primary concern. An enterprise should not be rated as advanced if the quality of its products is substandard, no matter how good its other achievements.

COMMENTARY ON BUILDING SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

HK160447 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "The Building of Spiritual Civilization Should Serve To Prepare the Way for the Development of the New Productive Forces"]

[Text] What guiding ideology should we actually have while building socialist spiritual civilization? And what should the building of socialist spiritual civilization serve? Our comrades cannot hold identical views on these questions and some of them do not even have a correct understanding of them. Therefore, it is now necessary to look into these questions so as to seek a consensus on them.

The building of socialist spiritual civilization should serve to prepare the way for the development of the new productive forces. The essential task of socialism is to develop the productive forces. As the superstructure, the building of spiritual civilization should trigger the development of the productive forces. If the building of spiritual civilization is divorced from the development of the productive forces, our society will fall into blindness. Therefore, the development of the productive forces is an important sign to indicate the results of the building of spiritual civilization. The basic tenets of Marxism tell us that the building of spiritual civilization and the building of material wealth take each other as conditions and objectives, and the building of spiritual civilization is restricted by a particular mode of production, so the building of spiritual civilization should focus on the development of the productive forces.

The building of socialist spiritual civilization should stimulate reform and the development of the socialist commodity economy. High development of the commodity economy constitutes an inseparable stage in social economic development. The building of spiritual civilization that we engage in is carried out precisely under such an historical condition. Therefore, we must strengthen education in reform so that the vast numbers of cadres and people will have a strong sense of reform and a strong sense of developing the commodity economy. Thereby we will be able to pave the way for the establishment of a new economic structure and become mentally prepared to take new steps forward in reform. Only by so doing will we be able to take the difficult task of building socialist spiritual civilization.

The building of socialist spiritual civilization must facilitate the development of a high degree of socialist democracy. The realization of the four modernizations needs high enthusiasm and initiative by the broad masses of the people. The key to the problem lies in the necessity of building a high degree of socialist democracy. Whenever we spoke of democracy, freedom, and humanitarianism in the past, we used to think that we should not use them because they belong to the bourgeoisie. This is a confused idea. As a matter of fact, the principles and policies of our party all reflect the will of the broad masses of the people. In order to develop a high degree of democracy and attain the ultimate goal of our party, we must now create an atmosphere of relaxation and harmony.

At present a small number of cadres and the masses have some confused ideas. They think the building of spiritual civilization, reform, and opening up, conflict with the development of the commodity economy, and that the emergence of some negative phenomena in our social life is due to reform, opening up, and the development of the commodity economy. It must be acknowledged that there are certain relations between the two, but the appearance of unhealthy tendencies and negative phenomena is not the inevitable income from reform and opening up. Some negative phenomena have their roots in the pernicious influence of thousands of years of feudal society, in the underdevelopment of the commodity economy, and in the incompleteness of reform. The vigorous development of the commodity economy will certainly get rid of these negative phenomena at last.

Making the guiding ideology of the building of spiritual civilization clear will help us understand how to do a good job of political and ideological work in the new historical period. The tasks, contents, methods and means of political and ideological work in the new historical period should adapt themselves to the situation in reform, and suit the needs of developing the commodity economy. Thus, we must have a strong sense of responsibility and dedication to probe into new ways of carrying out political and ideological work under the conditions of reform and opening up. This is the needs of the times and reform. All political and ideological workers should bravely assume the important task entrusted to them by the times.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTATOR ON NEED FOR RULE OF LAW

HK170945 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 17 Jul 86 p 4

[By CHINA DAILY commentator]

[Text] At no time has the rule of law in this country been emphasized more than today. Educating the people, especially on respecting the rule of law, has become widespread. It is the same for government and Communist Party officials.

When Deng Xiaoping recently related efforts to improve the Communist Party's working methods to efforts to strengthen the rule of law, he stressed teaching officials to respect the law as the key issue; that is, educating them in the basics of the legal system, urging them to set a law-abiding example and to faithfully administer the law.

On the evening of July 1, the 65th anniversary of the founding of the Chinese Communist Party, more than 500 officials from the Party's central departments attended a lecture by the Minister of Justice, which ushered in the country's first legal training programme at such a high level.

Two days later, Hu Yaobang, General Secretary of the Party's Central Committee, attended the first of a series of talks on legal issues along with other leaders almost immediately after his return from Western Europe. The General Secretary and his comrades became "ordinary students," in Hu's own words, to a law professor from the Chinese People's University.

Two days after that, lawyers began their national conference in Beijing -- again the first-ever in the People's Republic. The meeting revealed that all provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions (except for Tibet) had formed local lawyers' associations. The All-China Lawyers' Association was established as a result of the national conference, prompting warm congratulations from the Communist Party and its leading figures. "Glory to the people's lawyers," the party said, while promising greater support for lawyers' work.

At the same time, cases of official corruption and breaches of law were exposed and brought to justice.

These signs of great progress in building the rule of law in a country with a long history of feudalism, when privileges existed side-by-side with the lack of a sense of civil responsibility.

In the absence of the rule of law, there is only the rule of man. What officials say goes. Social customs and habits dictate the way people live. Wherever there is an abuse of power or a violation of the law, there is doubtless an infringement of the rights of other people.

Having drawn many lessons from the bitter experience of the "Cultural Revolution," the national leadership is now doing its best to uphold the rule of law and establish it as a force that will leave no room for further political blunders. This is in dramatic contrast to the way of doing things 20 years ago.

The nation has come to understand that the lack of the rule of law would undermine its attempts to create a society characterized by a vigorous economy and high level of socialist democracy. The economic reforms would not be able to get very far, nor would there be effective checks on corruption and errors in political decision-making. This is why it is wise to push economic development on the one hand and secure a sound legal system on the other.

OFFICIAL URGES TAX DEPARTMENTS TO ENFORCE LAWS

OW071426 Beijing XINHUA in English 1416 GMT 7 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 7 (XINHUA) -- A senior Chinese taxation official today urged taxation departments throughout the country to review and sort out the tax work concerning foreign enterprises and foreigners in China and correct practices which are at variance with tax laws and regulations.

Speaking at a national conference on taxation which opened here today, Jin Xin, director of the Taxation Bureau under the Ministry of Finance, stressed that taxation on foreign enterprises in China has a direct bearing on international economic relations and the implementation of the country's policy of opening to the outside world.

Therefore, he said, taxation departments across the country must strictly enforce the existing laws and regulations. Neither can they interpret nor modify these laws at will.

More and more Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperatively-run enterprises, wholly foreign-owned enterprises as well as joint ventures engaged in the exploitation of offshore oil have been set up, he noted.

Effective measures must be taken to strengthen the administration of these enterprises, and regulations on tax collection from these enterprises should be worked out as soon as possible.

So far, he said, China has signed agreements with more than 10 countries on the avoidance of double taxation. He asked departments concerned to study carefully these agreements so as to ensure full understanding and correct implementation.

He also asked taxation officials dealing with foreign enterprises to study international taxation, international law, international economic relations and trade, foreign accounting as well as foreign languages.

China began in 1980 to establish its taxation system concerning foreign enterprises. There are now laws and regulations concerning the income taxes of Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperatively-run enterprises and wholly foreign-owned enterprise, consolidated industrial and commercial tax, individual income tax, urban real estate tax and vehicle and vessel licence plate tax. Many preferential provisions including tax reduction and exemption have been offered.

COMMENTARY STRESSES NEED TO RESPECT TAX WORKERS

OW172214 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Station reporter's commentary: "Reinforce Tax Regulations, Respect the Work of Tax Personnel"]

[Text] A national conference on taxation, which ended in Beijing today, has once again stressed the important role of taxation in our economic life.

The industrial and commercial tax is a major means of collecting funds for construction, regulating production activities, and exercising macro-economic control. Before the profit delivery system was changed to tax payments, the industrial and commercial tax constituted about half of the country's financial revenues. Since the change, funds collected by tax departments at various levels comprise at least 80 percent of the national revenues. However, it should be noted that the importance of taxation is not understood by all comrades, and the work of tax personnel does not recieve due respect in the community. A few enterprises still adopt an uncooperative att

A handful of self-employed traders and craftsmen even try every conceivable way to obstruct tax officials from performing their duty. Incidents of beating tax officials and attacking tax offices are reported from time to time. All these merit keen attention by government departments at all levels.

As taxation is an indispensable economic lever for the modernization drive, all members of the community should take tax work seriously, support and respect the work of tax personnel, and truthfully observe tax regulations. It should be clear to all enterprises and institutions as well as individuals that paying tax is a legal obligation and that officials who collect taxes are protected by law. In order to fire the enthusiasm of the country's 360,000 tax personnel for promptly collecting the taxes in full amount, party committees and government at various levels should show concern and make things easier for tax personnel.

VICE FINANCE MINISTER SEEKS STRICTER TAX POLICY

OW172213 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1119 GMT 17 Jul 86

[By reporter Tian Chuan]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Jul 86 (XINHUA) -- At the national conference on taxation which ended today, Tian Yinong, vice minister of finance, said: Right now, the excessive growth of state spending is a pressing problem. At present, we should pay full attention to curtailing outlays. However, curtailing outlays does not mean that we can relax our efforts to increase revenues.

Tian Yinong said: The revenues from tax departments at all levels during the first half of this year amounted to 92.2 billion yuan, marking an increase of 8.7 percent as compared with the same period last year. This is a significant achievement. However, there are still some weak links in our work. For example, tax collection is too lax. Tax evasion is a common practice. Revenues that should be paid to the state have not been collected in full. He called on all financial and tax revenue departments to take into consideration the overall situation in striking a balance between state revenues and expenditures. He said: We must not relax our efforts or fear difficulties in collecting taxes. We should work harder than ever before to collect all the taxes that should be collected.

In this regard, Tian Yinong called on all the departments concerned to do the following:

-- It is necessary to realize the current favorable situation and strengthen our confidence in fulfilling all the tasks.

-- It is essential to strengthen tax collection and collect all the taxes that should be collected. [passage omitted]

-- It is imperative to conduct a broad review of tax collection.

-- It is necessary to strictly control tax reductions or tax exemptions. To allow those enterprises with difficulties to reduce their tax payments is essential for invigorating our economy. However, we must not indiscriminately allow enterprises to reduce their tax payments. It is one-sided view to believe that in order to invigorate our economy, we must permit tax reductions and tax exemptions. It is hoped that various localities will check the rules which have been formulated on tax reductions and tax exemptions and put them in order.

LIAOWANG ON EXTRABUDGETARY CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION

HK170713 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 27, 7 Jul 86 p 6

[Article by Shi Baohua: "Resolutely Reduce and Control the Scale of Extrabudgetary Capital Construction"]

[Text] Following the strengthening and improvement of macroeconomic management, the scale of the state budgetary capital construction has gradually been brought under control. However, extrabudgetary capital construction is still growing rapidly. According to the statistics of relevant departments, the total amount of extrabudgetary capital construction in the first 5 months of this year increased by 15.9 percent over the corresponding period of last year, which itself registered a large increase over the previous year. This shows that if we only control the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction, the total scale of capital construction in the whole society will certainly continue to expand. The requirement set down in the Seventh 5-Year Plan on maintaining the scale of investment in fixed assets for this year and the next at approximately the level of 1985 will very probably fall through.

There are many reasons for the expansion of extrabudgetary capital construction. However, the most important reason is that some localities and departments fail to understand from the macroeconomic level the importance and urgency of controlling the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction. Some comrades hold that extrabudgetary construction projects "should not be so tightly controlled" and that "those having the ability should be allowed to develop the project." In truth, this is a misunderstanding. In the past few years, with the expansion of the decision-making power of the localities and enterprises and with the establishment and development of numerous economic forms, investment in extrabudgetary capital construction has been increasing substantially. At present its proportion of the nation's total investment in capital construction exceeds 60 percent. If this large proportion of investment should be allowed to expand continuously, it will inevitably intensify the shortages of social funds and materials, expand the contradiction between aggregate social supply and aggregate social demand, and affect the coordinated development of the national economy and the smooth implementation of economic policies. Moreover, investment in extrabudgetary capital construction is often restricted by the market economy. It seldom takes into consideration long-term and overall demands and is apt to make the mistake of carrying out unplanned or duplicated capital construction projects. If we do not strengthen management over the scale of extrabudgetary construction, it will inevitably exert an adverse influence on the ongoing readjustment of the project mix and industrial structure. Therefore, although extrabudgetary capital construction projects are not listed in the state budget or planning, the scale of these has a direct bearing on the overall situation of the national economy. In line with the principle of "acting according to the state's capability," we should make arrangements for extrabudgetary capital construction projects and strengthen macroeconomic management over them. At the moment, it is very necessary for the relevant departments to sort out the extrabudgetary capital construction projects now under way or planned for. With regard to those projects which are not needed macroeconomically or will not be needed in the near future and which require large investments, consume large amounts of materials, and yield poor economic results and social benefits, we should adopt various means such as persuasion, administrative intervention, and economic control to stop or delay their construction in order to maintain, as far as possible, the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction at a reasonable level.

The key to controlling the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction lies in satisfactorily managing and using extrabudgetary capital. In recent years the growth of extrabudgetary funds has played a positive role in invigorating the local and enterprise economy. However, what merits our attention is that many localities and enterprises are keen on using extrabudgetary funds in capital construction. For this reason, managing well the flow of extrabudgetary funds is crucial to controlling the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction. Only when we succeed in managing the "source" of funds can we control the "flow" of capital construction. The State Council recently issued a "circular on strengthening the management of extrabudgetary funds." The "circular" explicitly stipulates that it is necessary to bring extrabudgetary funds into line with the comprehensive financial credits plan and to carry out comprehensive balancing. It stresses the need to strictly control the use of extrabudgetary funds in extrabudgetary construction projects and to seek approval for extrabudgetary construction projects accordingto the procedure for capital construction projects. We should conscientiously carry out the spirit of the "circular" and manage well the source of extrabudgetary capital construction funds. Meanwhile, we should strengthen management over and strictly control extrabudgetary capital construction conducted in the form of raising funds.

In order to control the scale of extrabudgetary capital construction, it is also necessary to strictly enforce financial discipline. It should be noted that in striving for extrabudgetary capital construction projects, some localities and departments have adopted practices that do not conform to the financial system and even violate financial and economic discipline. Some units submit reports for technological transformation projects which are, in fact, capital construction projects. Some enterprises adopt various illegal practices such as indiscriminately squeezing out or apportioning costs, withholding profits that should be turned over to the state,, increasing without authorization the proportion of accumulation and retention of common funds by the enterprises,, and evading taxes to turn state revenue into extrabudgetary revenue in order to carry out extrabudgetary capital construction projects. Still others divert to capital construction projects circulating capital or other funds earmarked for special purposes. Financial, banking, and auditing departments at all levels should step up inspection and strengthen supervision over this and conscientiously rectify the problems that have been spotted. Those whose crimes are grave should be investigated and punished according to the law.

Controlling the scale of investment in fixed assets is an important component of macroeconomic management. Whether or not we can do this job satisfactorily has a direct bearing on whether or not we can smoothly carry out the economic reform and on whether or not the national economy can develop in a steady and balanced way. Leaders in all localities and enterprises should enhance their overall points of view and work in close coordination in order to do a good job of this important mater.

DENG XIAOPING'S SON CALLS ON YUNNAN FRONTIER GUARDS

HK160453 [Editorial Report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1315 GMT on 14 July, during its regular "Night News" program, shows an 1-minute film clip on "Deng Pufang, director in chief of the China Welfare Fund for the Handicapped, calling on PLA commanders and fighters on the front line of the frontier region in Yunnan recently."

The film clip shows Deng Pufang, in a wheelchair, reaching "the highest peak of Laoshan" with the assistance of several PLA soldiers; and arriving at an unidentified PLA forward position and shaking hands with several soldiers there. The films ends with shots of Deng visiting the Kunming General Hospital of the Chengdu Military Region and speaking with several "commanders and fighters who were wounded in action during the Laoshan-Zheyinshan campaign," in a ward of the hospital. The announcer states that Deng Pufang "urged that the wounded commanders and fighters just get better and do not worry, and encouraged them to get well soon and to make new contributions to the party and the people."

YU QIULI ADDRESSES MEETING ON ARMY REFORM

OW061044 Beijing XINHUA in English 1041 GMT 6 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 6 (XINHUA) -- Soldiers should support the ongoing reform in various fields while carrying out the reform of the Army itself, said a senior Chinese Army leader.

Yu Qiuli, director of the General Political Department of the People's Liberation Army, told a meeting here that the Chinese Army has inaugurated important reforms in military training, political work, logistics, scientific research for national defense and military education. But, many important issues have yet to be probed.

He said that the reform of the Army, which is part of the nationwide reform program, aims at modernizing the Army and strengthening its combat capability.

The Army should learn the experiences of the rural and urban reform, but cannot transplant them, he noted.

Since the reform is a deep social change and something new, Yu added, problems may well arise in the process due to lack of experience. Therefore, it is necessary to educate the soldiers and help them have a proper understanding of the situation.

YANG DEZHI ON IMPROVING QUALITY OF SOLDIERS

HK170849 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0646 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Report: "Yang Dezhi Says That China Attaches Importance to Improving the Quality of Soldiers"]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- In the course of its structural reform to streamline and reorganize itself, the Chinese Armed Forces attach importance to improving its the quality of its soldiers in order to lay a sound foundation for the modernization and regularization of Chinese forces.

Recently, the PLA General Staff Headquarters held an all-army conference on work related to soldiers to study the question of how to strive to do a good job of recruiting soldiers and improving the quality of soldiers in order to meet the needs of the new situation of the modernization of the Chinese forces.

Chief of General Staff Yang Dezhi said at the conference that doing the work related to soldier's welfare and improving the quality of soldiers is of great significance in improving the combat effectiveness of Chinese forces.

"Soldiers are the foundation of forces." Through streamlining army reorganization the number of Chinese soldiers has been reduced, but the requirements for the quality of soliders have been heightened. Improving soldiers' quality is a basic task in the development of Chinese forces.

Chief of General Staff Yang pointed out that our country is very big and has very plentiful sources of soldiers, which make it entirely possible to ensure the qulity of our soldiers. He called on the conscription departments at all levels to recruit soldiers in strict accordance with the requirements. We should encourage parents to send their children to become soldiers and youths to vie with one another to join the forces.

Over the past few years, China has carried out a reform in its conscription system to switch to the method of relying mainly on localities for sources of soldiers and heightened the requirements and qualifications for new soldiers. This has played an important role in ensuring the quality of soliders. Many young people have given up the opportunity of being recruited in factories, and some have even given up relatively high wages and fine living conditions to voluntarily join the forces. According to statistics, the number of new soliders sent last year by China's over 2,560 counties and cities and who came to join the forces on their own accunted for 89.3 percent of the total conscription quota. Of the new soldiers, quite a few had been awarded. Some had been model and advanced workers. New soldiers with an education level at and above junior middle school accounted for 96.3 percent of the total. After these new soldiers joined the forces, they studied diligently to pursue progress, observed discipline, and very quickly adapted to the requirements of the life of our modernized forces. Some fighters were sent to fight at the border front in Yunnan soon after joining the forces. Very many of them have displayed bravery and achieved merit in the fighting.

LI PENG AT SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS CEREMONY

OW081608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 8 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 8 (XINHUA) -- China's satellite communication network went into operation today providing telephone, telegram, television, radio and facsimile services.

"This is a great step forward in the modernization of China's communications system," Vice-Premier Li Peng said at an opening ceremony at Beijing's ground station. "Satellite communication can spread economic development throughout the country's vast territory and to many isolated regions."

The network uses transmission devices rented or bought from Intelsat, the international telecommunications earth satellite organization.

It consists of five ground stations in Beijing and four provincial or regional capitals: Urumqi, Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region; Hohhot, Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region; Lhasa, Tibetan Autonomous Region; and Guangzhou, Guangdong Province. The Guangzhou station will open later this year.

Altogether, the system will link Beijing with the northwest, north central, far west and southeast parts of the country.

China "should build more ground stations of all sizes over the next five years" to promote satellite communications, Li said.

Via the network, direct dial long-distance telephone, telegram and fascimile services are now available between Beijing and Urumqi, Hohhot and Lhasa.

Li noted that much of the network was built with imported equipment. But in the future, he said, "we must use equipment built in China to cut production costs and to develop our own satellite communications technology."

The network has also enabled the Beijing ground station to transmit nationwide programs of the central television station as well as mathematics teaching programs prepared by the State Education Commission.

Beginning January 1, the network will also carry an economic information program transmitted by the Beijing ground station, according to Yang Taifang, minister of posts and telecommunications.

GREATER ATTENTION TO AGRICULTURE URGED

HK161116 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Solidify the Foundation of Agriculture, Raise the Status of Agriculture"]

[Text] The successes achieved in China's agriculture in recent years have attracted widespread attention. From 1979 to 1985, grain output increased annually at an average of over 30 billion jin, the total output value of agriculture increased at an average of over 10 percent a year, and the peasants' average per capita net income reached 400 yuan, around 300 percent of the 1978 figure, thus putting an end to the slow progress of the rural economy over the decades. However, we cannot neglect exposed or latent problems because of the favorable turn in agriculture. In 1985, grain output decreased by 50 million jin, a 7 percent drop from the previous year. Although it was still bumper harvest year and is not surprising and will never lead to a grain crisis, it sends out a warning: The foundation of agriculture must be solidified.

Let us make a rough analysis.

China has a population of 1 billion. Its arable land is decreasing and its population is increasing steadily. In order to maintain the average per capita grain of 800 jin, the output of grain during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period should reach 900 billion jin, to say nothing of the future. This means that grain output in the next 5 years should increase at an average of 30 billion jin annually. This target, set from a high starting point, is more or less the same as that of the Sixth 5-Year Plan. The current situation is that the new factors for increasing output are limited, while those that adversely affect the continuous development of agriculture are numerous.

The system of contracted responsibility with payment linked to output implemented a few years ago released the constrained productive forces. [paragraph continues]

In the days to come, the responsibility system will still have vitality. However, its influential role over the old production relations will inevitably be weakened.

Regarding the conditions for production, the basic water conservancy facilities of some localities are not yet consolidated and some projects have been neglected for years. Owing to the requisitioning of land for construction purposes, the irrigated area newly increased every year cannot offset the decreasing area and the irrigated area still remains at the 1978 level. The aggregate power capacity of China's farm machines is 280 million horsepower, which mainly covers a remarkable increase in transport and small machines. However, the level of farm machinery has declined. In 1985, the area plowed by tractor dropped 15.9 percent from 1980 and the sown area dropped 19.2 percent. Due to the price increase and short supply of the means of production including diesel oil and chemical fertilizers which resulted in an increase of costs and a decrease of profits, some peasants carried out extensive cultivation, made less investment, and slackened their efforts in grain production because of the low exchange value of grain. Moreover, the impeded circulation channels and inferior quality of the labor forces engaged in agriculture are also factors leading to the decline of production. If we cannot put an end to this state of affairs, serious problems may arise within the next 3 to 5 years. In the course of industrialization, the agriculture of many countries declined. We should take this as a lesson.

Consolidation of the foundation of agriculture is related to the coordinated operation of the national economy as well as the success or failure of reform. As the rural areas are now carrying out the second stage of reform, we must vigorously develop commodity production, establish a fine market regulation system, and make the peasants prosperous as quickly as possible. If the question of grain is merely confined to feeding and clothing the people and if the production of grain develops slowly or even declines, it will be difficult to put an end to the situation of 800 million peasants depending on land for a living, to raise the commodity rate of farm products, to realize the objective of transfering 100 million peasants to nonagricultural trades by the end of the century, and to readjust the production setup. If the peasants' income cannot increase simultaneously with that of workers and if the gap between the two further widens, it will inevitably affect the ongoing urban reform. While carrying out urban reform, the cities should break with the "castle" economy and cater to the needs of the vast rural areas. The 800 million peasants constitute an extensive, latent consumption market. If the purchasing power of the 800 million peasants is low and their ability to buy manufactured goods is limited, the reproduction of industry will also be affected. Without the invigoration of agriculture, it would be impossible to invigorate industry.

Naturally, the solidification of the foundation of agriculture was not put forward under the state of public anxiety. It is not an outdated concept or the beaten track. Instead, it is a reunderstanding of the foundation of agriculture after setting forth a new objective from a higher stage. In the past, the stress of agricultural foundation was put on "taking grain as the key link." When the foundation of agriculture is stressed today, we should maintain the steady growth of agriculture, promote the all-round development of commodity production, and lay a foundation for the prosperity of the state and people. [paragraph continues]

Therefore, the solidification of the foundation of agriculture does not merely mean feeding the people. We should further eliminate the idea of small-scale peasant economy and the easily contented mentality of small farmers, solidify the foundation of agriculture by means of policies, science and technology, and investment and with an enterprising spirit, create a new situation of governments and trades at all levels and 800 million peasants attaching great importance to agriculture, and promote the developoment of agriculture to a new level.

DENG LIQUN TOURS JIANGXI; BRIEFED BY WAN SHAOFEN

OW131726 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 12 Jul 86

[Excerpts] While inspecting Jiangxi, Deng Liqun, member of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat, said: Our cadres and the broad masses of the people should be made to preserve and enhance the glorious traditions of the revolutionary period and to further exert themselves in intensifying the building of a spiritual civilization and promoting the building of a material civilization. In the same environment and locality, a sound state of mind leads to great achievements, while an unsound state of mind hampers work progress.

Comrade Deng Liqun inspected Jiangxi from 22 June to 11 July. Wan Shaofen, secretary of the provincial party committee, presided over a meeting of the provincial party committee's Standing Committee to deliver a work report to Comrade Deng Liqun. Liu Fangren, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee, and (Wang Taibhua), member of the provincial party committee, and (Wang Taihua), member of the provincial party committee's Standing Committee and head of the provincial party committee's Propaganda Department, accompanied Comrade Deng Liqun on his inspection tour.

Disregarding travel fatigue and braving the intense summer heat, Comrade Deng Liqun visited factories and rural areas during his inspection of Jiangxi, mingling with cadres, workers, and peasants at the grass-roots level in order to understand the people's conditions through cordial talks with them and through investigation and study. He traveled more than 2,000 km in 19 days, successively inspecting the seven cities and prefectures of Nanchang, Yingtan, Jingdezhen, Juijiang, Jian, Ganzhou, and Pingxiang, and 14 other counties and cities, including Xingguo and Ruijin.

Comrade Deng Liqun noted: Jiangxi's residents made major contributions both in the revolutionary war period and in peacetime construction. It is necessary to preserve and enhance the glorious traditions of the revolutionary period and to make dedicated efforts in bringing success to the socialist modernization drive.

While inspecting the CYL reclamation farm, Comrade Deng Liqun lauded the veteran CYL members who conducted strenuous pioneering work in the old days as people with communist ideas. [passage omitted]

During his inspection tour, Comrade Deng Liqun repeatedly stressed the need to effectively improve the quality of the younger generation and to vigorously step up ideological and and political work. [passage omitted]

Comrade Deng Liqun called on teachers, students, and employees at colleges and universities, secondary technical schools, classrooms, dormitories, and mess halls on several occasions, and sought the opinions of professors and experts. [passage omitted]

During his inspection tour, Comrade Deng Liqun made thorough investigations into the work of the party committees after enterprises had implemented the plant director responsibility system. He noted: Practice has born out the plant director responsiblity system, showing its advantages to the operations of enterprises and its greater benefits to the work of the party committees of those enterprises. [passage omitted]

While inspecting southern Jiangxi and Jinggang Shan, old revolutionary base areas, Comrade Deng Liqun, in a show of deep concern for the people in old revolutionary base areas, visited villages and households to understand the people's suffering and to discuss ways to cure and eliminate poverty with the people. [passage omitted]

ULANHU ADDRESSES REGIONAL AUTONOMY LAW FORUM

OW092153 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1302 GMT 9 Jul 86

[By reporter Chen Yan]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jul (XINHUA) -- Regional autonomy for minority nationalities is an important political system and the law on such autonomy is one of the basic laws in China, said Vice President Ulanhu today at a forum attended by minority study groups to review the implementation of the law on regional autonomy for minorities. he said: To ensure earnest implementation of the law is a responsibility of not only autonomous regionalk governments but also state organs at all levels. While ordinary people should study this law, cadres should all the more do so. Leading cadres, in particular, should play an exemplary role in studying and enforcing the law.

Ulanhu said: In view of our inadequate legal system in the past, the government has, in recent years, called for efforts to promote construction and improve the legal system at the same time in order to ensure smooth progress in socialist construction. In areas inhabited by ethnic minorities, where the economy and culture are relatively backward, efforts should be made to develop production to enable the people to become well off, and to publicize and implement the Constitution and the autonomy law for improving the legal system. He said: After a law is drawn up, we must first have the people study and familiarize themselves with the law, then do things according to it, and finally improve it in the course of its implementation. It must be clearly pointed out that when a law is adopted, it has binding force and must be observed in all circumstancews. It must not be changed at will.

Ulanhu said: It is wrong to regard the autonomy law as a matter concerning only areas inhabited by minorities. Higher government organs shoulder an important task of ensuring the autonomy law's implementation and the right of autonomous regional governments to exercise their autonomy. It is an unshirkable duty of higher government organs to strengthen the leadership over and step up assistance to autonomous regions of minority nationalities.

Ulanhu said: Higher government organs should respect and earnestly create the conditions for autonomous regional governments to exercise the right of autonomy prescribed in the Constitution and the autonomy law. Without the assistance and support of higher government authorities, it would be difficult for autonomous regional governments to exercise the right of autonomy and develop their economy and culture. Therefore, higher government authorities should pay close attention to autonomous regions of ethnic minorities and take the initiative to conduct fact-finding studies and investigations there in order to thoroughly understand the conditions and problems of the ethnic minorities and map out specific policies and effective measures to guide and help them in accordance with the actual situation there. So long as the whole nation takes concerted action, the autonomy law for minority nationalities adopted by the NPC with the collective wisdom of the people will surely be effectively enforced.

Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and chairman of the NPC Nationalities Committee, also spoke at the forum. He said: Since it formally came into force on 1 October 1984, the autonomy law has played a major role in promoting political, economic, and cultural construction of autonomous regions of minorities, and in enhancing the socialist relations of equality, unity, and mutual assistance among nationalities. In order to enforce the autonomy law in all fields, it is necessary to further work out details for rules and regulations concerning the law, primarily including regulations governing the autonomy for autonomous regions of minorities and rules for higher state organs to implement the autonomy law. He pointed out: Since the autonomy law was promulgated, all autonomous regions of minorities in the country have intensified the effort to formulate regulations governing the autonomy, and a number of multinationality provinces with autonomous counties and prefectures of minorities have also mapped out regulations for implementing the autonomy law, while State Council departments concerned have drawn up a few rules. All of these have facilitated the implementation of the autonomy law.

At the forum, members of the study groups of minority nationalities from various parts of the country reviewed achievements and shortcomings in implementiung the autonomy law in their respective regions over the past nearly 2 years. They said that the promulgation and implementation of the autonomy law has given a strong impetus to the work in all fields. However, there are problems caused by officials of some localities and departments who have failed to understand the importance of the autonomy law and to do things according to the law. They called on all localities and, in particular, leading organs at all levels to pay keen attention to such problems so that the autonomy law will be more effectively enforced.

The forum was sponsored by the NPC Nationalities Committee. Yu Wen, vice chairman of the committee, chaired the forum. Officials from the United Front Work Department of the CPC Central Committee, the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, and other departments concerned attended the forum.

XIAMEN CURBS EXACTION OF CHARGES FROM JOINT VENTURES

HK161524 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0634 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Xiamen, 16 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The question of exacting charges from Chinese-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises, and foreign-owned enterprises, unacceptable to foreign businessmen, has attracted the attention of the Xiamen city government.

There are now 126 Chinese-foreign ventures, cooperative enterprises, and foreign-owned enterprises in the Xiamen special economic zone. These enterprises are discontent with the heavy charges exacted by certain departments under all sorts of pretexts. For example, the water and electric fees of these enterprises are not collected according to the actual amount consumed, but according to the caliber of waterpipes and load of transformers. These enterprises had to pay charges 100 percent higher than the local state-owned enterprises for installing a telephone set and 500 percent higher for monthly telephone fees. Moreover, there were also innumerable charges of every description.

Local government officials say that the exaction of charges has lead to the abnormality of reduction of taxes and increasing number of charges. It has offset the preferential treatment granted by the government to these enterprises. The question is that some responsible departments have defined the relevant laws and regulations promulgated by the state concerning Chinese-foreign joint ventures. Now this tendency must be curbed.

The Xiamen city government organized an investigation group not long ago to make an all-round investigation of the exaction of charges. The government called on various units to examine and readjust the unreasonable charges imposed on the Chinese-foreign ventures, cooperative enterprises, and foreign-owned enterprises, and adopted the following three measures: 1) If the unreasonable charges are made by the higher authorities, complaints must be made and exemption be requested. Unreasonable charges which are clear and obvious to all must be checked resolutely and a report should be submitted to the relevant departments. 2) The relevant companies and bureaus should check the various items and charges stipulated by Xiamen authorities and submit a report to the responsible departments for examination. The unreasonable charges must be canceled, the prices increased must be lowered, and the repeated items must be readjusted. 3) From now on, no department or responsible person has the right to levey charges on these enterprises. Newly-established charges and prices will be null and void without the approval of the city government.

It has been reported that the Xiamen city government has decided to abolish the collection of land royalities in the Huli industrial zone.

SHANDONG HOLDS FORUM TO IMPROVE SOCIAL ORDER

SK170930 Jian DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 2 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] The provincial forum on political and legal work sponsored by the provincial CPC Committee in Qingdao called for ceaselessly and deeply waging the struggle against serious criminals, strengthening overall improvement in social order, and striving to realize a stable turn for the better in social order on the basis of notably improving social order.

After 5 days in session the forum ended on 1 July. Attending the forum were secretaries of the city and prefectural CPC Committees in charge of the political and legal work, and responsible comrades of the political and legal commissions, public security departments, courts, procuratorates, judicial departments, security departments, and provincial-level departments concerned.

The forum held that the province has basically maintained a stable social order on the basis of notably improving the social order thanks to the fact that all localities have sustainedly and deeply strengthened the struggle against serious criminals and have implemented measures for overall improvement in social order since the beginning of this year. However, we must understand that the improvement of social order is not consolidated enough -- a considerable number of major and appalling cases still remain, criminal activities run rampant in some localities, and some ludicrous tendencies that have been stamped out in society for a long time are again arising.

The forum pointed out that since 1986 is the key year to grasp politcial and legal work, the CPC committees, the governments, and the political and legal departments should conscientiously grasp the work in the latter half of this year, and continue to wage the struggle against serious crimnals, serious economic criminals in particular. We should first resolutely and second correctly deal blows to serious criminals. We should concentrate main efforts and superior forces on grasping major and appalling cases, greatly make up our minds to carefully carry out the work, smash all obstacles, and investigate and handle cases in accordance with the law.

The forum put forward that while strictly dealing blows to serious criminals, the masses in the urban and rural areas throughout the province should carry out the struggle against thieves and those who sabotage social order. The masses should be mobilized to exposed and inform against criminals or to urge them to surrender to the police. The criminals who surrender to the police within the fixed time shall be handled leniently in accordance with the law. The criminals who engage in criminal activities to the neglect of the against serious criminals should be firmly dealt with. Habitual offenders and recidivists should be firmly punished.

The forum stressed that to realize as stable turn for the better in social order, we must strengthen the overall improvement in social order; pay attention to strengthening the consolidation and construction of the grass-roots mass organizations of self-government, such as public security, mediation, and civil adminstrative organizations; deeply carry out education on popularizing the law; and make efforts to mobilize the masses to prevent the occurrence of criminal cases and to improve social order.

HENAN SECRETARY SPEAKS AT PARTY SCHOOL GRADUATION

HK170251 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 16 July, the provincial Party School held this year's graduation ceremony. Secretary of the provincial CPC Committee Yang Xizong attended the ceremony. In connection with the province's actual conditions, he spoke on such issues as further emancipating our minds, carrying out reforms in an in-depth way, doing well in the province's economic work with everyone's coordination, working hard for accomplishing this year's tasks, strengthening unity, improving work and party style, and doing our work well.

Comrade Yang Xizong pointed out: In order to carry out reforms in an in-depth manner, we must continue to emancipate our minds and implement the central authorities' line, principles and policies in an innovative way. This is most important. To a certain extent and in certain areas, we should adopt flexible measures for continuously developing reforms in-depth way, while suiting our measures to actual conditions. When judging the flexibility of the measures and correctness of reforms, we must handle three issues well: First, they must not violate the spirit of the central authorities' general policy; second, they must help develp production, improve economic results, and increase social wealth so that both the state and people can benefit by the measures; and third, nobody is allowed to take advantage of office for personal gain.

On economic work, Comrade Yang Xizong pointed out: Our comrades must thoroughly understand the guiding ideology that the central task of the party is to do well in economic construction. The work in various areas must focus on the four modernizations and the development of economics, that there will be a common practice that the whole party engages in the four modernizations and economic work.

He also expounded profoundly on drawing lessons from Jiangsu and Zhejiang's experience in developing their economies by referring to the province's actual conditions.

On the issues of unity and party style, Comrade Yang Xizong said: The key to promoting unity among cadres rests with unity among members of the leading group. Leading cadres must act strictly in accordance with the party's principles. They should always take the overall situation into consideration, and should trust, respect, support and understand each other. The should handle issues of correcting party style well, hitting at crimes, as well as relations between the act of punishing someone for commiting crimes and the act of carrying out reforms and developing the economy. Leadership at all levels must take the lead in supporting reforms and developing the economy, as well as playing an exemplary role in safeguarding the party's unity and correcting party style.

In his conclusion, Comrade Yang Xizong hoped that the graduating comrades would continue their studies while engaging in their work, be bold in emancipating their minds, stand in the forefront of reforms, and resolutely suport and safeguard reforms. In the course of economic construction, they should give play to their roles and strive for greater achievements.

HU JINTAO AT GUIZHOU PREFECTURE LEADERS MEETING

HK151216 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 13 Jul 86

[Excerpts] With a view to summing up the work in the first half of this year, analyzing the situation, finding discrepancies, defining the orientation, working out measures, and further mobilizing all cadres and people of all nationalities throughout the province to unite as one, to work hard, and to strive to fulfill all quotas for the whole year, from 8 to 12 July, the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee and provincial people's government held a meeting of the prefectural, autonomous prefectural, and city CPC Committee secretaries, commissioners, autonomous prefectural governors, and city mayors.

At the meeting, Comrade Wang Chaowen conveyed the important spirit of the central authorities [as heard]. Comrade Hu Jintao spoke about the situation in the work of the whole province in the first half of this year and the views on the work in the second half of the year. [words indistinct] Comrades Wang Chaowen and Ding Tingmo put forward demands on and made arrangements for the economic work and the work of party rectification and of straightening out party style.

The meeting held: Over the past 6 months, our province has made arrangements for and embarked on all aspects of work, centered on the implementation of Comrade Hu Yaobang's instructions while he was inspecting Guizhou and on the tasks put forward by the fifth plenary meeting of the fifth provincial CPC Committee. The overall situation can be summarized into two sentences: We have advanced in special difficulties. We have developed in persisting in reform. Specifically speaking, the work in the first half of the year roughly dealt with the following five aspects:

1. We unremittingly struggled against serious natural diasters, including drought, and strived for a good agricultural harvest.

2. With reform as the motive force, we began continuously changing the situation in the dropping of industrial production in the same period last year.

3. We made a new step forward in the work of helping the poor.

4. We scored marked achievements in straightening out party style.

5. We made new progress in building spiritual civilization.

In a word, after the concerted efforts of the people of all nationalities throughout the province, achievements in the building of two civilizations in the first half of this year were scored. [passage omitted]

The meeting emphatically put forward the following several problems to which attention should be paid in the work in the second half of the year:

1. We must carry forward the spirit of continuing to fight in spite of all setbacks and of pressing foward in the face of difficulties and trying in every possible way to fulfill the quotas for economic and social development for this year.

2. We must carry forward the realistic spirit and the spirit of blazing new trails and continue to develop reform in depth.

In reform of the economic structural throughout the province in the second half of this year, we must adhere to the spirit of consolidation, digestion, replenishment, and improvement and continue to grasp the following several points well.

First, we must grasp well the digestion and implementation of the existing policies of reform. At present, the focal points of the implementation and digestion of the existing policies of reform must be placed on the following two aspects:

1. It is necessary to seriously implement the enterprise system of the factory director assuming full responsibility, the system of economic contracted responsibilities, and various forms of the system of distribution according to work.

2. It is essential to seriously implement the provisions of the relevant policies on strengthening lateral economic ties.

Second, proceeding from realities, we mut be bold in carrying out exploration. The pilot projected of reform of the urban economic structure and the pilot project of reform of the county comprehensive structure have now progressed slowly and there are many problems. We must be determined, firmly grasp the good opportunity in the second half of the year, make concerted efforts, and strive to make a breakthrough. Reform of the political structure includes reform of the system of cadre personnel. We must also carry out new exploration.

Third, it is imperative to create a fine social and political environment for reform. [passage omitted]

3. We must seriously take such measures as are suitable to local conditions andd strengthen our province's stamina for economic development. The whole province and all places must correctly understand the factors that may restrict economic development during th Seventh 5-Year Plan period. We must get a clear picture of our province's strategy of economic development during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period so that we can reduce blindless in working out our annual plan in the future, use our limited financial and material resources where they are needed most, and obtain the best economic results.

4. We must pay attention to linking the exercise of leadership with grasping the grass-roots work and succeed in building the two civilizations. In view of this, giving play to the exemplary role of the leading organs must be integrated with strengthening the building of the grass-roots.

NORTH REGION

RURAL BEIJING PROMOTES PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW160955 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 2313 GMT 15 Jul 86

[By reporter Yan Zhenguo]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- Based on the actual situation among party members, rural Beijing has given first priority to ideological education at all stages of party rectification and achieved satisfactory results in rectifying party organizations.

Rural Beijing launched an experimental project of rectifying party organizations in groups and by stages in May 1985. Prior to carrying out the project, the guiding group for party rectification in rural Beijing conducted an investigation among party members and found that there were two major peculiarities among party members in rural Beijing: 74.6 percent of them were new party members who had joined the party after 1966, and 70.6 percent of the party members were not well educated, having received only junior middle school education at the most. As a result, their thinking, conduct, and organization could not meet the party's needs during the new period in many ways. Thus, the party organizations in rural Beijing made efforts to educate their members with a program that included party lessons, reports by heroes and models, exhibitions, exchanges of experience, home visits, heart-to-heart talks, and regular party activities.

First, they educated the party members on the party's objectives. They realized that reduced communist conviction and weak party spirit were conspicuous expressions of certain party members' low ideological and political consciousness, and that it was necessary to repudiate the influence of such notions as that "communism is but a vague illusion: and "it is a loss to be a party member." Thus, the guiding group organized the party members to study documents and discuss problems over and over again. The education helped the vast number of party members understand that serving the people wholeheartedly is the party's basic objective, and that their immediate obligation is to get involved in reform and actively guide the masses to work hard and become affluent.

Another measure the guiding group took was to educate the party members on the current situation and current policies. With reforms gradually proceeding in the rural areas, it became increasingly clear that certain party members were unable to keep pace with developments. Some party members erroneously believed that "cadres supervised and peasants worked for the sake of money," and some party members even considered reform a "retrogression." To solve this problem, the party organizations in rural Beijing, using such means as comparing the present and the past and studying theory, helped party members realize that reforms were bringing about an unprecedentedly excellent situation, that the situation showed that China was entering into a new stage with great historical strides, and that the party's current policies were in line with basic Marxist principles and China's actual situation. Consequently, the party members indicated that the study benefitted them a great deal and helped them distinguish right from wrong and understand the need to support reform and uphold policies.

Another important measure rural Beijing took to rectify the party organizations was education on party regulations and discipline. The guiding group held that ignorance of party regulations and lax party discipline were common problems among some party members, and that unless these problems were resolved they would affect the progress of reform and the gratifying situation.

Thus, they educated the party members on the importance of abiding by party regulations and enforcing party discipline, and guided them to study the regulations in the light of the actual situation. Meanwhile, they also combined the study of party regulations with rectification of misconduct within the party, thus making the study relevant and giving party members the opportunity to correct their mistaken concepts. The positive and negative examples on party discipline and regulations distributed in Mentougou District in the course of study educated many party members, prompting them to take the initiative in examining their misconduct of abusing power to seek personal gains.

NI ZHIFU MEETS WITH DPRK TRADE UNIONS DELEGATION

SK160631 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] Yesterday evening, Ni Zhifu, chairman of the All-China Federation of Trade unions, cordially met with the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea delegation led by Kang Chong-pal, vice chairman of the General Federation of Trade Unions of Korea, at a guesthouse. He warmly welcomed the Korean guests' visit.

Amid a cordial and friendly atmosphere, the guests and the host jointly reviewed the great friendship and militant unity cemented with the blood of the Chinese and Korean peoples, and unanimously expressed their determination to further strengthen mutual exchange between the Chinese and Korean trade unions, and to develop friendly relations among the trade unions of the two countries. Also present on the occasion were Wang Shenxiang, secretary of the Secretariat of the all-China Federation of Trade Unions, and Pan Yiqing, chairman of the Tianjin Municipal Trade Union Council.

The Korean friends arrived in our municipality yesterday. The delegation visited the No 2 carpet plant, the ancient cultural street, and the Nanshi food street, and decided to leave Tianjin and return to Beijing today.

NI ZHIFU ATTENDS PARTY FOUNDING ANNIVERSARY RALLY

SK170213 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO Chinese 1 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] Yesterday evening, a literary and art soiree was held at the municipal No 1 Workers Cultural Palace to warmly celebrate the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC.

Leading comrades of the municipality, including Ni Zhifu, Wu Zhen, Nie Bichu, Zhnag Zaiwang, Yang Jingheng, Wang Shudong, Ji Zenghui, He Guomo, Chen Yiyi, Li Huifen, Bai Hua, Zhao Jun, Xu Ming, Fan Quan, Han Tianyao, Liu Jingeng, Xiao Yuan, Huang Difei, Wnag Yusheng, Yang Tianshou, Yu Fujing, and Zheng Wantong, and Tan Songping, a veteran comrade, and more than 2,000 representatives of party members and personages from all walks of life watched the performance.

Some professional and amateur art ensembles of Tianjin presented a chorus entitled "With the Communist Party There Would Be No New China," female solos entitled "In Memory of Yanan," and "My Motherland," as well as some colorful programs which included dancing, and a suite of songs and dance to warmly eulogize the great achievements of the CPC.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY AT MEETING ON PARTY STYLE

SK170923 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] The provincial meeting to exchange experiences in correcting party style with the participation of leaders of all prefectures, cities, and provincial-level units was held in Harbin on 16 July. Attending the meeting were more than 3400 people, including secretaries of the prefectural and city CPC committees and discipline inspection commissions, heads of the prefectural and city party rectification offices, secretaries of the leading party groups of the provincial-level departments, commissions, general offices and bureaus, and heads of the discipline inspection groups of the provincial-level departments, commissions, general offices and bureaus.

At today's meeting, Xie Yong, deputy secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, relayed the guidelines of the forum on discipline inspection work participated in by eight provinces, regions, and municipalities in north and northeast China sponsored by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission. (Zhao Da), head of the party rectification office under the provincial CPC Committee, relayed the guidelines of the meeting of the Central Party Rectification Guidance Committee held in Zhengzhou. Seven units, including the Harbin and Mudanjiang City CPC Committees, the leading party group of the provincial construction bank the Qiqihar, Qitaihe, and Shuangyashan City CPC Committees, and the provincial general publication office, made speeches to introduce their typical examples and experiences in strictly and earnestly correcting party style, consolidating the achievements in party rectification, investigating and handling major and appalling cases, correcting unhealthy practices of trade, promoting reform, and facilitating the progress in the work in all fields.

Attending today's meeting were leading comrades of the provicial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial CPPCC Committee, and the provincial Discipline Inspectin Commission, including Sun Weiben, Hou Jie, Li Genshen, Zhou Wenhua, Wang Zhao,, Zhang Lin, Lu Guang, and Wang Fei.

LIAONING COMPLETES TRANSFER OF ARMED FORCES DEPARTMENTS

SK130320 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpts] The rally to transfer People's Armed Forces departments to the local organizational systems, which concluded on 25 June, indicated that our province has satisfactorily accomplished the work of transferring people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system.

Since the province began to carry out the transfer work in accordance with the unified plan of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission, the People's Armed Forces departments at the provincial, city, and county (district) levels have successively held meetings on the transfer work, have set up leading groups in charge of the work, and have made specific arrangements for carrying out the work. The provincial military district organized and sent nine work groups to conduct investigations and study and to give instructions on the transfer work to the People's Armed Forces departments of various localities. With the concerted efforts of the party committees, governments, and Army units at all levels, the province has accomplished the transfer work in a fast and smooth manner and has scored high results in it on the prermise that the localities, Army units, and People's Armed Forces departments were satisfied with the work. [passage omitted]

On 24 and 25 June, the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial government and the provincial military district jointly held a rally to transfer the People's Armed Forces departments to the local organizational system at the Beijing Soldiers' Club. Principal party, government, and army leaders from various counties (cities, districts, and enterprises) throughout the province and principal leaders of the People's Armed Forces departments attended the rally. Sun Qi, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; Zuo Kun, vice governor of the province; Wang Youhan [3769 2589 5060], commander of the provincial military district; and Liu Dongfan, political commissar of the provincial military district, delivered speeches at the rally. In their speeches they reviewed the major contributions and basic working experiences of the province's People's Armed Forces departments over the past 35 years and placed new expectations and demands on the local party committees, governments, and People's Armed Forces departments.

Respectively on behalf of the grass-roots party committees and the grass-roots People's Armed Forces departments, Lu Bo [4151 3134], secretary of the Shenhe District CPC Committee in Shenyang City, and Liu Wennian [0491 2429 1628], director of the Faku County People's Armed Forces Department, delivered speeches. Leaders of the Shenyang Military Region, including Commander Liu Jingsong, visited the cadres of the People's Armed Forces departments and the party, government, and Army leaders participating in the rally and also posed for a photo with them. Liu Jingsong encouraged the vast number of cadres of the People's Armed Forces departments to maintain and carry forward the fine tradtions of the People's Armed Forces, to ceaselessly study the new situation and solve new problems, to strive to create a new situation in their work, and to selflessly dedicate themselves to the construction of the armed forces of the party and the people. Song Keda, political commissar of the Shenyang Military Region, read the letter of the party committee of the Shenyang Military Region to all comrades of the People's Armed Forces departments of the counties (cities, districts, and enterprises) in the three provinces of northeast China.

Also attending the rally were party, government, and Army leaders, including Zhu Dunfa, Li Zemin, Peng Xiangsong, Zhang Tiejun, Nan Qixiang and Gao Xiasheng.

HONG KONG-EEC TEXTILES AGREEMENT EXPECTED QUICKLY

HK170939 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 17 Jul 86 p 1

[By Cynthia Suen]

[Text] The second round of Hong Kong-European Community textiles negotiations -- originally scheduled for September -- will begin in Brussels today.

The fact that the talks are to take place ahead of the plan suggests the two sides intend to conclude an early agreement.

The Textiles Advisory Board (Textab), as well as the Secretary for Trade and Industry Eric Ho, flew to Brussels earlier this week to join the Hong Kong negotiation team -- further indicating that an agreement might be close at hand.

"It is likely that Hong Kong wants to settle the two major textiles agreements before the renewal of the Multi-Fibre Arrangement in order to give more security and certainty to the trade," said Mr Lawrence Mills, director-general of the Federation of Hong Kong Industries.

Two weeks ago, Hong Kong concluded a six-year bilateral textiles agreement with the United States. The terms were more restrictive than those in the previous agreement, but Hong Kong trade officials stressed that the signing of the agreement gave textiles exports more stability in the few years to come.

But while the U.S. has been taking a rather protectionist stand since last year, the EC this time is relatively more open.

It had earlier issued a mandate which promised no cutbacks on quotas already in the hands of exporting countries.

However, the growth rate allowed for Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea and Macao -- the so-called dominant suppliers -- was significantly lower than other lesser suppliers.

An annual growth rate of 0-1 percent was provided for eight sensitive items exported by the big four, whereas others were allowed a growth rate of 4-6 percent.

Automatic transfer of quotas between countries within the community was allowed for major suppliers from 1-6 percent over 4 years, but 2-12 percent was provided for other suppliers.

PRE-1949 BRITISH RAIL-BOND DEBT WILL REMAIN

HK170940 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 17 Jul 86 p 1

[By Eva To]

[Text] An early solution to China's pre-revolutionary British rail-bond debt looks unlikely despite agreement by London and Moscow on a mutual waiver of a similar debt yesterday in England.

China's British bonds -- sterling-denominated -- are estimated to be worth nearly 200 million sterling or U.S. $300 million, including interest and mutual payments.

Like Moscow before its change of policy, Beijing refuses to recognise the debts incurred by governments before the communists took power in 1949. As a result, China is barred from making fresh issues in either of the world's greatest financial centres -- London or New York.

The urgency for an early solution to this historical problem has increased in recent years as China felt a mounting need for greater financial flexibility in Eurobonds since the start of the open door policy in 1979.

"For reasons of face, it is unlikely that China will follow Moscow's action too quickly despite of the urgent need for capital for its modernization programme," merchant bankers said yesterday.

This is in spite of top Chinese officials' acknowledgement that the funding effort of the country could be hampered by the nagging problem of the old rail-bond debts.

Though it is important to China to be able to tap the London and New York markets, the availability of other financial instruments makes it affordable for China to delay its decision over the rail-bond debt, another banker said.

"China's failure to meet its capital-market obligations does not necessarily make it a leper in the money market," he stressed.

The Bank of China succeeded in issuing a U.S. $200 million floating-rate certificates of deposit -- a money-market instrument [CD] -- through its London office late last year. The Bank of England has not held its line at the CD issue.

Merchant bankers pointed out the difference between a capital-market instrument, which covers bonds, and a money-market instrument, which covers CDs and can be traded in the market and the Bank of England does not have a say in such matters.

They further pointed out that China also has leeway through issuing bonds denominated in U.S. dollars, which the British government probably has no legal power over, as it does with a sterling issue.

Banking sources said that the Bank of England's move in advising leading Eurobond houses not to join this recent CD issue of Bank of China has cause considerable resentment among the Eurobond community for interference in the supposedly-free market.

GUANGXI TO LIMIT FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN SERVICES

HK170942 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 17 Jul 86 BUSINESS POST Supplement p 2

[Text] China's southwest province of Guangxi is discouraging foreign investment in the hotel and servicing sector.

Instead, the province is putting emphasis on productive industries and mineral resources exploration.

The change in focus for attracting foreign investment was revealed recently by the deputy director of Guangxi's Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Commission, Mr Shen Yuefeng, during a brief stopover in Hong Kong.

Mr Shen said that there had been a concentration of investment in tourism in the past two years.

"It is likely that we will not be signing new hotel contracts this year," he said.

In fact, none of the 34 projects put up by the province for economic co-operation this year was related to the services sector.

Most called for foreign experties in export-oriented industries and the exploration of mineral resources.

Examples are the production and processing of granite, marble and titanium dioxide.

Observers said it was not surprising that many Chinese provinces, incluing Guangxi and Fujian, should put a brake on hotel ventures after the "hotel boom" of the past two years.

Mr Shen said the large number of hotel agreements signed in the past stemmed from a real need for better accommodation facilities.

Guangxi, he said, had signed more than 250 agreements carrying a total pledged foreign investment of U.S. $370 million between 1979 and last year.

Only one-third, or $120 million, had so far been channelled into the province, but as half of the 250 agreements were signed last year, more ventures would materialise this year.

The province's pace of attracting new investment had slowed since January, and the figure for the first five months of this year amounted to only $28 million.

Mr. Shen, who was returning from a visit to Singapore, said Guangxi would stage a large-scale trade fair and tourism promotion campaign in Singapore next month.

It is the first Chinese province to stage such a comprehensive sales campaign in Singapore.

The 10-day trade fair will be opened by Guangxi's deputy governor, Mr Wang Rongzhen, who will head a high-level official delegation to Singapore.

Guangxi hopes to capture a bigger share of the Southeast Asia export market through the Singapore promotion.

Last year, Southeast Asia as a whole imported only U.S. $17 million worth of goods from Guangxi, or less than five percent of its total exports valued at $372 million.

Mr Shen said Guangxi will also use the Signapore expo to negotiate with interested parties on the 34 projects in which the province is seeking foreign economic cooperation.

DAILY REPORT

China

Vol I No 139 21 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES

- Held NEW YORK TIMES Reporter 'In Good Spirits' [AFP] B 1
  - 'No Evidence' of Spying [AFP] B 2
- PRC Buys Nuclear Plant Simulator From U.S. B 3

SOVIET UNION

- Economic, Trade Delegation Departs for Moscow C 1
- USSR Sets Up Far Eastern Military Command Post C 1
- Jilin Governor Receives Soviet Friendship Delegation C 1
- USSR-PRC Amity Society Holds Evening Party C 2
- XINHUA on USSR Condemning U.S. Nuclear Test C 2
- PRC Writer on USSR Policy Adjustment Toward U.S. C 3
- XINHUA Cites TASS on Soyuz T-15 Return C 5

SOUTH ASIA

- Wu Xueqian Notes Concern Over Indian Allegations F 1
  - Indian Delegation Feted F 1

WESTERN EUROPE

- Zhao Ziyang Continues European, Africa Trip G 1
  - Visits Ataturk's Tomb G 1
  - Further Talks With Ozal G 1
  - Tours Archaeological Museum G 2
  - Hosts Return Banquet G 3
  - Oil Purchase Contract Signed G 3
  - Visits Motor Vehicle Plant G 4
  - Departs Ankara, Arrives Istanbul G 4
  - 'Relations Enter New Stage' G 5
  - Tours Export Exhibition, Palaces G 6
  - Invites Turkish Joint Ventures G 7
- Envoy Leaves for PRC-UK Liason Group Meeting G 7

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

- Deng Reportedly 'Committed' to Daya Bay Plant [AFP] K 1
- Official Terms Economic Situation 'Good' K 2
- Report Praises Culture Minister, Subordinates K 3
- Leaders Discuss Bureaucratic Work Style [BAN YUE TAN] K 5
- Scholars Urge Separation of Party, State Roles [LIAOWANG] K 5
- GUANGMING RIBAO Urges Simplicity in Entertaining [10 Jul] K 7

RENMIN RIBAO on Self-Betterment of Reformers [19 Jul] K 8
HONGQI Criticizes Chen Yong Attack on Liu Zaifu K 10
Liu Zaifu Discusses Criticism, Reform -- Part I K 11
Liu Zaifu Discusses Criticism, Reform -- Part II K 13
GUANGMING RIBAO on Role of Ideological Work [5 Jul] K 15
Chen Muhua Addresses National Bank Conference K 18
Li Xiannian Writes Inscription for Tianjin City [TIANJIN RIBAO 26 Jun] K 19
Leaders Attend Beijing Calligraphy Exhibition K 19
Xi Zhongxun Addresses Self-Taught Students K 19
Zhang Jingfu Urges Testing Business Leaders K 20
Peng Chong at Philharmonic Anniversary Concert K 20
Wang Zhaoguo Addresses Graduation Ceremony K 21
Leaders Attend Performance of Li Bozhao's Works K 22
Hao Jianxiu Writes Inscriptions for Henan Journal K 23
Hao Jianxiu Arrives in Lhasa for Inspection Tour K 24
Li Tieying on Boosting Electronics Industry K 24

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

Chen Guangyi on Fujian's Party Rectification O 1
Jiangsu Leaders Attend Legal Knowledge Lecture O 2
Jiangsu Radio on Consolidation of Party Rectification O 2

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

Henan Prefectural Court Sentences Two to Death P 1
Hubei Implements Manager Responsibility System P 1

SOUTHWEST REGION

Guizhou Radio on Manager Responsibility System Q 1
Nei Ronggui at Sichuan Meeting on Party Rectification Q 1
Yunnan Studies Ideological, Political Work Q 2
Chengdu Commander Commends Yunnan Border Units Q 3

NORTH REGION

Beijing Officials Evaluated by Subordinates R 1
Nei Monggol Meeting Calls for Planting Trees, Grass R 1
Shanxi Secretary Discusses Problems Concerning Aged [SHANXI RIBAO 1 Jul] R 2
Tianjin's Ni Zhifu Attends Rally of Advanced [TIANJIN RIBAO 1 Jul] R 4

NORTHEAST REGION

Jilin Secretary at Meeting on Spiritual Civilization S 1
Liaoning Secretary, Acting Governor Appointed S 1
Attend Defense Report Meeting S 1

NORTHWEST REGION

Gansu Commentary on Meeting Annual Revenue Plan T 1
Yin Kesheng Attends Qinghai Economics Meeting T 1
Qinghai Meeting on Guidelines for Haidong Prefecture T 2
Qinghai Statistics Bureau Reveals Successes, Problems T 3
Xian Paper on Problems in Lateral Economic Ties [XIBEI XINXI BAO 23 Jun] T 4
Shaanxi's Economic Construction Maintains Momentum T 6
Shaanxi Radio Comments on Agricultural Problems T 7
Xinjiang Leaders Meet Minority Representatives T 7

TAIWAN

Taiwan-U.S. Trade Negotiations Conclude V 1
    Taiwan Should Lower Tariffs, Diversify V 1
    Tariffs on 32 U.S. Products To Decrease V 1
Taiwan To Buy More Grains From South Africa V 2
KMT Threatens To Outlaw Opposition Party [AFP] V 3
Taiwanese Fighter Plane Dissimilar to F-16 V 3

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Discord Causes Journal To Interrupt Publication [CHING PAO 10 Jul] W 1
TA KUNG PAO Examines Deng's Political Reforms [16 Jul] W 4
Political Reform Talk Rises From Economic Reform [TA KUNG PAO 17 Jul] W 7
PRC Approves Release of Daya Bay Plant Study [SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST 20 Jul] W 9

HELD NEW YORK TIMES REPORTER 'IN GOOD SPIRITS'

HK210508 Hong Kong AFP in English 0501 GMT 21 Jul 86

[By Lawrence Macdonald]

[Text] Beijing, July 21 (AFP) — NEW YORK TIMES reporter John Burns, under detention here for five days on possible spy charges, is being treated well and is in good spirits, his wife said after a one hour visit with him.

Mr. Burns, 41, smiled and waved at reporters through the narrow gate of a public security bureau compound as he emerged from a morning meeting with his wife, Jane Scott Long, and their two young children. Dressed in a button-down blue shirt and tie, the tall, bearded correspondent briefly lifted and and held each of his children, ages two and five, then kissed his wife goodbye.

"He's in good spirits," Mrs. Scott-long said as she stepped through the gate. "I think they've been fairly considerate, they're treating him like a privileged prisoner," she said.

Mr. Burns was given two exercise periods a day and spent the rest of his time in a padded cell, she said. In keeping with the rules of the Paozhu Detention Centre where he was being held, the light was left on in the cell throughout the night, she said.

Earlier Mr. Burns, who travels on a British passport, had meetings with representatives of the British and U.S. Embassies, each of whom said afterwards that he was in good spirits but declined to comment on the details of the case.

A.M. Rosenthal, executive editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES, who arrived here Saturday, spent the morning standing outside the gates of the public security bureau compound with a crowd of foreign reporters.

He said arrangements had been made for him and NEW YORK TIMES foreign news editor Warren Hoge to see Mr. Burns in the afternoon.

Lynn Noah, U.S. Embassy press counsellor, said after his meeting with the correspondent that he was still under investigation but had not yet been charged. Citing an official statement from Washington, Mr Noah said the State Department was continuing to press for full information on the case and had "full confidence in the journalistic integrity of Mr. Burns."

Chinese officials have informed the United States that Mr. Burns was under investigation for entering an area forbidden to foreigners and carrying out intelligence activities. Interrogation since his detention Thursday morning has centered on a motorcycle journey he made with a U.S. Justice Department lawyer and a Chinese friend to areas of northern Shaanxi Province which are not open to foreigners.

Mr. Noah said the United States had expressed to China its "extreme concern about the case and had urged the Chinese Government and appropriate Chinese authorities to provide the fullest possible information at the earliest possible date."

Asked if there was any message from Mr. Burns, Mr. Noah said "just that he is well, and in good spirits and is confident that he will soon be released."

The embassy was continuing to press the Chinese Government to provide access for Mr. Rosenthal to the relevant Chinese officials, he said. Mr. Rosenthal has repeatedly affirmed his newspapers' faith in its correspondent and said the investigation was the result of a "misunderstanding."

The Paozhu Detention Centre where Mr. Burns has been held is located on the outskirts of the city, surrounded by high walls topped with barbed wire. Observers said police had apparently moved him early this morning to the Beijing Public Security Bureau Foreign Affairs Office, a traditional countryard-style structure on a shaded street, to minimize adverse publicity.

As the crowd of foreign reporters stood outside the compound gates, plain clothes policemen were seen quietly directing curious onlookers to move along.

A Chinese youth in a t-shirt and bluejeans filmed the foreign reporters with an expensive mini-video camera but pulled away when correspondents attempted to photograph him. Pursued by one reporter he said taking such pictures was his "hobby."

Mr. Burns has been Beijing correspondent for THE NEW YORK TIMES since November 1984. He was previously here from 1971 to 1975 for the TORONTO GLOBE AND MAIL.

'No Evidence' of Spying

HK210814 Hong Kong AFP in English 0808 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Beijing, July 21 (AFP) --Investigations of a NEW YORK TIMES reporter under detention here five days for possible "intelligence activities" have uncovered no evidence of spying, THE NEW YORK TIMES executive editor quoted the chief investigative officer as saying Monday.

Editor A.M. Rosenthal said he told the officer, identified only as "General Zhang," that the detention of NEW YORK TIMES correspondent John Burns would seriously diminish the imgage of China abroad and had already begun to do so.

"I said that damage was done and the time had come for damage control and that damage control consisted of releasing him quickly. I emphasized quickly because I believe that every day will be more and more damaging to this country." Mr Rosenthal said. Mr Rosenthal said the police official, who has overseen Mr burns' interrogation since his initial detention Thursday, told him there was no evidence that Mr Burns had been spying.

"They did not use the word to me 'spying' or 'espionage' and as a matter of fact at one point General Zhang said that there was not any evidence of spying," Mr Rosenthal said.

The spokesman for the Public Security Bureau refused to comment on Mr Rosenthal's remarks or otherwise clarify the issue.

Mr. Burns, dressed in a blue button-down shirt and tie, was seen at the end of the meeting with Mr Rosenthal chatting and laughing with him and international news editor Warren Hoge before waving at reporters and disappearing inside a building. Minutes later he was driven through the gate in a black van with heavily tinted windows apparently returning to the Paozhu Detention Centre in northern Beijing.

Mr Rosenthal said that the Chinese Government had treated him courteously and that he was thankful for the chance to see Mr Burns, but he strongly warned that the detention would hurt China's image abroad.

"John Burns is an outstanding correspondent who is known to have great empathy for China and what the government is trying to do," he said. "He works for a newspaper, THE NEW YORK TIMES, which has also had great sympathy for efforts of the Chinese people and the Chinese Government to improve the nation. This is known around the world."

"I said to General Zhang, if a reporter like John Burns, working for a newspaper like THE NEW YORK TIMES, can be harrassed at an airport for 15 hours and then detained for four of five days, then I fear that the picture of China around the world will diminish seriously."

"I said that John Burns was a newspaperman first and last, he is no more of an intelligence agent than my grandmother, who I assure you is not an intelligence agent," Mr Rosenthal said.

Mr Rosenthal said that the chief investigator had listened politely and said he would take note of what the editor had said. "There will be no personal satisfaction for us, nor will the situation improve as far as relations between our two governments, our two people's until he is released," he said.

Mr Burns was kept in a 9-foot by 12-foot (3-metre by 4-metre) padded cell with a 24-hour guard where the light was left on day and night. He spent his time "reading the collected works of Deng and thinking about his family," the editor said. [passage omitted]

PRC BUYS NUCLEAR PLANT SIMULATOR FROM U.S.

OW181432 Beijing XINHUA in English 0727 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- China has bought a simulator from the United States to train nuclear power plant operators, according to the National Nuclear Safety Administration of China. The administration's chief engineer Lin Chengge told XINHUA today that the simulator for a 900,000-kilowatt nuclear plant has been shipped to Beijing's Qinghua University.

A simulator duplicates the control panels used by reactor operators, which is tied into a computer that simulates the actions of a power plant. Qinghua University is now renovating a building to house the simulator. Trial training of Chinese nuclear plant operators is expected to start in the latter half of 1987, according to Chen.

The chief engineer said the simulator allows reactor operators to practise running a nuclear plant under the normal or accidental conditions, and helps them do accurate operations and handle accidents of different kinds. The National Nuclear Safety Administration will, Chen said, strictly train and examine operators in line with international standards and procedures. Successful trainees will be given licenses. The administration is now working out license regulations for nuclear plant operators. Quality of operators will be an important guarantee for safety operations.

It is learned that the administration and Qinghua University will have some of their personnel trained abroad to become instructors at the simulator training center.

ECONOMIC, TRADE DELEGATION DEPARTS FOR MOSCOW

OW201406 Beijing XINHUA in English 1333 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 20 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese economic and trade delegation headed by Jia Shi, president of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade, left here today for Moscow. It will open a Chinese economic and trade exhiibition in Moscow from July 25 to August 10, and pay a friendly visit to the Soviet Union.

USSR SETS UP FAR EASTERN MILITARY COMMAND POST

OW200636 Beijing XINHUA in English 0620 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 20 (XINHUA) -- Soviet troops have set up a forward command post in the far eastern theater of operations near the coastal city of Khabarovsk, today's newspaper "SANKEI SHIMBUN" quoted international military sources as saying.

According to the sources, the establishment of the post is a bid to strengthen the three Soviet armed services operating in the Pacific region, particularly in the Kamchatka peninsula, the Sea of Okhotsk, Sakhalin Island and the Sea of Japan. But the report said the post's scale and directive ability are not known.

The post's coastal location is an indication, "SANKEI SHIMBUN" quoted experts as saying, that the Soviets are striking an offensive pose in the East Asian theater of operations.

They predicted a more active operation of Soviet troops in the region, which, if borne out, would be proof that the Soviet Union is gradually turning away from its traditional Far Eastern military target of China, and pointing toward the U.S. and Japan.

There are two military headquarters on the Kamchatka peninsula and the Sakhalin Island.

JILIN GOVERNOR RECEIVES SOVIET FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION

SK190602 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] On the morning of 18 July, Gao Dezhan, governor of the province, received the delegation of the Maritime regional branch of the USSR-China Friendship Association headed by (Tanfuerbaletexie Yiwannu), vice chairman of the Maritime Kray Executive Committee and director of the maritime regional branch of the USSR-China Friendship Association.

Governor Gao Dezhan expressed welcome to the delegation and had a conversation with them in a friendly atmosphere. Both sides stated that they will make concerted efforts to facilitate friendly contacts and economic exchanges with each other.

After winding up its friendly visits to our province, the delegation left Changchun by train on the morning of 18 July for home by way of the Suifen He port.

Gao Wen, vice governor of the province and deputy director of the Jilin provincial branch of the Sino-USSR Friendship Association; and Bi Kebin, head of the provincial Foreign Affairs Office, saw the delegation off at the railway station. Zhu Wenyu, deputy head of the provincial Foreign Affairs Office and deputy director of the Jilin provincial branch of the China-USSR Friendship Association, accompanied the delegation to Suifen He port.

During its staying in Changchun, the delegation, respectively accompanied by Gao Wen, vice governor of the province; and (Wang Jiatong), mayor of Changchun City, visited the Changchun film studio, the Changchun No. 1 vehicle plant, the Changchun tractor manufacturing plant, the Changchun department store, and an agricultural trade market in Guangfu Road. The delegation also presented wreaths to the People's Square and the Soviet martyrs' monument.

USSR-PRC AMITY SOCIETY HOLDS EVENING PARTY

OW190627 Beijing XINHUA in English 0543 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Soviet and Chinese cultural and art activities have played an important part in the development of friendship between the two countries and the Soviet Union hopes to further strengthen their relations.

This was stated by V.M. Solntsev, vice-chairman of the board of the Soviet-Chinese Friendship Society, when he hosted an evening party here today to mark the 30th anniversary of a Soviet-Chinese cultural cooperation agreement.

Some activists of the society and representatives from Soviet cultural circles made speeches and several singers gave performances at the party, which was also attended by Chinese Embassy officials.

XINHUA ON USSR CONDEMNING U.S. NUCLEAR TEST

OW181420 Beijing XINHUA in English 1206 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union news agency TASS today condemned yesterday's nuclear test in Nevada by the United States and accused the U.S. of "winding up the clock of atomic death."

TASS reported this is the 14th test conducted by the United States since Moscow announced its unilateral nuclear test moratorium last August. The U.S. test ignored the Soviet Union's call for joining in the moratorium and confirmed Washington's adherence to the nuclear arms race, TASS said.

The test shows the Reagan administration is "winding up the clock of atomic death. Time is running out and fewer and fewer opportunities remain for taking joint radical and defective measures to curb the arms race," TASS said.

PRC WRITER ON USSR POLICY ADJUSTMENT TOWARD U.S.

OW162035 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1050 GMT 16 Jul 86

["Excerpts" of article by (Shu Xiangdi) in issue No 14 of SHIJIE ZHISHI, entitled: "Readjustment of Soviet Policy Toward the United States"]

[Text] Since Gorbachev took office, the Soviet Union has made some adjustments in its foreign policy. At the 27th CPSU Congress, Gorbachev clearly regarded the strengthening and development of Soviet strategies, the invigoration of the economy, and the strengthening of the Soviet Union's combined political, economic, and military might as strategic goals of great urgency in order to ensure that the Soviet Union will be in a favorable position in the struggle against the United States for hegemony in the future, particularly in the next century. Proceeding from this guiding ideology and fundamental strategic goal, the Soviet Union is eager to create a favorable international environment in order to gain some time to help it strengthen and develop its strategies. The Soviet Union held that Soviet-U.S. relations would affect the overall situation; therefore, it focused its attention on Soviet-U.S. relations in readjusting its foreign policy.

Since the beginning of this year, the United States has applied continuous pressure on the Soviet Union. Tension has once again heightened in areas of Soviet-U.S. relations which were once relaxed. In this respect, the Soviet Union has remained adamant in acting according to the principle laid down by the 27th CPSU Congress. That is: Without forsaking the general principle of struggle against the United States for hegemony, the Soviet Union seeks to improve and relax Soviet-U.S. relations and to maintain negotiations and dialogues between the two sides. The Soviet Union seeks to prevent the type of extreme tension and confrontation and the type of ossified and strained situations which prevailed in the early eighties.

By means of disarmament, the Soviet Union seeks a low-level military and strategic balance. At the same time, it will try its best to obstruct or delay the U.S. star wars plan, work out rules for a low-level arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union, and avoid being economically weakened by the United States. Without giving up the interests already gained in the 1970's, the Soviet Union will try its best to avoid direct regional clashes with the United States. Therefore, in the face of an overbearing U.S. stance, the Soviet Union has restrained itself to a certain extent.

Tactically, it has adopted a flexible policy of dealing softly with the hard U.S. line. The specific method adopted by the Soviet Union is: Politically it launches frequent peace offensives against the United States, and repeatedly gives widespread publicity to Soviet sincerity for peace and its proposals for disarmament, while trying to win sympathy and support from world public opinion.

The Soviet press openly asserts that the peace offensive must be kept up without relaxation because success will hardly come easily. In his speech at the 27th CPSU Congress, Gorbachev alleged that the Soviet Union is prepared to make accommodations which are acceptable to both sides, with the aim of promoting dialogue and mutual understanding instead of confrontation. Gorbachev said again in April that, despite the current uneasiness in Soviet-American relations, the Soviet Union has not lost hope. The Soviet Union has expressed its willingness for a Soviet-American summit without any preconditions.

On 5 May, the newly-appointed Soviet Ambassador to Britain Zamyatin asked Prime Minister Thatcher to relay to Reagan the message that the Soviet Union is ready to prepare for the second Soviet-American summit in order to promote detente between the two sides.

On arms control, the Soviet Union launched a barrage of disarmament proposals in an attempt to shift the onus of failure to reach an agreement onto the United States, thereby putting the latter in a defensive position. On 15 January 1986, Gorbachev presented a basket of disarmament proposals leading to the total elimination of nuclear weapons in three stages within 15 years. Later, he declared a unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing, and proposed that the Soviet and American naval fleets withdraw from the Mediterranean. He also called for a reduction in conventional weapons and troops in Europe, and so on and so forth. To push for arms control talks, Gorbachev has expressly agreed that Europe's intermediate-range missile issue can be resolved on an independent basis, instead of sticking to the former condition of directly linking it with the issues of strategic and arms and space. He has also agreed to supervision and verification.

On regional issues the Soviet Union, apart from preserving its vested interests, has also exercised restraint vis-a-vis the United States. For example, with regard to the U.S. attacks on Libya, the Soviet Union has rendered mere verbal support to Libya and launched only verbal attacks on the United States. Manifestly, the Soviet Union desires that the Libyan incident will not further worsen Soviet-American relations. The Soviet Union has also strived to avert a head-on collision with the United States on the Syrian and Central American issues.

The root cause of the Soviet adjustments in its policy toward the United States lies in its strategy of accelerated development. To this end, it hopes for a period of truce with the United States.

Tension in Soviet-U.S. relations does not benefit the Soviet Union, but can only aggravate its difficulties. The Soviet Union has encountered considerable resistance in its domestic economic reforms. The steep fall in world petroleum prices has reduced Soviet foreign exchange earnings, and created additional difficulties for the Soviet economy.

It seems that the Soviet Union is basically trying to seek stability and avoid confusion. The Soviet Union believes that by meeting U.S. toughness with flexibility, without compromising in substance, it may obstruct or delay the U.S. star wars plan and frustrate the U.S. attempt to drag down the Soviet Union in the arms race.

Of course, all countries in the world today universally call for peace, disarmament, and relaxation of international tension. Peace is the aspiration of all people, and prosperity is the objective of all countries. Therefore, the Soviet Union believes that by upholding the banner of peace and disarmament, it will be able to gain an upper hand politically and in propaganda.

The readjustment of Soviet policy toward the United States is a tactical, as well as strategic matter. In view of Gorbachev's call for accelerated development of strategy, it is unlikely that the Soviet Union will easily change it policy of detente with the United States. However, there are certain limits in Soviet tolerance, restraints, and compromise; that is, U.S. actions should not threaten the vital interests of the Soviet Union, or tip the existing Soviet-U.S. military balance. Moreover, the United States should not demand unilateral concessions from the Soviet Union on major issues. Within these limits, there should be no sudden changes in Soviet policy toward the United States.

It is more likely that the Soviet Union will postpone the readjustment of its policy toward the United States until Reagan's term ends and a new U.S. president takes office. It is estimated that the Soviet Union, as a superpower, will not make many concessions to the United States. So far, it has indeed never made any concessions on fundamental issues. It is worthy to note that while demonstrating its flexibility, the Soviet Union has all along stressed its principled stand; i.e., the United States and the Soviet Union should seek compromise based on mutual, equal security and reciprocal principles. Gorbachev declared on 30 May that under no circumstances would the Soviet Union make unilateral concessions or be affected by political, economic, or military pressure. On the issue of the arms race, Gorbachev said that the Soviet Union would find satisfactory strategy to deal with the star wars plan, that the arms race will not exhaust the Soviet Union, and that the United States will not be able to gain an upper hand in space nor surpass the Soviet Union in technology. In regional rivalry, the Soviet Union will not withdraw from its interests vested in the 1970's because of U.S. pressure.

Thus, it can be seen that if the United States persists in its hardline policy, it is possible that the Soviet Union will resort to a tit-for-tat policy.

XINHUA CITES TASS ON SOYUZ T-15 RETURN

OW170238 Beijing XINHUA in English 0139 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Two Soviet cosmonauts returned to earth today after a 125-day space flight, the TASS news agency reported. Their Soyuz T-15 descent module made a soft landing near Arkalyk in northern Kazakhstan, 3,000 kilometers northeast of Moscow, TASS said. The two, Leonid Kizim and Vladimir Solovyev are feeling well, the agency added.

Commander Kizim and engineer Solovyev blasted off from earth in a Soyuz T-15 craft on March 13 and docked their spacecraft with the Mir orbital station two days later. The Mir station, launched February 20, is a third generation space station equipped with a novel docking arrangement consisting of six docking units.

On May 6, the two cosmonauts completed the first stage of research work in the station, left it and docked their Soyuz T-15 with another orbital station, Salyut-7, which has been in space since April 1982. They spent 50 days in the station, making space walks twice, building and then dismantling a 15-meter truss on the surface of the station for the first time in the history of space exploration.

They returned to the Mir station June 26 and continued a research program until yesterday, when they began making preparations for their return to earth.

The Soviet space program emphasizes the establishment of a permanently manned orbiting space station instead of the reusable space shuttle used by the United States.

Kizim, 44, and Solovyev, 39, are among the most experienced cosmonauts in the Soviet Union. They set an endurance record of 238 days aboard Salyut-7 with their colleague Oleg Atkov in 1984.

WU XUEQIAN NOTES CONCERN OVER INDIAN ALLEGATIONS

OW191444 Beijing XINHUA in English 1424 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian said here tonight he hoped China and India would "consider the interests of the two nations" as they discussed border issues this week. Wu made this remark at a meeting with a delegation form India led by Foreign Secretary A.P. Venkateswaran. The delegation arrived today for three days of talks beginning Monday. Earlier this week, officials of the Chinese Foreign Ministry said Indian charges of Chinese violations of the Tibet-India border in June were "unjustified."

The talks this week will be the seventh round since border discussions began in 1981. "Border issues were left to us by history," Wu told the Indian representatives. "But over the last two years, relations between our countries have been somewhat developing. We have worked on these issues in a spirit of trying to solve the problems and arrive at mutual understanding."

Wu, who is also state councillor, said the atmosphere as the new round of talks approaches is "not as good as it was before the last few rounds." He said, "You have made some public statements, some Indian newspapers have run some articles, and our mass media has had to respond. All of this is not conducive to successful talks," he said. "The atmosphere is not what we had hoped for." However, Wu said, "I hope both of us will stick to the facts and reason things out calmly."

Venkateswaran said some of the Indian papers' coverage was factual and some others are not. He said the solution to the border issue would help build friendship between the two countries. He said he expected the talks this week would proceed in a constructive atmosphere and that they would result in progress.

Leader of the Chinese delegation to the talks is Liu Shuqing, vice-minister of foreign affairs.

Indian Delegation Feted

OW201400 Beijing XINHUA in English 1330 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 20 (XINHUA) -- Liu Shuqing, leader of the Chinese delegation to the seventh round of talks between Chinese and Indian officials, gave a banquent here this evening in honor of the Indian delegation to the talks heded by A.P. Venkateswaran.

In his speech, Liu, vice-minister of foreign affairs, expressed the wish that the new round of talks to start tomorrow morning in Beijing, will produce results.

He also hoped the two sides would continue to work in the spirit of friendly cooperation to resolve the Sino-Indian boundary issue as early as possible and further their bilateral relations.

Venkateswaran, who is Indian foreign secretary, said he was sure that India and China which are closely linked by history and culture, will certainly resolve their boundary question. He added that complicated as it is, the boundary question can be settled as long as the two sides have the sincerity to do so.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONTINUES EUROPEAN, AFRICA TRIP

Visits Ataturk's Tomb

OW181112 Beijing XINHUA in English 1049 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang this morning paid respect to the mausoleum of Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, the founder of the Republic of Turkey.

Accompanied by Turkish Ambassador to China Behic Hazar, the premier laid a wreath in front of the tomb of the father of the Republic of Turkey. On the white silk ribbons of the wreath were written the words: "To Ataturk, the founder of the Republic of Turkey! Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, national hero and the first president of the Turkish Republic, was born in 1881 and died in 1938. The Mausoleum was built on a hilltop near the capital city, reached by marble-paved with stone lions lining on both sides. The whole area covers about 70 hectares, surrounded by woods with trees contributed by many countries.

After laying the wreath, Premier Zhao visited an exhibition displaying objects associated with the president's life. In the visitor's book, Premier Zhao wrote: "The Chinese people have lofty and sincere respect for Kemal Ataturk, the founding father of the Republic of Turkey". Premier Zhao then proceeded to continue talks with Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal.

Further Talks With Ozal

OW181428 Beijing XINHUA in English 1355 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang spent more than two hours here this morning discussing with his Turkish counterpart Turgut Ozal mainly the ways and means for furthering economic and trade cooperation between their countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

This was their second meeting since Premier Zhao flew in here from Madrid Thursday afternoon on the fifth leg of his six-nation Balkan-Mediterranean tour. The first meeting took place in the evening shortly after Zhao's arrival.

A Chinese Foreign Ministry official told the press after the talks that the two premiers reviewed with delight and satisfaction the progress of bilateral friendly relations made in various fields since Ozal's China visit last year. They also exchanged views on international issues of mutual concern, he said.

The Turkish prime minister offered a number of positive proposals as how to increase two-way trade, economic cooperation and how to work on jointly contracted projects in the third countries. He pointed out that Turkish-Chinese cooperation in the above-said fields could provide a good example for South-South cooperation.

Premier Zhao said that Sino-Turkish relations have been developing well in the past two years, and have entered a new stage of friendly cooperation on the basis of mutual respect and mutual trust. There is still a great potential, he added. Zhao agreed to Ozal's proposals on increasing bilateral trade.

Both China and Turkey should explore the possibility of exchanging major commodities on a long-term basis that help supply each other's needs, Zhao pointed out, so as to increase their trade volume steadily. Sino-Turkish trade relations should be established on a long-term and stable basis, he said.

Zhao stressed the importance of enhancing the economic cooperation in various forms between China and Turkey. China has interest in building hydrolic and thermal power stations in Turkey, he said, and it is also willing to study the feasibility of setting up joint ventures and exchanging technologies. He also encouraged Turkish entrepreneurs to invest in China.

The Turkish prime minister expressed his appreciation of the Chinese Government's enthusiasm in enhancing the economic cooperation and trade relations between the two countries and the specific proposals it had put forward for this purpose. In order to put into effect those proposals as soon as possible, he suggested that consultations between the departments concerned of the two countries be strengthened.

In their exchange of views on international issues, Ozal explained the positions taken by his government on disarmament, the Middle East, and the war between Iraq and Iran. He stressed his country's interest in seeking a just and reasonable solution to the Middle East problem. Turkey supports Arab countries in their efforts to recover their lost lands, recognizes the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and backs the restoration to the Palestinian people of their legal rights, he declared.

Prime Minister Ozal said he was glad to see Turkey and China completely identical in their postions on the Middle East problem.

The Chinese Premier was quoted as saying that if the Soviet Union and the United States were truly sincere and prepared to negotiate earnestly on disarmament, China would welcome them to do so. He said the numerous medium-sized or small countries, aligned or non-aligned, developing or developed, all oppose war and want peace. Each of them has a role to play in this respect, he added.

Premier Zhao paid tribute to the Turkish Government for its policy aimed at maintaining peace and easing tensions. In today's talks, the two leaders also briefed each other on the ecomomic situation in their respective countries.

Tours Archaeological Museum

OW181747 Beijing XINHUA in English 1734 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang viewed archaeological findings showing the Anatolian civilizations from paleolithic to classical times this afternoon following the second round of official talks with Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal. This is the second day of his official visit to the Republic of Turkey.

The museum is housed in two 15th century buildings, once used to serve as an overnight stopping place for caravans, and a covered bazaar. On display are many archeological findings, pre-historic, Phrygian and Urartu, dug up in and around Ankara.

Premier Zhao showed keen interest in the Hittite arts and crafts dated back to the sixth millenium B.C., which constitute the most outstanding assets of the museum set up upon the proposal put forward by Kemal Ataturk, the first president of the Republic of Turkey. He frequently stopped in front of the show-cases to enquire into details about the age, usage and value of the objects. He showed particular interest in the development of Turkey's ancient written language, which bears much similarity to that of China's pictographic characters.

At the end of the visit, the museum presented the premier with two mini-models of the symbols of the Hittite culture and of the city of Ankara. Premier Zhao gave the museum a cloisonne plate in return.

The curator of the museum, who has worked there for 27 years, told reporters that she had never seen such a keen interest in the museum as shown by Premier Zhao Ziyang.

Zhao Hosts Return Banquet

OW182344 Beijing XINHUA in English 2330 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang hosted a return banquet at the Chinese ambassador's residence here this evening to thank Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal and his government for the warm hospitality accorded him since his arrival Thursday afternoon.

Premier Zhao said in his toast that the warmth and friendship he and his colleagues had received was a vivid expression of the traditional friendship of the Turkish people towards the Chinese people. "I am confident that the traditional ties between the Chinese and Turkish people will grow day by day," he said, "and that the friendly and cooperative relations between our two countries will further develop in all fields."

Prime Minister Ozal said that the successful talks he had held with Zhao in the past two days indicated that the bilateral relations between Turkey and China would no doubt advance in the direction as both sides expect.

The banquet proceeded in an atmosphere of cordiality and friendship. The Chinese premier and his entourage will fly to Istanbul tomorrow to continue the visit.

Oil Purchase Contract Signed

OW190046 Beijing XINHUA in English 2345 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Istanbul, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Turkey will import 500,000 tons of crude oil from China this year. A contract on this deal was signed here tonight by Xiao Manzi, general manager of the crude oil department of the China Chemicals Import and Export Corporation, and Yalcin Eraydin, assistant general manager of the Turkish Petroleum Refineries Corporation.

Under the contract, the first shipment of 100,000 tons of oil will commence late this month. This contract, the second of its kind, was signed just on the second day of Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit to Turkey. The first contract on China's sale of 500,000 tons of oil to Turkey was signed in July of last year when Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal visited China.

Visits Motor Vehicle Plant

OW191224 Beijing XINHUA in English 1141 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Ankara, July 19 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited a motor vehicle factory near Ankara this morning to see how Turkey uses foreign capital to develop its own automotive industry. Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who had just attended a ceremony celebrating the official beginning of the production of the truck plant of M.A.N. Company, accompanied the Chinese premier on a tour of this plant.

Premier Zhao was shown round the production and assembly lines of the truck plant and a motor plant next to it, all belonging to an Istanbul-based motor vehicle company, a joint venture between Turkey and Federal Germany. He stopped from time to time to enquire about the production and workers' life and watch demonstrations by the workers, and chatted with the Turkish prime minister. At the end of the visit, the two prime ministers went on board a tourist coach which uses the engine produced by the plant to see the equipment and performance of the product.

The M.A.N. motor and truck factories are situated 22 kilometers northeast of the Turkish capital. They are part of the Istanbul-based M.A.N. Company Ltd. The motor plant was completed and put into production in May 1984 while the truck plant has been in trial production since January this year. The motor plant has 329 workers, with an annual production capacity of 8,000. It produces 180 to 650 hp heavy-duty diesel engines for the truck plant and for industrial use. The truck plant, with 553 workers at present, has an annual production capacity of 6,000 5-32 ton trucks and tractors for both civilian and military use.

The truck plant, since its trial production, has exported 1,331 trucks to Jordan, Iraq, Syria, Kuwait, Tunisia, Egypt and other countries. The motor plant exports 20 per cent of its products. Turkey has 66 percent of the share of investment while the rest is owned by the Federal German company. Many of its workers have been trained in Federal Germany and the posts of the plants' management are held by Turks.

At the end of the tour, Premier Zhao wrote an inscription for the factories, which reads: "Technical cooperation between developing and developed countries is a good way for boosting the capabilities of self-reliance." Then he told the Turkish prime minister: "I like this form of cooperation. It is beneficial to both developing and developed countries. The developed countries can lower their costs of production while we the developing countries may improve our technological standards."

Premier Zhao and his party will leave Ankara this afternoon for Istanbul to continue his visit in Turkey.

Departs Ankara, Arrives Istanbul

OW191757 Beijing XINHUA in English 1742 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Istanbul, July 19 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang flew in here from Ankara this afternoon to continue his Turkey visit. Upon departure from Ankara, Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal and other high ranking government officials were at th airport to see off the Chinese premier and his entourage.

In a short conversation at the airport terminal, Prime Minister Ozal said premier Zhao's visit to Turkey during the first two days was very successful. Zhao thanked the prime minister for the warm reception and hospitality accorded him and his party during their stay in Ankara, saying, "I am sure that there will be a chance to return your kindness."

A grand sending-off ceremony took place on the airdrome. When the two premiers stepped on to the reviewing stand, the band played the national anthems of both countries. After reviewing the guard of honor in the company of Prime Minister Ozal, Premier Zhao shook hands with Ozal again and said goodbye to him before boarding the plane.

After less than an hour's flight, the special plane touched down at the Ataturk airport here. Governor of Istanbul Nevzat Ayaz and Mayor of Istanbul Bedrettin Dalan warmly greeted Premier Zhao and his party.

The hosts and guests had a cordinal conversation in the guest hall of the airport before the Chinese premier drove to the Sheraton Hotel where he is going to stay. He is expected to attend a dinner given in his honor this evening by M. Mukerrem Tascioglu, minister of culture and tourism of the Turkish Government.

Relations Enter New Stage

OW201800 Beijing XINHUA in English 1744 GMT 20 Jul 86

["Sino-Turkish Relations Enter New Stage" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Istanbul, July 20 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said that his visit to Turkey, beginning Thursday, is "a great success" and that the Sino-Turkish relations have entered "a new stage marked by mutual respect, mutual trust and friendly cooperation."

The premier made the remark in an interview broadcast by the Turkish radio and Television (TRT) tonight after he arrived here yesterday from Ankara to continue his official goodwill visit to Turkey. In the interview, the Chinese premier said: "I think the objective of my visit has been reached successfully and satisfactorily" though the visit has not come to its end.

The purpose of the visit, as Premier Zhao said upon his arrival in Ankara, is to "deepen understanding, enhance friendship, promote mutually beneficial cooperation and maintain world."

Premier Zhao told his audience through the TRT that he had exchanged views with Prime Minister Turgut Ozal in an unconstrained manner on ways to further the friendly and cooperative relations between the two countries and on international matters of mutual concern. "We share identical or similar views on many important would issues and we have the same strong desire for a continued expansion of the friendly and cooperative relations between our countries," he said.

The premier also asid the question of how to increase bilateral economic and trade relations was major subject in his talks with Ozal. The two sides are satisfied with the fast growth of relations in this aspect and they agreed that there is still a great potential for further development, he noted.

The two leaders discussed in detail issues including the exchange of commodities to meet each other's needs, reciprocal investment, the running of joint ventures and cooperation in jointly contracting the for construction projects in third countries. The discussion will surely promote the economic and trade links between the two countries, Premier Zhao said. "I am optimistic about the future development of Sino-Turkish economic and trade relations and I believe we have a bright future," he stressed.

Premier Zhao paid high tribute to Turkish President Kenan Evren, an old friend of the Chinese people, for his important contribution to the development of Sino-Turkish relations. He said his scheduled meeting with the president tomorrow, like his talks with prime minister Ozal, is bound to push the Sino-Turkish friendly and cooperative relations to a new high. The Chinese premier also spoke highly of the achievements made by the Turkish people in the economic development and modernization of their country. There is a lot of experience China can learn from Turkey, he said.

Tours Export Exhibition, Palaces

OW201919 Beijing XINHUA in English 1905 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Istanbul, July 20 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today toured the Middle East Trade and Export Center, Dolmabahce Palace, museums, and the Bosphorus bridge that links Europe and Asia, praising the Turkish people for their splendid and brilliant culture.

The Trade and Export Center is a permanent exhibition of Turkish exports and contracted projects in foreign countries. Covering a total floor space of 14,450 square meters, it puts on display a wide-range of products from more than 500 big companies, designed to promote the country's export and contracted projects service, especially to other Middle East countries. At the end of the tour, the Chinese premier wrote in the visitors' book, "Turkey has provided other developing nations with valuable experience in promoting export."

Premier Zhao was then shown around in the magnificent new palace (Dolmabahce) before he came to the world famous "Jubilation Hall". "The splendid and brilliant culture the diligent and wise Turkish people created will pass on generation after generation" the chinese Premier made an entry in the visitor's book. Dolmabahce Palace, situation on the western shore of the Bosphorus Gulf, was built in 1853. It had been Sultans' palace of the Ottoman empire. The first president of Turkey Mustafa Kemal Ataturk once lived and worked there before he died in 1938.

Zhao visited the Topkapi Palace museum in the afternoon, where he was shown a big variety of treaures of the Ottoman empire. On display in one of the halls are tens of thousands of pieces of Chinese porcelain, of which many are unique and have not been found in China. They include those made in the Song, Yuan, Ming and Qing dynasties, a vivid proof of the frequent exchange of friendly visits between the Chinese and Turkish peoples in history.

The Topkapi Palace, built in 1478, used to be sultans' palace until 1853 when Dolmabahce Palace was built. It has become a museum since the republic of Turkey was founded in 1923. Premier Zhao also visited the sultan Ahmet Mosque and the museum of Hagia Sophia.

Invites Turkish Joint Ventures

OW202352 Beijing XINHUA in English 2332 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Istanbul, July 20 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today invited Turkish industrialists and businessmen to invest in China or open joint ventures with their Chinese counterparts.

The Chinese leader made the remarks at a dinner in his honor hosted by Sakip Sabanci, chairman of the Turkish Industrialists and Businessmen's Association.

Sabanci and Lu Dong, Chinese minister in charge of the state economic commission, who is accompanying the premier on his visit, said the world-renowned ancient "silk road" bound the Chinese and Turkish people together more than 1,000 years ago. (The silk road, which originated in China's Changan city (now Xian), and ended in Turkey's Constantinople (now Istanbul), played a major role in promoting commericial and cultural exchanges between China and Europe.

Sabanci said the Chinese premier's presence at the dinner "symbolizes the same bonds of friendship and cooperation." He said he wanted to transmit to the Chinese leader, the Turkish businessmen's desire to increase exchanges of goods and service, as well as technological transfer in crop farming and other agro industries. He said cooperation in these areas would bring the two peoples closer than at the time of the silk road.

Lu assured Turkish industrial and business circles that his country would resolutely carry out the policy of "invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world." By "opening up to the outside world," he added, China opens its door to both developed and developing countries. He said there are good prospects for promoting economic and trade cooperation between China and Turkey, which have been the major focus of talks between Premier Zhao and Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal.

Zhao's presence at tonight's dinner provided him an opportunity to sound out leading figures of the country's economic sector. Turkish Industrialists and Businessmen's Association, set up in 1971, is an Istanbul-based national organization.

ENVOY LEAVES FOR PRC-UK LIAISON GROUP MEETING

OW191420 Beijing XINHUA in English 1408 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) — Chief representative of the Chinese side of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group Ambassador Ke Zaishuo and his party left here this evening for London to attend the group's fourth meeting to be held from July 22 to 25.

Ke Zaishuo is director of the Hong Kong and Macao affairs office of the Chinese Foreign Ministry.

DENG REPORTEDLY 'COMMITTED' TO DAYA BAY PLANT

HK180806 Hong Kong AFP in English 0748 GMT 18 Jul 86

[By Claudia Mo]

[Text] Hong Kong, July 18 (AFP) — Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping is committed to a plan for a nuclear power station at Daya Bay near Hong Kong that has provoked a noisy outcry here, an authoritative Chinese source here said on Friday.

"Deng Xiaoping has never said anything implying Beijing would have second thoughts about Daya Bay," a highly-placed Chinese source told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

"The decision to go ahead with the plant was made by Beijing's power core back in 1982, and Deng Xiaoping has been committed to it," he said. "Any different opinion from one single Chinese leader now cannot change anything."

The source was referring to recent press reports here that one of China's four vice-premiers, Tian Jiyun, had voiced strong opposition to the plant.

Speculation that China is considering scrapping the plan has been rife since a pro-Beijing magazine here urged China to handle the issue with "extreme care."

Analysts here said that on Thursday alone China had given three indications of its intention to go ahead with the Daya Bay plant. Chinese official news agencies carried three reports stressing the safety of the planned plant, which is to be built only 70 kilometres (40 miles) from crowded Hong Kong.

The Chinese indications came hard on the heels of the Hong Kong Government's reiteration of its commitment to buy 70 per cent of the electricity the power station is to produce when it becomes operational in the early 1990's.

The acting governor of Hong Kong, Sir David Akers-Jones, told reporters on Thursday that "any suggestion of withdrawal" by Hong Kong would be "most serious," while Financial Secretary Piers Jacobs said on Wednesday that a pull-out would put the government's credibility at stake.

The planned cost of the plant is 2.5 billion U.S. dollars. It is the biggest Sino-foreign joint venture, involving Hong Kong, French, and British interests. China is due to sign by September final contracts for the plant — which is to use French reactors and British turbines — with French concerns Framatome and Electricite de France and the General Electric Co of Britain.

The nuclear equipment is already under construction in France, and a Chinese order-cancellation at this stage would put "tens of millions of U.S. dollars" from Beijing's coffers into the dustbin, the highly-placed Chinese source said.

The issue now carries strong political overtones, observers said, as it is seen as a test of China's sincerity in implementing a Sino-British agreement under which Hong Kong is to enjoy a high degree of autonomy after it reverts to Chinese rule in 1997. Local protests against the project have been increasing since April, following the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear plant in the Soviet Union. Close to one million people -- or nearly one fifth of Hong Kong's population -- ranging from primary school pupils to professionals, have signed a petition against the plant organised by various anti-nuclear bodies here.

"But would you call this opinion?" an official of the local branch of the NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY -- Beijing's de facto representative office here -- asked AFP.

"It has been a bunch of amateur politicians trying to take advantage of schoolchildren and the gullible man-in-the-street." Commented the authoritative Chinese source: "The real decision-makers are up in Beijing."

OFFICIAL TERMS ECONOMIC SITUATION 'GOOD'

OW180946 Beijing XINHUA in English 0930 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- China's economic situation has been good since the beginning of this year, said Zhang Zhongji, spokesman of the State Statistical Bureau, at a press conference here today. He cited a good harvest of summer grain and oil-bearing crops, a continuous growth of industrial production and a stable market.

China harvested 91.88 million tons of grain this summer, 3.14 million tons more than the previous year. By the end of June, the state had purchased 5.16 million tons more grain than in the same 1985 period.

He attributed this to a greater acreage under summer grain crops, which was enlarged by 360,000 hectares. The peasants' input into land increased by 10.6 percent compared with the same 1985 period, he added. Zhang told reporters that the country's total industrial output value rose by 4.9 percent in the January-June period over the corresponding period of 1985 which saw an excessive growth rate of 23.1 percent.

"Energy and raw material production is encouraging," Zhang said. Power production grew by eight percent, at a rate faster than that of the overall industrial production. Output rose between 10 and 15 percent for pig iron, steel and cement. Transportation was improved as well, he said, and ports along China's coasts handled 13.8 percent more goods in the first six months. The total investment of the public sector in capital construction was 33.7 billion yuan in the first half of this year, an increase of 7.9 percent over the same 1985 period, which showed a high growth rate of 43.5 percent.

"The supply of commodities in the country has been sufficient and that of meat, poultry, eggs, aquatic products and vegetables are better than the previous years and the prices are also basically stable," Zhang said.

"The upward trend in the general price index slowed down month by month in the six months, averaging an increase rate of only 5.5 percent," Zhang said. "Since the market was relatively stable, the buyers were more selective," he added.

However, the spokesman said, there were still some problems in China's economic development, including lower economic efficiency of the state-owned industry and commerce, a faster growth rate of the state expenditure than income and the continued imbalance between imports and exports.

Measures are being taken by government departments concerned to tackle these problems, he said.

REPORT PRAISES CULTURE MINISTER, SUBORDINATES

HK210342 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0102 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Report: "New Leaders of China's Ministry of Culture Indicate That They Will Neither 'Set Fires' Nor 'Stir up Winds'" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jul (XINHUA) -- There is a common saying in China: "A new official applies strict measures." However, the newly appointed minister and vice ministers of China's Ministry of Culture said, "We will neither set fires nor stir up winds."

Their "footnote" to this is: "In order to make a fire, it is first necessary to gather firewood. If one tries to build a fire without using firewood, one can easily set things ablaze. By doing this, one burns oneself, if not others."

The overseas edition of LIAOWANG weekly, on sale tomorrow, carries a report on how the new minister and vice ministers went about their new jobs. According to this report, the new minister and vice ministers indicated that "It is necessary to do something substantive and to avoid paying lip service; that is, to avoid doing superficially clever and superficially impressive things."

According to this report, Minister Wang Meng has repeatedly stressed that it is necessary to avoid using the word "takeoff" because we are just "taking the first step." This means that we should start our journey across the cultural domain in a down-to-earth manner.

Elaborating on the views of the new leading body, Wang Meng said: "It is necessary to try our best to preserve and develop the cordial and harmonious cultural atmosphere now in existence. In preserving and developing this atmosphere, we should count on thorough understanding and implementation of the party's policy regarding art and literature. It is necessary to understand fully the party's principle and policy regarding art and literature. One must not interpret them according to one's own needs or stubbornly stick to one's own views. Still less should we do something to disrupt this harmony and unity. Harmony and friendliness are not something unilateral. In this regard, we should never "do to others what we do not want to be done to us."

Wang Meng said: "We have been worried for a long time about the divergence of views on art and literature. Now, such a state of mind should change.

"It is not the duty of a cultural affairs administration ministry to judge controversies. It should introduce an environment characterized by contention between various schools of thought (including criticism). Leaders of the Ministry of Culture should participate in this contention and discussions as equals of other participants. They should frankly exchange views with art and literature workers, try to learn from each other, and give impetus to the new, healthy development of art and culture with them."

According to the same report, Sichuan's Gigong City Sichuan Opera Troupe not long ago produced and put on stage an opera entitled "Pan Jinlian," on which people held different views. Some commended it. Others disapproved of it. People closely watched the Ministry of Culture to see what stand it would take. Some goody-goody people advised Wang Meng not to view the opera because comments would not be easy to make. However, Wang Meng said: "Whoever is willing to view it should go ahead. This is not compulsory." He viewed the opera as both an ordinary moviegoer and one in the same trade as artists and writers. He cordially talked to the composer and the principal actors and actresses and encouraged their pioneering and exploring spirit. By mingling the past with the present, he suggested, these people have enriched theatrical thinking and given a touch of modernity to the story. He also suggested that all this has great significance for the reforms and explorations concerning the form of operas. However, he also pointed out some expressive inadequacies and the absence of ideological depth in the opera. He said: As the ministry in charge of literary and art affairs, the Culture Ministry should first create a harmonious and cordial environment and atmosphere in order to encourage literature and art workers to boldly explore and innovate. It should never rashly pass final judgment on a certain work.

The report praises the new leaders of the Culture Ministry for "not putting on airs." After assuming office, Wang Meng and Gao Zhanxiang, the executive vice minister of culture, have visited many art troupes and colleges of arts, sought the advice of experts, and frankly talked to writers and artists. Wang Meng has visited the China Youth's Art Theatrical Company, the Central Philharmonic Society, the China Song and Dance Theatrical Company, the Traditional Chinese Painting College, the Central Academy of Dramtic Arts, the Central Conservatory of Music, the China Beijing Opera College, the Oriental Song and Dance Ensemble, the Central Song and Dance Troupe, the Institute of Chinese Art, and the Central Institute of Fine Arts. He has held forums at these institutions and had heart-to-heart talks with more than 20 experts including Zhang Geng, Su Yiping, Cui Meishan, Li Delun, Bai Shuxiang, and Wang Yuanhua. He has also visited Shandong's Jinan to examine the reform of literary and artistic organizations. Since assuming office, Gao Zhanxiang has visited Hunan, Hubei, Shanghai, and Jilin. He has visited more than 30 literary and artistic organizations and called on Ba Jin, Xia Yan, Cao Yu, Wu Zuoren, Yang Mo, Chen Bohua, Wu Yanze, Xia Juhua, and many other famous artists and writers. He has also visited the quarters of some literature and art workers.

According to this report, in addition to exercising administrative leadership, the leaders of the ministry continue to pay attention to their own careers. Those who are interested in literary creation continue to write and those interested in performing arts continue to create characters. Ba Jin, an aged writer, praised them, saying that "This is excellent. They can be less bureaucratic." Cao Yu, another writer, described this as a "wonderful" phenomenon.

LEADERS DISCUSS BUREAUCRATIC WORK STYLE

HK200712 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0100 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jul (XINHUA) -- Some leaders of the CPC Central Committee and State Council recently criticized the bureaucratism that exists in China's party and government organs and demanded that party members take the lead in struggling against bureaucratic phenomena and work style, so as to further the progress of reforms and opening up.

According to an article in Issue No 14 of BAN YUE TAN, which is about to come off the press, State Council Vice Premier Wan Li recently said when discussing the grave harm done by bureaucratcism: "The work style, structure, and ideology of our organs are still unable to meet the needs of reform and opening up." He said that low work efficiency, poor staff quality, buck-passing, and serious bureaucratism are all chronic ailments in the organs, and it is essential to summon up resolve to overcome them.

Wan Li said: "Our program is to serve the people wholeheartedly, but our disease is bureaucratism. It is bureaucratism that most dissatisfies the people, and it is the program of serving the people that is most welcome to them."

Central Advisory Commission Vice Chairman Bo Yibo said: I call China's bureaucratism to the death, so extremely hard is it to put right. Organs are duplicated in this big country of China like a spider's web, and nobody can jump out of it. Some organs take more than 80 or even 100 days to issue a document. He called on party members to break through this web of bureaucratism.

Central Secretariat member Hu Qili said: The issue that Wan Li has raised of eliminating bureaucratism and improving work efficiency is an extremely important question and a major content of reform. He said that whether bureaucratism can be eliminated and work efficiency improved constitute one of the yardsticks for judging whether reforms have been done well or badly.

SCHOLARS URGE SEPARATION OF PARTY, STATE ROLES

HK200818 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0702 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jul (XINHUA) -- According to the overseas edition of LIAOWANG to be published tomorrow, a number of experts and scholars here told that reforms of China's political structure are imperative, because the current in-depth development of economic structural reforms require such reforms.

According to the report, the CPC Central Committee party school recently held a seminar in Beijing on the theory of political structural reform. Invited were Gong Xiangrui, professor of law at Bejing University; Gao Fang, professor of international politics at the Chinese People's University; Chen Yizi, director of the China political structural reform studies center; and researchers and responsible persons of relevant CPC Central Committee and State Council departments; totalling 130 persons. They held lively discussions on the nature, aims, basic contents, necessity, and feasibility of reforming China's political structure.

On the question of why such reforms should be carried out, Professor Gong Xiangrui of Beijing University held that there are three reasons; First, the reform of the economic structure embodies changes in the production relations and is bound to require that corresponding reforms be carried out in the political structure, which belongs to the superstructure. For instance, the economic structural reforms urgently need a large number of talented economic managers with up-to-date knowledge and pioneering spirit, but the current cadre system in China is not beneficial for discovering, forging, and training talent or for gradually reducing the age and improving the educational standards of the cadre contingent. Moreover, the system frequently causes burial and wastage of a large number of talented persons.

Second, political structural reforms are needed in order to build a high degree of socialist democracy. This is because in China's current political setup there exist things like the patriarchal system, autocracy, bureaucratism, and so on that hamper the development of socialist democracy.

Third, political structural reforms are necessary from the angle of the quality of culture and education and of the angle of correcting unhealthy trends. Take, for instance, the unhealthy trend of abuse of power, if we had a set of laws regulating the powers, obligations, and duties of state cadres and public servants and a complete system covering the selection, appointment, supervision, examination, and dismissal of leading cadres, the unhealthy trend of abuse of power would be very greatly restricted.

According to the report, the subject of greatest debate and argument at the meeting was the question of how to specifically carry out reforms of the political structure, and in particular the question of the point of breakthrough for such reforms. Some held that separation of party and government and rational distribution of powers should be regarded as the point of breakthrough in reforming the political structure; only thus can the problem of overconcentration of powers in the party be resolved. Others held that only by establishing a socialist system with a high degree of democracy and correctly solving the question of the relationship between democracy and centralization can the goals of reforming the political structure be attained. The great majority of the participants held that in carrying out political structural reforms it is essential to get a good grasp of two issues; separation of party and government, and a high degree of democracy. This is because all other problems that need resolving derive from these two issues.

Feng Shengbao, deputy director of the foreign political systems research center of the diplomatic institute, said that replacement of the government by the party is a kind of artisan method that has caused many unpleasant consequences; for instance, a high concentration of powers; personality cult; the party was above the law and enjoyed concentrated power, with the result that the legal system could not be established; a sense of dependence was nourished in the cadres; and the system was purely upward in form. This state of affairs weakened party work. He held that it is necessary to establish "the principle of socialist division of powers with checks and balances, and to bring into play the systems engineering role of the political structure." Professor Gao Fang held that the main thing in reform of the political structure is to resolve the question of rational distribution of powers, including those between party and government, between the central authorities and the localities, and between the legislature and the judiciary.

However, it is not an absolute division of powers but a rational apportioning. He stressed leading forward other reforms by means of this reform.

Discussing the question of how to achieve a high degree of democracy, deputy researcher Tan Jian said that the goal of political structural reform is to build a socialist country with a high degree of democracy. This democracy includes making politics democratic and public, turning policy-making into a scientific business, making political activities into a legal system, and systematizing supervision of the organs.

According to the report, CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department Director Zhu Houze spoke at the meeting. He said that Comrade Deng Xiaoping has spoken many times of the importance of political structural reform. He recently made a point of stressing the necessity and urgency of this reform. Zhu expressed the hope that everyone would step up investigation and study; get hold of detailed materials; apply Marxist-Leninist stand, viewpoint, and method; succeed in linking theory with reality; and carry out bold explorations with a scientific approach and rigorous work style. They should carry out research in many aspects, to build a political science system with Chinese characteristics.

GUANGMING RIBAO URGES SIMPLICITY IN ENTERTAINING

HK180813 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 10 Jul 86 p 1

["Everybody Talks" column by Deng Jiarong: "After Reading the Menu of the Queen of England's Banquet"]

[Text] Recently, TA KUNG PAO in Hong Kong struck a fresh note by publishing the menu of the banquet held by the British queen in honor of Hu Yaobang. Reading this short menu can give people many inspirations and thoughts. In her capacity as head of state, at 1 p.m. on 11 June, the queen of England hosted a banquet at Buckingham Palace in honor of the distinguished guest Hu Yaobang and his entourage. Naturally the standard was very high and the atmosphere was very harmonious. However, the menu listed only cooked eggs, asparagus, stewed chicken, chicken liver, fried rice, spinach, carrots, egg pudding, strawberries and cream. It was so simple and economical. After the ceremonies and the lunch were over, all the necessary diplomatic activities which had to be initiated at the dinner table were also accomplished. Thus, we see that a state banquet does not have to include delicacies of every kind.

Nevertheless, many of our localities and units tend to provide lavish feasts to almost every visiting group of fraternal unit with some positive experiences to share. Moreover, they even like to include all the local delicacies in these feasts. They seem to think that if they do not do so they are failing to extend their hospitality to their guests or to demonstrate the excellent economic status of their own units, and running counter to our national customs and ancient civilization. However, they just do not know how much they have wasted amid their hearty hospitality!

If some of our localities can simplify the various formalities of entertaining guests, we can surely save a lot of money, energy, and time.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SELF-BETTERMENT OF REFORMERS

HK200638 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 19 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Comrades Standing in the Forefront of the Reforms Should Constantly Better Themselves"]

[Text] Not long ago, a manager of a Shanghai collective enterprise published an article in JIEFANG RIBAO pointing out the need for reformers to better themselves. This is a well posed problem. It shows that our reformers are clear-minded. We would like to express our opinion on this and to exchange views with comrades who are playing an active part in the reforms.

The reforms are an important policy, important principle, decided by the CPC Central Committee. In order to implement this principle, it is necessary that many pioneers who have the courage to explore and to innovate and who fear neither difficulties nor setbacks explore ahead of others. Without these pioneers, it would have been impossible to create the new situation in the reforms. What is heartening is that in recent years, various localities have produced comrades who resolutely want to play a part in the reforms. At their respective jobs, they explore and surge ahead and have achieved much. The masses respect and love them very much.

However, one should be able to see many comrades have enthusiastically participated in the reforms without being well prepared ideologically. The manager mentioned above said: "When we initiated the reforms, we only aimed to dismantle the old systems. We were ideologically ill-prepared for the complications resulting from the development of a commodity economy." This is an important reason why many comrades have made both outstanding achievements and mistakes at the same time. However, people can learn about the reforms only in the course of the reforms. This is something like the revolutionary war, which people learned about by fighting in it. In carrying out reforms, the total absence of mistakes is impossible. This is why the central leading comrades have repeatedly stressed that mistakes are permissible in the course of reforms. We should neither be unduly preoccupied with nor exaggerate them. As for those comrades who have resolved to carry out reforms, an important thing is that they should sum up their experience and the lessons learned and properly account for the mistakes in order to make their future work even more successful and more in keeping with the actual circumstances.

After "falling into a pit," one must seriously sum up one's experience before one can hope for "a gain in one's wit." An important way for a reformer to improve and better himself is to look squarely at his own mistakes and to be good at summing up experience and lessons.

Another important way for a reformer to better and improve himself is to devote further efforts to studying. The purpose of the reform of our economic structure is to develop a planned socialist commodity economy. In addition to studying and understanding Marxist views, viewpoints, and methods, it is also necessary to strive to acquire some knowledge of a commodity economy, including knowledge about prices, marketing, and information. It is necessary to acquire knowledge of modern management in order to provide a scientific basis for the management of the enterprises under our leadership.

It is necessary to acquire legal knowledge so that our enterprises will operate in accordance with the laws and regulation and we will not violate the law out of ignorance. We should be able to see that in spite of their reformist and innovative spirit, some of our comrades have little scientific and cultural knowledge. It is very necessary for them to devote some efforts to this and to make up their inadequacies.

"One loses by pride and gains by modesty." This time-honored saying is good for anyone and it can enlighten the minds of the comrades standing in the forefront of the reforms. Even if we have achieved much, we must still view things from two angles, to be aware of our mistakes and shortcomings, and to remain modest and careful. It is necessary to be receptive to opinions different from our own, including sharp criticism and even criticial and one-sided opinions. So long as others are not spitefully vilifying us or spreading rumors to hurt us, we must not readily say that others are "undermining the reforms," "going against the reforms," or "impeding the reforms." We must avoid giving all credit to ourselves or being unaware of the "overall climate," which is favorable for the reforms. We must never be unaware of the support given by various parties or of the people's strength. By the way, I must add that there are newspapers, periodicals, and literary works that describe a reformer as an omnipotent hero capable of turning back the tides and doing everything conceivable or inconceivable. This is inconsistent with the facts. We cannot really help or cherish the determined reformer by doing this. We can only cause trouble.

The comrades standing in the forefront of the reforms are surrounded by countless eyes, including ones behind which there are malicious intentions and which are sensitive only to mistakes. However, these are few in number. Most of the eyes are trustful and expecting eyes. People usually set strict demands on the people playing a leading role in reforms. They want them to boldly explore and innovote, to be upright, and to be strict with themselves. These demands combine to form something that can be referred to as the moral integrity characteristic of our times. Reformers with this character will be invincible. Comrade Zhang Jieshi, late manager of the Great Wall Raincoat Factory, was such a person. If the comrades responsible for directing the reforms are not careful about their conduct or if they try to secure personal gains by capitalizing on their power, they will ruin their images and be divorced from the masses despite their outstanding performance.

Self-betterment on the part of the comrades standing in the forefront of the reforms is in fact the problem of thoroughly improving one's qualities. People cannot wait until they have perfecterd their qualities before they participate in the reforms. However, in the course of the reforms, one must constantly progress and constantly improve and better oneself. This is absolutely necessary and absolutely possible. Some comrades who are enthusiastic about carrying out reforms have indicated that they do not want to be "transient figures." This resolution is something good. I believe that this is a common desire of many who regard the reforms as their own duty.

HONGQU CRITICIZIES CHEN YONG ATTACK ON LIU ZAIFU

HK170059 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1016 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — The current issue of HONGGI published today carries a signed article by Weng Chunyuan in open discussion with Chen Yong. The article holds the view that Chen Yong lacks the necessary patience and enthusiasm for the new atmosphere emerging in current studies in literatary theory and in literature and art science. He is not proceeding from modern indeology and ideology of reform and progress in viewing matters, but looks at realities from a conventional and conservative angle, with the materials he quotes mostly outmoded, and nothing fresh in his viewpoints.

Chen Yong's article, entitled "Some Questions on the Methodology of Literature and Art Science" was carried in the 1986 No 8 issue of HONGGI, in which he criticized Liu Zaifu, director of the Institute of Literature under the Academy of Social Sciences of China, for a series of theses on literary introspection published in recent years, and pointed out several problems in literary criticism. Liu has published nothing so far in response to this criticism.

Wang Chunyuan is now assistant research fellow of the Institute of Literature under the Academy of Social Sciences of China. His article entitled "Literary Criticism and the Structure of Cultural Psychology" is carried in the column "Discussion on the Methodology of Literature and Art Science" in HONGGI.

Wang Chunyuan believes that Chen Yong's article is on the whole correct when it touches in general terms upon the basic tenets of Marxism. For example, his analysis and criticism of Liu Zaifu's view on human "passivity" and "activity" is entirely correct. Besides, the criticism in Chen's article on some literary critics for their extreme poverty in knowledge of Marxism is also to the point.

This 16-year-old long-standing specialist in the theory of literature and art points out that Chen Yong has drawn a conclusion of a political nature on the changing situation in the literature and art science, namely, that a minority of people are demoting Marxism under the pretext of "developing" Marxism or "renovating literary concepts," and such a view is astonishing.

Wang Chunyuan says in his article, he would never believe that very bookish people like Liu Zaifu and those who hold the same view as him could possibly make use of the realm of research in literature and art science to fight against Marxism in a big way; even if there really are points that do not conform to the basic spirit of Marxism in their articles, that is only theoretical exploration, and by no means will they produce such a tremendous and universal theoretical impact as a "spiritual atom bomb" which would blast out " the fate of China's socialist literature and art," and " the fate of Marxism in China."

The article says, Marxism has opened up infinite possibilities leading to truth; however, it is not an omnipotent formula exhaustive of all truth. If someone should regard Marxism as a panacea, he would not be advocating science but propagating superstition.

According to Wang's article, the fact that Chen Yong has elevated a question of sheer theoretical exploration to one that has a bearing on the fate of Marxism in China is a manifestation of the theory of ideology determining the situation. Such a theory believes that intellectuals, those in the cultural circles in particular, are the chief factor for instability, and that a few articles, a play, and two or three novels are powerful enough to bring about the fall of the party and the nation.

Wang Chuyuan holds that, an all-round estimation of China's literature and art science at present should be: It is as thriving as it is confused; but looking at it from the general trend of development, this is the inevitable road for the progress of theory and research in literature and art science in China, as well as an entirely normal and healthy phenomenon.

The article also believes that attention should be attached to "leniency" in human relations; however, neither "leniency" nor favors are necessary in normal contention in the literature and art science. Everyone should air his own views, and hidden and half hidden disputes should be brought out into open discussion.

LIU ZAIFU DISCUSSES CRITICISM, REFORM -- PART I

HK181420 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0743 GMT 16 Jul 86

Article by Wang Yongzhi and Xia Chunping. "Relaxation and Harmony Signify National Progress" (part I) -- An interview with Liu Zaifu -- selectedfrom HUASHENG BAO (CHINA VOICE NEWS) of 11 July)

[Text] A year ago when Liu Zaifu who was just 44 years old was appointed director of the Cultural Studies Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences, he delivered an inaugural speech on implementing the "double hundred" principle, ensuring academic freedom, respecting academic virtues. The speech evoked very great repercussions both at home and abroad.

Now, a year later because literature and art theoretician Chen Yong published a long article entitled "On Literature and Art Methodology" in the theoretical magazine HONGGI, criticizing Liu Zaifu's thought in literature and art by name, once again this same Liu Zaifu became the focus of attention of people both at home and abroad. Hence, overseas publications called the event the "Liu Zaifu Case." How does Liu Zaifu approach the debate? How are things with him now? A few days ago, we interviewed Liu Zaifu, a scholar who vigorously advocated innovation in literary conceptions, in his residence.

"I Feel the Motherland has Made Progress"

Mr Liu Zaifu, wearing a white T-shirt, was rather fat and scholarly. When we explained our purpose in coming, he greeted us and asked us to be seated. Then he said: "After HONGGI published Chen Yong's article, every day I received many telephone calls and letters expressing enthusiastic support for me. Some overseas writers and scholars also sent me letters showing their concern for me. I learned from newspapers and magazines sent by may friends working abroad that interested people abroad were very concerned about what was happening to me. This moved me deeply. Today I wish, through your newspaper, to express my heartfelt gratitude to my friends both at home and abroad who have shown their concern for me."

"My friends both at home and abroad can rest assured that everything is going well with me. When HONGQI published Chen Yong's article, our country was stressing the importance of creating a relaxed and harmonious atmosphere in the theoretical community. I was lucky enough to have such good fortune. In such an atmosphere, every academic worker drew spiritual support and encouragement. So did I. The atmosphere has, fundamentally speaking, protected me. Moreover, I also feel that I have been protected by the community and that the community is disgusted with the practices of exaggeration. I deeply feel that our motherland has made progress and our people have become mature. Everybody hopes that our country will enjoy lasting peace and a peaceful social and cultural environment. I feel that people have shown their concern not only for me but also for the fate of the reform currently going on in our motherland. Now intellectuals both at home and abroad have come to realize that our motherland is in a historical stage of shaking off poverty and striving for prosperity. The motherland becoming strong and prosperous is no longer an illusion. Intellectuals have gradually realized that their mission is to build their motherland into a strong modern country. The hearts of the descendants of Emperors Yan Di and Huang Di both at home and abroad are linked to each other. What is in their minds is reform, modernization, and working hard for the prosperity of the country. Throbbing with the pulse of the times, linking one's fate with the destiny of the reform, and striving for the prosperity of the nation are becoming the common aspirations of intellectuals both at home and abroad. With this understanding, I no longer pay attention to my own honor or dishonor."

"Once I Also Felt Worried"

"Once I also felt worried," said Liu Zaifu, pondering for a while, "I am engaged in scientific work. I love science very much. I think that I shall feel happy if I have a peaceful and profound spiritual life. If people have divergent opinions on my views and debate about them, this is actually a good thing. It will help crack the shell of ideological confinement of the two parties in the debate and help set off my latent energy and intensify my research. Then I am still be in the 'metaphysical' state of the mind. However, when my academic viewpoints are politically exaggerated and even regarded as endangering the fate of Marxism, I have to defende my political stand before my academic viewpoints. Thus, I have to wrangle with my theoretical opponents on the political arena, moving from 'being metaphysical' to 'being concrete.' In other words, I have to step down from the facet of 'self-accomplishment' spirtitual need to the facets of 'existence need' and 'safety need." (In his article 'On Literary Themes," Liu Zaifu quoted the viewpoint of American psychologist Maslow that divides the need of man into five basic facets of existence need, safety need, ownership need, respect need, and self-accomplishment need.)

Mr Liu said: "This wrangling does not help scientific progress. Before me, there were many intellectuals who wasted their lives in this kind of meaningless wrangling. Moreover, such wranglings would always end with various political labels being put on intellectuals. They spent little time engaging in peaceful academic research. This is a tragedy of internal attrition. At first I wanted to save my time and continue with my further research but some people came out to challenge me to debate and some even shouted curses, asking me to meet their challenges 'with the vigor of a rising dragon or leaping tiger' rather than allowing me to keep silent.

"Must I rush out to wrangle? I felt vexed about this because I know this kind of wrangling will not do science any good and there is no precedent of success in this regard by relying on 'the vigor of a rising dragon or leaping tiger.'

"Moreover, I also felt vexed because I was sandiched between scholars of two generations. Some old scholars thought that I had gone too far while some young scholars regarded me as not 'terrific enough.' More often than not, I was attacked from both sides. This generation gap may be called 'difference in knowledge structure' and 'difference in psychological structure.' After Chen Yong's article was published, I strongly felt that there was a deep 'cultural gap' between us. Chen Yong regarded what I thought settled as unsettled. I think we lack an explorative spirit. Some 'leftist' views hindering the reform are still deep-rooted. But he thinks that currently 'right deviation is gaining ground.' As I see it, at present more effects should be made to encourage the predominant spirit of the individuals and of the nation and not to stamp out the personality and creativity of man at will, but Chen Yong regards this as 'voluntarist.' To put it briefly, he regarded what I thought normal as abnormal and vice versa. I suddenly realized that I could not understand what he said. For example, he said: The essential laws of historical materialism are the most profound and essential laws governing literature and art and the relationship between art and politics is a relationship between form and content. This remark is really hard to understand."

Coming to this point, Liu Zaifu said with a smile: "However, you must not worry about me. Worry cannot overwhelm me. I will surmount both external pressure and my worries. I believe that the process of scientific deepening is precisely the process of this constant surmounting of pressure and worries. I will not let myself by overwhelmed by these worries because I still have more important work to do."

LIU ZAIFU DISCUSSES CRITICISM, REFORM - PART II

HK181450 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0919 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Article by Wang Yongzhi and Xia Chunping:" "Relaxation and Harmony Signify National Progress" (Part II) -- An interview with Liu Zaifu -- selected from HUASHENG BAO (CHINA VOICE NEWS) of 11 July]

[Text] "I Should Also Share the Responsibility"

"We need to eliminate feelings of estrangement in our culture and need to seek common language so as to make joint efforts to create conditions for our country's reform. The first thing that all of us should do is to look into our own thoughts and feelings to find out their real meaning and the reasons for them." Mr Liu continued: "We have all experienced the tremendous spiritual calamity of the Cultural Revolution. It is certain that this national calamity was caused by a handful of careerists, but it is not enough to merely condemn them. We should also realize our own responsiblity. If there had not been a certain national cultural and psychological foundation, or if our nation had not had some common weak points, the 'Cultural Revolution' would not have become a fact. The poem collection 'Saying Good-bye' I wrote represents my introspection about the 'Cultural Revolution' and my efforts to find the lost conscience.

"It is my confession, whose purpose is to reaffirm human dignity. I feel that we should all have a feeling of repentance and should realize that 'I should also share the responsibility' as a member of this nation for the 10-year-long national calamity. Otherwise, we may repeat the previous mistakes and return to the thoughts and practice of 'taking class struggle as the key link.' People may even feel at ease and justified when repeating such thoughts and practice. After 'bludgeoning' other people, they may even pretend to be serious by asking 'where is the bludgeon.' It seems the 'bludgeoning' other people has become a habit of these people and that disregarding other people's human dignity has become a terrible 'subconciousness' in their minds. Today, when carrying out reform, we must thoroughly break the trammels of the concept of 'taking class struggle as the key link,' but this is never easy. As long as every one of us can really think deeply about it and see what happened in China under the guidance of this 'key link,' then no one will come out to obstruct the change and reform of the cultural concepts, and there will no longer be such things as Chen Yen's exaggerated criticism which was even praised by some people as 'full of foresight and real knowledge,' (a quotation of Lu Meilin)."

Liu Zaifu said: "Some people are used to being 'judges.' However, a 'judge' should not only pass judgment on other people's cases, but should also pass judgment on himself. Only thus can a person continuously enhance his realm of thought, correctly treat other people, have more enthusiasm and sense of responsibility for reform, and avoid repeating the mistakes of bludgeoning other people. When the cultural atmosphere becomes more benign and normal and no one attacks and insults me, I am willing to dissect my thoughts and pass judgment on myself."

"I Am Full Of Confidence in Reform"

When talking about reform, Ziu Ziafu said: Reform is arduous, and reform concerning the deep level of the cultural psychological structure is even more arduous. Cultural reform will not achieve such quick results as economic reform, so we must not be impatient. However, I am full of confidence in our country's reform. I have seen the remarkable changes in China's rural areas which are inhabited by 800 million people. I also see that the urban situation is getting better and better. More impotantly, I feel that our country now has a realistic approach to things, to ourselves, and to the world. Reform proceeds completely from our country's realities rather than mechanically copying foreign modes. The CPC has its own belief and plans, and understands Marxism in its own way. In short, we have our unique image. We have now realized the necessity to open a road leading to our country's modernization. Not only will we realize economic, scientific, and technological modernization, but also political and cultural modernization. Such modernization will absorb all cultural wealth of mankind and will inherit and develop all good things of human society.

The destiny of Marxism is linked with the destiny of the countries where Marxism holds a ruling position. Only by making China rich and strong can we win a good reputation for Marxism. Our reform should, on the one hand, promote our economic developmenmt; on the other hand, it should also enrich the 1 billion people's cultural life. We should say with full assurance that the things we are pursuing including all the good aspects of mankind (democracy, freedom, human rights, and peace). A social form which includes all these things does not exist abroad, and the classics of Marxism do not give us a modern mode of such a social form.

We cannot use a dogmatist and abstract yardstick which is divorced from reality to measure and judge our current reform. We should assimilate all good things which are helpful to China's prosperity, development, and progress and turn them into nourishment for creating a new civilization.

Some people become nervous when humanitarianism is mentioned, and would be prepared to "make criticism." In fact, this is rather stupid. Why can socialism not be linked with humanitarianism.

"China really needs socialist humanitarianism now!" Liu Zaifu said with deep feelings. First, this will improve the image of the Chinese nation in the world; second, it will help harmonize human relations in our country; third, it will affirm the subjective value and creativity of individuals. The gravity center of our nation's life has been shifted. In the past, our social life was based on the concept of "taking class struggle as the key link," which has been proved wrong. Now, we are seeking a new base for the national spirit. In my opinion, socialist humanitarianism should be the new supporting points. Then, Liu Zaifu predicted with deep feelings: "I expect that in a certain period to come, the cultural concept of 'taking class struggle as the key link' and socialist humanitarianism will be the fundamental cultural clashes in our nation's life."

Knitting the Brocade of Life

Liu Zaifu was born in a southern Fujian village. He has made great efforts to promote the development of literature and art theory in our country. So far, he has published many works, including "Lu Xun's Aesthetic Thought" and "Biography of Lu Xun," and five poem collections including "Pure White Rush." His name has been included in the book "Who's Who" compiled by the World Biography Center of Cambridge University. In late April this year, he was promoted to be researcher by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences. Later this month, this work "The Composition of Disposition" will be published. At present, he is busy reading the final proof of "Liu Zaifu Literature Theses" published in Hong Kong. It is expected that this book will be available to readers late next month. His other theses collection "Introspection of Literature" will be published by the people's literature publishing house by the end of this year.

Before we finished the interview, Liu Zaifu told us that he is planning to deepen the study of the subjective nature of literature, and will write a book on this topic. After the interview, we recalled a passage in his book "On the Subjective Nature of Literature": "A person most easily loses freedom under these two conditions; being bogged down in adverse circumstances and being confined by his reputation in favorable circumstances." His work and his thoughts about human society and human life prove that he is able to maintain freedom in both adverse and favorable circumstances.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON ROLE OF IDEOLOGICAL WORK

HK180745 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 5 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by Wu Anchun: "Also Discussing the Position and Role of Ideological and Political Work"]

[Excerpt] At present, people have not achieved a unified understanding of the position and role of ideological and political work. Serious discussions about this issue will help people unify their understanding of this issue. [paragraph continues]

This is of significance in strengthening our ideological and political work. In this article, I would like to give my elementary opinion on some aspects of this issue.

I

During a certain period, some newspapers, journals, and other works often said that "ideological and political work is a branch of science." I do not think that this is a clear concept. It may mean that ideological and political work is a kind of professional work which must follow some objective laws and be based on a scientific foundation. It may also mean that ideological and political work itself is a branch of science. Therefore, that proposition may equate professional work with scientific principles and thus confuse practice with theory. As we all know, science refers to an ideological system or a theoretical system which is based on the summing-up of practical experience. Ideological and political work itself is not a theoretical system. It is specific work, like economic work, technical work, educational work, or management work. Although it has to strictly follow some scientific rules, it is still a piece of specific professional work. Only economics, technology, pedagogy, and management science can be regarded as science. Similarly, only theoretical studies and theory about political work or political education can be regarded as a branch of science. The theory forms a sound scientific system, which is developed on the basis of summing up people's work practice and grasping the regularity of ideological and political work. The political work theory is now a young science branch. Its establishment and development will help us conduct ideological and political work in a scientific way and in line with the scientific principles of the relevant theory.

II

How should we analyse and understand the position of ideological and political work? Marxist philosophy tells us that matter and consciousness, as well as social being and social consciousness, exist in dialectical unity. Under the premise of affirming that social being determines social consciousness, we must also affirm the relatively independent position of social consciousness. Progressive social consciousness will promote social development; while backward and reactionary social consciousness will retard or obstruct social progress. People's activities in transforming the objective world, as well as all kinds of specific work, are guided by certain thoughts and plans and are designed to achieve certain purposes. So, only with correct thought can our work achieve good results; without the guidance of correct thought, we will not be able to do our work effectively and our work will not achieve good results. [passage omitted]

Some comrades ask: As the party Central Committee's decision on reform of the economic structure clearly stipulates, ideological work in the new period must follow the guideline of serving the party's general task and general objective. Will this lower the position of ideological and political work? This worry is unnecessary. As we know, our party's general task and general objective at the present stage is arduous and grand. To serve the realization of this great objective, ideological and political work will become more important rather than being downgraded. In fact, the party's ideological and political work not only serves the party's general task and general objective now, but it has always served the party's general task and general objective. [passage omitted]

III

Why does ideological and political work hold such an important position? Because "ideological and political work is the lifeblood of economic and other work" (quoted from "Resolution on Certain Questions in CPC History Since the Founding of the PRC"). The term "lifeblood" vividly shows the importance of ideological and political work. Its important role is reflected mainly in the following two aspects:

First, ideological and political work provides a reliable guarantee for the socialist character and orientation of our party's work in all fields. We are now engaged in a socialist cause, and our work in all fields should serve the purpose of advancing this cause. The party is the leadership core of the socialist cause. Only by subjecting our construction to the leadership of the party and acting in line with the party's principles and policies can we bring our work into line with the fundamental interests of the whole people and the socialist state. Our current modernization program is a major step leading to the realization of communism. In the modernization process, we must always adhere to the socialist orientation so as to build socialism with Chinese characteristics in our country. All of our reform measures should be favorable to the development of social productivity. Without the party's correct leadership, it is impossible to achieve these purposes. [passage omitted]

Second, ideological and political work provides a reliable guarantee for unifying people's will and arousing people's initiative. Socialist consciousness and a socialist movement will not spontaneously appear among the people, and their socialist initiative and creativity will not automatically be brought into play. We must make efforts and do ideological and political work to "tap" the potential initiative and creativity among the people. After we seized political power and solved the issue of ownership, our tasks of primary importance were to help the people realize that their fundamental interests lie: In the realization of socialist modernization; in the development of social productivity; in the continuous improvement of human relations which form a "united force" to promote the development of productivity. In order to fulfill these tasks, we cannot use the method of issuing coercive orders, but should just rely on careful and deepgoing ideological and political work so as to convince the people. Of course, ideological and political work is not the sole method and is not isolated from other work. When persisting in doing ideological and political work, we must also adopt various economic means to ensure the people's material interests. However, all economic means and material interests must be combined with effective and scientific ideological and political work. Only thus can they be really effective.

CHEN MUHUA ADDRESSES NATIONAL BANK CONFERENCE

OW152000 Beijing XINHUA in English 1443 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 15 (XINHUA) -- More currency was withdrawn from circulation, adequate credit funds were made available for industrial and agricultural production, and the foreign exchange reserve remained stable in the first half of this year, State Councillor Chen Muhua said here today.

The currency withdrawn from circulation between January and June was 6.5 billion yuan more than in the same period of last year, Chen, governor of the People's Bank of China told a national conference of the Agricultural Bank of China.

In the period, urban and rural savings deposits increased by 30 billion yuan, 47.5 percent more than the same period of last year. By the end of June, total urban and rural savings stood at 192.6 billion yuan.

Chen owed the progress to the stabilized domestic market, the increase of savings centers and improvement of banking services, and the rise in interest rates of savings deposits last year. "All these have greatly aroused the enthusiasm of the people for saving", she said.

She told the conference that banks have provided sufficient funds to enterprises for their production of goods in high demand, for export, raw and semi-finished materials, and energy, "though it is true that funds were strained at the beginning of the year."

Credit funds to fixed-assets increased in a controlled and steady way, Chen said. She expressed satisfaction that the agricultural bank has given adequate support for farming and livestock breeding, especially grain production. Credit loans to rural enterprises are also on the rise, she said.

The state foreign exchange reserves have stopped going down, she told the conference. In June, China earned 14.8 percent more from foreign trade, and paid 3.2 percent less for imports than in the same period of last year.

However, banks may still face problems caused by lack of funds in the latter half of the year, the governor warned. She urged the banks to work harder to keep the currency stable and strive for a balance in international revenue and expenditure.

DENG LIQUN ATTENDS PHOTO EXHIBITION OPENING

OW180105 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] An exhibition of art works and photos by people of Korean nationality living in Yanbian [Jilin Province] opened at the Cultural Palace for Nationalities this morning.

The oil paintings, traditional Chinese paintings, woodcuts, and photos on display portray the production, life, customs, and habits of people of Korean nationality from different angles.

Deng Liqun, Song Renqiong, Bangen Erdini Qoigyi Gyancan, and some comrades of Korean nationality working or studying in the capital attended the opening ceremony.

LI XIANNIAN WRITES INSCRIPTION FOR TIANJIN CITY

SK070931 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] After inspecting the work of Tianjin in early May, Li Xiannian, president of the state, personally wrote the inscription "The people's city should be built by the people" for our municipality to fully affirm the municipality's method of mobilizing the masses to jointly build their homeland.

During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, with the support and concern of the CPC Central Committee, the people of our municipality responded to the call of the municipal CPC Committee and the municipal government on "seeking welfare through self-reliance and building the people's city by the people." They worked with one heart and one mind, participated in labor on their own initiative, strove to build Tianjin into a new city, completed the project of diverting Luan He water to Tianjin, renovated streets, and built the central ring road, Haihe Park, the food street and the ancient cultural street, making remarkable changes in the outlook of Tianjin Municipality. "Building the people's city through the efforts of the people" has become an important experience in making Tianjin's municipal urban construction successful.

The inscription of Comrade Li Xiannian will be inscribed on the monuments erected on Qinjian bridge of the central ring road and in Xiahuayuan of Haihe Park.

LEADERS ATTEND BEIJING CALLIGRAPHY EXHIBITION

OW162229 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1150 GMT 16 Jul 86

[By correspondent Li Jun]

[Excerpt] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- The second national exhibition of young and middle-aged calligraphers and seal carvers opened at the Chinese Art Gallery in Beijing today.

Comrades Xi Zhongxun, Fang Yi, Song Renqiong, Zhang Aiping, and Qian Changzhao attended the opening ceremony and presented awards to outstanding calligraphers and seal carvers. [passage omitted]

XI ZHONGXUN ADDRESSES SELF-TAUGHT STUDENTS

OW141605 Beijing XINHUA in English 1453 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 14 (XINHUA) -- Twenty self-taught students got their bachelor of arts diplomas from Beijing's higher education institutions today.

Together with them, 1,433 students received certificates for passing eight separate college courses, including the Chinese language, law, mathematics and accounting. At the ceremony, held in the Great Hall of the People here, Xi Zhongxun, member of the Chinese Communist Party's Political Bureau, said that encouraging self-study is an efficient way to train qualified personnel for China's modernization program. Since the examination system for self-taught students of college courses was set up six years ago, 5,500 people have got bachelor's degrees or the college certificates.

ZHANG JINGFU URGES TESTING BUSINESS LEADERS

OW130943 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1353 GMT 11 Jul 86

[By reporter Ge Daxing]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 11 Jul (XINHUA) -- Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and chairman of the Guidance Committee for State Examinations for Economic Managerial Personnel, said: We must uphold the unified examination system for enterprise managers and plant and mine directors as a state institution. At present, enterprises are complaining about two many examinations. The departments concerned should make overall arrangements to cut back on some examinations, but we should first concentrate our energies on implementing the unified examination system.

The fifth group of enterprise managers and plant and mine directors is taking the examination from 11 to 14 July. Responsible persons of the Guidance Committee for State Examinations for Economic Managerial Personnel Zhang Jingfu, Yuan Baohua, He Guang, and Zhang Yanning and Beijing Vice Mayor Zhang Jianmin visited the examination sites in the Beijing area this morning and called on enterprise leading cadres taking the examination there. [passage omitted]

Zhang Jingfu told the enterprise leaders: Plant directors are very busy persons, but "a woodcutter must sharpen his knife in order to do his job well." As a result of their pre-examination training, many enterprise managers and plant and mine directors have more systematically studied and understood our principles and policies regarding socialist construction in the new period, and acquired the basic knowledge of enterprise management and economic legislation. With their improved leadership ability, they have remarkably promoted reform and production development in their respective enterprises. Zhang Jingfu said: Progress of the unified examination system is still uneven, because leaders of some enterprises have not taken the examination even though their names are on the examinee list. The departments concerned, including the departments in charge of enterprises, must firmly strengthen their supervision, actively create the necessary conditions for enterprise managers and plant and mine directors to take the unified examination, and strive to have the managers and directors of all large and medium-sized enterprises basically complete the examination this year.

PENG CHONG AT PHILHARMONIC ANNIVERSARY CONCERT

OW102325 Beijing XINHUA in English 1420 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 10 (XINHUA) -- The Central Philharmonic Society, China's largest association of conductors and musicians, celebrated its 30th anniversary here this evening with a concert of Chinese and foreign symphonies, choral music and piano, violin and vocal solos. Members of the society will perform throughout the week in the Beijing Concert Hall and elsewhere in the city. During the week, it will play works by Beethoven, Mozart, Schubert, as well as by China's leading composers including Xian Xinghai and He Luting.

Established in 1956, the Central Philharmonic Society includes more than 500 conductors and soloists and 120 choralists who have given more than 8,100 concerts for more than ten million people over the past 30 years. Winner of international awards, the society has played with conductors, musicians and singers from more than 30 foreign countries, including France, Italy, Japan and Singapore. Peng Chong, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, and other high-ranking officials attended this evening's performance.

WANG ZHAOGUO ADDRESSES GRADUATION CEREMONY

OW162230 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1231 GMT 16 Jul 86

[By reporter Zou Aiguo]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul (XINHUA) -- A graduation ceremony for the 1986 summer class students of the Central Party School was held at the school auditorium this afternoon. Comrades Hu Qili, Wang Zhaoguo, and Wang Zhen attended the ceremony to offer their congratulations to the 1,006 students, who have completed study at the school and will soon return to their posts.

These students were graduated from the school's training, advanced study, or other departments. Graduating together with them were 1,025 students of the branch campuses of the Central Party School.

Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission and president of the Central Party School, presided over the graduation ceremony. After declaring the opening of the ceremony, he asked Comrade Wang Zhaoguo, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat in charge of party organization and cadre work, to speak to the graduates.

Wang Zhaoguo's speech dwelt on the historical mission of young and middle-aged cadres. After reviewing the party's history, he pointed out that the primary historical mission of young and middle-aged cadres is to persist in making reforms and promoting the reform. He said that while ensuring smooth progress in the economic structural reform, it is necessary to take appropriate measures to reform the political system.

Relating his experience in conducting investigation and study for carrying out political structural reform, Wang Zhaoguo said: Political structural reform is a very important component of our efforts to perfect China's socialist system and build socialism with Chinese characteristics. By making reforms, we want to set up a highly democratic and efficient socialist political system, complete with legal system. He stressed that political structural reform should help improve and strengthen the party's leadership and should be carried out in a systematic and planned manner.

Wang Zhaoguo expounded five questions concerning political structural reform. They are: streamlining organization, raising efficiency, improving the socialist legal system, developing socialist democracy, and separating party from government functions.

Discussing the education of young and middle-aged cadres, Wang Zhaoguo said: In order to perform the historical mission, young and middle-aged cadres should strive to improve themselves in the following four aspects: First, they should have the courage and ability to creatively combine the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism and the party Central Committee's decisions and instructions with the concrete conditions where they live and where they work. Second, they should temper their party spirit and, as the people's public servants, be honest in performing official duties. Third, they should inherit and carry forward the fine tradition of working hard and going down to the grass-roots and hardship posts to utilize their talents. Fourth, in order to be qualified leaders for the modernization drive, they should work with efficiency, display democratic spirit, and never become the new bureaucrats.

Wang Zhaoguo said he was convinced that through extensive practical training, the young and middle-aged cadres will become Marxist theorists, excellent political leaders, and socialist entrepreneurs. In conclusion, he urged the graduates to jointly strive to fulfill the glorious historical mission and revitalize the Chinese nation in the 21st century in order to live up to the expectations of the party and the people.

Also attending the graduation ceremony were officials of departments concerned Han Tianshi, Wei Jianxing, Zhu Houze, and Zhao Dongwan.

LEADERS ATTEND PERFORMANCE OF LI BOZHAO'S WORKS

OW091411 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1402 GMT 7 Jul 86

[By reporter Li Guangru]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 7 Jul (XINHUA) -- A commemorative performance of Li Bozhao's literary and art works was held tonight at the Shoudu theater. Her modern drama "The Third" and opera "Song of the Countryside," both eulogizing the struggle and life in the anti-Japanese democratic base areas, were staged.

Leading comrades, including Xi Zhongxun, Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Hu Qili, Qin Jiwei, Wang Zhen, Song Renqiong, Wang Ping, Song Shilun, Liao Hansheng, Zhang Aiping, and Kang Keqing, attended the performance along with responsible persons of central organs, veteran Red Army fighters, public figures from literary and art circles, and people of the capital, nearly 1,000 in all.

Prior to the performance, Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission who had proposed the holding of this commemorative activity, made a speech. He said: Comrade Li Bozhao was a student of Xiao Chunu, a youth movement leader during the early period of the CPC. She joined the CYL at the age of 14. After studying in the Soviet Union, she returned home and arrived in the Jiangxi revolutionary base areas in the fall of 1931. In Ruijin, she worked as an editor of HONGSE ZHONGHUA [RED CHINA], organized the general office of the Worker-Peasant Drama Society, initiated the Gorkiy Theatrical School, and later participated in the work of organizing the Lu Xuan Art Institute. She was one of the pioneers of the literary and art work and propaganda movement of our party and army in the revolutionary base areas.

Wang Zhen said "Li Bozhao deserves to be regarded as a bravely struggling Chinese woman and a Long March hero from the literary and art circles." He said: Being one of the dozens of Red Army Women fighters in the Long March, Comrade Li Bozhao wrote a complete "Long March Diary." In the face of hardships and under heavy gunfire, she always worked actively on the battlefront, doing propaganda work to inspire the comrades. She created many battlefront works, including operas, modern plays, and novels, all of which played a vital role in uniting the masses and dealing blows at the enemy. Until today, her indomitable fighting will and artistic talent remain clear in the minds of many of our veteran comrades. This is really a rare accomplishment worthy of esteem!

Wang Zhen continued: Comrade Li Bozhao worked for the revolution for over 60 years. She invariably relied on her own efforts in carrying out her work and doing difficult chores and was an outstanding party member who did not seek personal fame. She took a serious attitude in writing, and showed a high sense of responsibility toward society and history. Her lofty revolutionary and heroic bearing was also manifested in her revolutionary writing style. Even in the adverse circumstances during the 10-year catastrophe, when she was disabled due to prosecution by the two counterrevolutionary cliques of Lin Biao and Jiang Qing, she did not show the slightest sign of wavering and never put down her pen. Her modern drama "Going North" and novel "A Female Communist" have been well received by spectators and readers, Chinese and foreigners alike. To the party, she was, at all times, a eulogizer. Until her heart stopped beating, she always wanted to write memoirs and use party history and communist ideology to educate the coming generation. While holding leading posts in the Beijing People's Art Theater and the Central Academy of Dramatic arts, she worked her heart out to train competent literary and art workers. As a result of her efforts, her "students can be found everywhere." [passage omitted]

The commemorative performance was jointly sponsored by the Chinese Dramatists Association, the Central Acadmey of Dramatic Arts, the Central Opera Theater, and the Beijing People's Art Theater.

HAO JIANXIU WRITES INSCRIPTIONS FOR HENAN JOURNAL

HK030819 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 1 Jul 86

[Text] Today, Hao Jianxiu, secretary of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, made inscriptions for FUNU SHENGHUO ZAZHI of our province. Comrade Hao Jianxiu's inscriptions are: Hoping FUNU SHENGHUO ZAZHI will become a friend of women, an assistant of their work, an adviser of their families, and a staff officer of their livelihood. It will encourage women to open up a road and to advance the four modernizations.

HAO JIANXIU ARRIVES IN LHASA FOR INSPECTION TOUR

HK161604 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Comrade Hao Jianxiu, secretary of the CPC Central Secretariat, and a 10-person delegation arrived in Lhasa on the morning of 15 July to inspect and guide work in the region. Regional party, government, and Army leaders and leading comrades of the regional CPPCC committee, Lhasa City, and the relevant regional departments Wu Jinghua, Pagalbaa Geleg Namgyain, Raidi, Doje Cering, Zhang Fengjiao, Tangmai Gangjue Baimu, Yang Youcai, Yang Houdi, and (Wang Guangpei) greeted Comrade Hao Jianxiu and her party at the airport in the rain.

NPC Vice Chairman Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincai especially sent his representative from Xigaze to meet the comrades from the central authorities at the airport and presented Hada "silk greeting gifts" to them. [passage omitted]

On behalf of the regional party, government, and Army leaders, Comrade Wu Jinghua presented Hada to Hai Jianxiu and other central comrades. Young women of Zang nationality presented Qingke wine to the comrades from the central authorities. Comrade Raidi introduced to Comrade Hao Jianxiu all the leading comrades who had come to greet her. They had a group photograph taken in front of the plane to mark the occasion. Then, comrade Hao Jianxiu and her party drove to Lhasa.

In the lobby of the hotel, Comrade Hai Jianxiu introduced to regional leading comrades all the other comrades from the central authorities. Among them were Zhang Guoying, first secretary of the All-China Women's Federation; Liu Yandong, female, secretary of the Secretariat of the CYL Central Committee; and responsible comrades of the Ministry of the Textile Industry, the Ministry of Light Industry, and the Ministry of Commerce. Then, Comrade Hao Jianxiu delivered a short speech. [passage omitted]

LI TIEYING ON BOOSTING ELECTRONICS INDUSTRY

OW161137 Beijing XINHUA in English 1030 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Shanghai, July 16 (XINHUA) -- Based in Beijing and Shanghai Cities, and Jiangsu and Guangdong Provinces, China will speed up the development of the electronics industry during the current five-year plan, Electronics Industry Minister Li Tieying told XINHUA today.

The minister is here together with more than 60 experts from the electronics industry ministry and the above-mentioned cities and provinces to discuss the development of the industry.

The experts held that more fund and technical force should be given to these cities and provinces to make them bases of the industry. Then they will be able to produce advanced products competitive in both home and foreign markets and help other areas to develop the electronics industry. Priority will be given to the production of integrated circuits, color kinescopes, program-controlled exchanges, and computer software, Minister Li said.

CHEN GUANGYI ON FUJIAN'S PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW200452 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] According to our reporters Huang Zongke and Lin Zaizhang, a provincial work conference on party rectification closed today in Putian City. Chen Guangyi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered an important speech at the conference on how to make party rectification in rural areas a success.

Comrade Chen Guangyi said: In conducting rural party rectification, we must make every effort to ensure the progress of reform and the development of the rural economy. Of key importance is a clear-cut guiding principle; that is, our party rectification work must create the following benefits: It must be conducive to the in-depth and in-breadth development of rural reform; the further promotion of rural production; the further enlivening of the rural economy; the further display of the peasants' production initiative; the solution to the poverty problem and the creation of wealth in poverty-stricken localities, including old revolutionary base areas, minority inhabited regions, remote places, and islands; and the building of the material and spiritual civilizations in rural areas.

Comrade Chen Guangyi pointed out: In view of the actual situation in our province's rural areas, we must resolve the following questions while conducting rural party rectification: First, we must resolve the question of how to have our party members play an exemplary and leading role.

Second, we must resolve the question of the unhealthy party style. In this regard. emphasis must be placed on resolving the problem of a few cadres with party membership abusing their power for selfish ends and violating the law and discipline to a serious extent.

Third, we must resolve the question of weakness and laxity in the party of some grass-roots party organizations.

Fourth, we must resolve any other prominent questions presently existing in the rural areas.

Whether these questions are resolved or not indicates whether we are serious or perfunctory in doing the work of rural party rectification. After the conclusion of rural party rectification, we must examine what we have done, and if it is found that any of the above questions have not been resolved, work must be started again to resolve them.

Comrade Chen Guangyi said: Party rectification at township, town, and village levels must be carried out in such a way as to create the above-mentioned six benefits. Of prime importance is that it should promote the intensive development of rural reform, the growth of the rural economy, the solution to the poverty problem and creation of wealth in poverty-stricken areas, and the building of spiritual civilization in rural areas.

Comrade Chen Guangyi stressed: The more we advance toward opening and reform, the more it is necessary to be strict in administering the party. The work in these two areas complement each other. We must achieve outstanding results in implementing the open and reform policy, and at the same time make concrete achievments in rectifying our party style.

To be strict in adminstering the party, we must overcome the problem of weakness and punish or expel from the party as necessary those cadres with party membership who have really abused their power for selfish ends and violated law and discipline to a serious extent. In no way should we be merciful and soft-hearted in dealing with them. We must choose some typical cases that have serious harmful effects and handle them openly so as to warn others against following such examples.

Concluding his speech, Comrade Chen Guangyi said: We must do well in strengthening grass-roots party organizations; that is, we must successfully improve these basic-level bodies. In addition, we must further strengthen our leadership over the work of party rectification.

He urged the party committees at all levels, especially county and township party committees, to conduct party rectification with the same vigor and awareness as displayed in grasping economic work so as to fulfill the requirements of party rectification in the province.

JIANGSU LEADERS ATTEND LEGAL KNOWLEDGE LECTURE

OW191351 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Lectures on legal knowledge for provincial leaders, sponsored by the Standing Committee of the Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee, began on 17 July. [passage omitted]

Attending the class were leading comrades of the CPC Committee, the Advisory Commission, the Discipline Inspection Commission, the People's Congress Standing Committee, the people's government and CPPCC Committee of Jiangsu Province; and the leading comrades of some provincial departments, committees, offices, and bureaus. They included Han Peixin, Shen Daren, Gu Xiulian, Sun Han, Chen Huanyou, Wu Xiuju, Hu Fuming, Gu Hao, Liu Lin, Chu Jiang, (Tian Zhuohan), and He Binghao.

Sun Jiazheng, deputy secretary of the provincial party committee, delivered a short speech and gave a briefing on the schedule. [passage omitted]

JIANGSU RADIO ON CONSOLIDATION OF PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW180557 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Station Commentary: "Strive To Consolidate and Develop Party Rectification Results"]

[Text] It is important to solve the problem of further carrying out the work of party building after party rectification is accomplished. Experience of many party rectification units has shown that party rectification at a certain time can only solve a few pressing and major problems inside the party, and cannot solve all problems. Due to the rather short period of party rectification, some problems were not thoroughly solved. Problems will reoccur, even after being solved, while others still remain to be solved, because corrective measures are yet to be carried out. Besides, development in various fields will also present new tasks and demands in our party-building efforts. Therefore, units which have completed a stage of party rectification are still faced with the heavy task of building the party. The thought that we can relax for a while after party rectification is over is detrimental. We should, like comrades in Yangzhong County party committee, seriously study and work out practical measures to consolidate and develop party rectification results.

HENAN PREFECTURAL COURT SENTENCES TWO TO DEATH

HK160753 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Text] This morning, the Huaihua Prefectural People's Intermediate Court held a 3,000-people judgment pronouncing rally to sentence to death extremely serious grafters, (Shi Jianan) and (Li Wei) and to deprive them of political rights for life.

At the end of September 1984, (Shi Jianan) was instructed by Huaihua (Taikang) Company to promote the sale of 150 tons of fine Angora rabbit hair from Huaibin County Native Products Company, Henan Province. (Shi Jianan) intentionally increased the purchase and sale links and in collusion with other people, including (Li Wei), committed graft, and acquired 470,000 yuan. He also resorted to unlawful measures to draw an enormous sum of money from a bank to privately share out. (Shi Jianan) received 217,500 yuan and (Li Wei) 170,500 yuan.

After (Li Wei) received this enormous sum of money, (Shi Jianan) helped him bribe a Hong Kong visitor. On the evening of 26 December 1984, he stealthily crossed the border and sneaked into Macao. Later, he was arrested. While (Li Wei) was being returned to Huaihua under escort, he jumped from a car and fled. He was arrested again by public security personnel.

HUBEI IMPLEMENTS MANAGER RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

HK171051 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Excerpts] According to HUBEI RIBAO, by the end of June, 793 enterprises in the province had implemented the manager responsibility system, accounting for 17 percent of the province's total state-owned industrial enterprises and about 54 percent of key enterprises at the provincial, prefectural, city, and autonomous prefectural levels.

Investigations show that most of the enterprises that have implemented the manager responsibility system have achieved good results. Managers, party organizations, and trade union federations and workers' congresses have all benefited from the implementation of the manager responsibility system. Their relationships have become more harmonious than before.

First, as representatives of legal persons of enterprises, managers have exercised unified leadership and assumed overall responsibility in production, business operation, and administration of enterprises, and changd the situation of enterprises being slow in making policy decisions and inefficient in commanding production. Consequently, the leadership structure of enterprises can meet the needs of planned commodity poroduction and modern mass production and help enterprises in making policy decisions and improving economic results. [passage omitted]

Implementation of the manager responsibility system has also made it possible for CPC committees to concentrate their efforts on party building and ideological construction, changed the previous situation of the party failing to administer party organizations, strengthened and improved party work, and promoted the building of spiritual civilization. [passage omitted]

Implementation of the manager responsibility system has also strengthened and developed democratic management of enterprises, promoted coordinated reforms within enterprises and lateral economic ties with other enterprises, and improved economic results of enterprises. [passage omitted]

GUIZHOU RADIO ON MANAGER RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM

HK170505 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Station short commentary: "Actively and Steadily Promote the Manager Responsibility System"]

[Text] Some state-owned industrial enterprises in the province have carried out pilot project work in implementing the manager responsibility system. Most of them have achieved good results. These enterprised have enhanced the system for commanding production, business operation, and management; strengthened the party's work and formed an atmosphere for staff and workers managing enterprised democratically, thus promoting the development of production. However, a number of enterprised still have poor understanding of implementing the manager responsibility system. In these enterprises, managers have not fully exercised their power. As a result, these enterprises often have too many things to take care of at the same time and people in the enterprises often have disputes over trifles and shift responsibility to others, much to the detriment of production.

Implementing the manager responsibility system is an important reform in the leadership structure of enterprises, as well as an important measure for enlivening enterprises. As modern enterprises have an elaborate division of labor, they require a high degree of continuity in production and strict technology. They involve complicated relationships in cooperation. Therefore, it is necessary to establish a unified and highly efficient system for commanding production, business operation and management, and to implement the manager responsibility system in these enterprises. Only thus can they enhance the system for commanding production, business operation, and management, make fast policy decisions, give effective commands, be efficient, and meet the requirements of modern enterprises.

To implement the manager responsibility system, the key is in properly handling the relationship between managers and CPC Committee secretaries and the relationship between party organization and the administration office of an enterprise, so as to ensure that a manager can exercise his power in commanding production and business operation. The manager and the CPC Committee secretary are the principal parties and administration cadres four requirements, those comrades who have good political quality, dedicate themselves to work, have ability, and are skilled in administration to be enterprise managers and CPC Committee secretaries. Managers and CPC Committee secretaries must work together with one heart and form an few kind of leadership group. Those who engage in malpractices and cannot unite with others must be removed from leadership groups. The enterprise party organization must support the manager in exercising his power in commanding production business operation, ensure and supervise the implementation of various policies of the state and party, and properly conduct ideological and political work among staff and workers. The enterprise manager and CPC committee secretary must join hands in fulfilling all enterprise tasks, and must unite, fight, and make joint efforts to enliven the enterprise.

NEI RONGGUI AT SICHUAN MEETING ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK160713 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] Today, the provincial CPC Committee held a meeting at Chengdu City's (Jiliuba) guesthouse on party rectification work. Nei Ronggui, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and deputy leader of the provincial leading group for party rectification work, presided over the meeting and made a speech.

The meeting was attended by leaders of the provincial leading group for party rectification work in Chengdu, including Xu Mengxia, Yang Wanxuan, Zhang Lixing, He Haoju, An Faxiao, Wang Ao and Feng Zhenwu.

At the meeting, Feng Zhenwu, director of the provincial CPC Committee office for party rectification, conveyed the spirit of the party rectification forum held by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification in (Qianzhen) town, Changhai. Then, (Yuan Juxian) deputy director of the provincial CPC Committee office for party rectification, conveyed the spirit of the national conference on the work of investigating the people of three categories.

The 4-day meeting on party rectification work will further discuss the spirit of the above two meetings of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification. Based on this, the meeting will discuss and revise the five documents drafted by the provincial CPC Committee office, as well as the party rectification experience of various localities.

The meeting was attended by over 150 people, including the prefectural and city CPC Committee deputy secretary in charge of party rectification work, directors of offices for party rectification, comrades responsible for the investigation work, and leaders of prefectural and city teams for the work.

YUNNAN STUDIES IDEOLOGICAL POLITICAL WORK

HK171300 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Excerpts] While making a report at the provincial CPC Committee's conference on ideological and political work this afternoon, Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu emphasized: The whole party must do ideological and political work and every party member must act as an outstanding propagandist. Centered on all-round reform, it is necessary to extensively and penetratingly do propaganda work among the masses, to organize them, and to work hard to realize the general task and general aim of the party.

In his report Pu Chaozhu dealt mainly with five issues: 1) the situation and the importance and necessity of strengthening ideological and political work; 2) who ideological and political work should serve; 3) who we rely on to do ideological and political work and how to do it; 4) how propaganda, ideological, and theoretical fronts give play to their functional role; 5) what aspects of education Yunnan must now pay special attention to grasping well.

Pu Chaozhu said: Reform is complicated social system engineering and is socialist self-improvement. Many problems need our practice and exploration. Without the guarantee of the vigorous ideological and political work, reform cannot progress smoothly.

In the new historical period, ideological and political work must be done, centered on reform and on economic development. Ideological and political work must be done in the work of reform and economic work. [passage omitted]

In his report, Pu Chaozhu finally pointed out: At present, the whole province must pay special attention to grasping well education in four aspects:

1. It is necessary to strengthen education in practical and realistic ideological line [words indistinct].

2. It is essential to strengthen publicity of the socialist commodity economy and of the concept of commodities and to apply an effective method to conduct education in the concept of commodities for the masses of minority nationalities.

3. It is imperative to strengthen reeducation in the policies toward nationalities and religious theory.

4. It is necessary to do ideological and political work for rural party rectification this winter and next spring and to help the grass roots teach the party's lessons well.

CHENGDU COMMANDER COMMENDS YUNNAN BORDER UNITS

HK170125 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Manarin 2200 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] On 10 July, Chengdu Military Region Commander Fu Quanyou and Political Commissar Wan Haifeng issued an order to confer honorable titles on Yunnan border defense units and individuals who had rendered meritorious service in the defensive combat against Vietnam.

Commander Fu and Political Commissar Wan read the order, saying: When the Vietnamese Army frequently carried out harassing activities, in spite of poor and hard conditions, the comraders and fighters of the border defense units of our region stationed in Yunnan united as one, closely coordinated with one another, and repulsed on many occasions the enemy who had attacked and harassed us. They successfully completed the defensive and combat tasks entrusted by their upper level. To commend their herioc deeds, the military region has decided to confer: the honorable title of a Heroic Platoon Standing Fast at its post on the 3d Platoon of the 11th Company of a certain border defense PLA unit; the honorable title of a Crack Artillery Squad on the 1st Squad of the 2d Company of the artillery battalion of a certain border defense PLA unit; the honorable title of a Heroic Border Instructor on (Wang Xuemen), an instructor of the 6th Company of a certain border defense PLA unit; and the honorable title of a Combat Hero on (Mao Yuliang), a platoon commander of the 8th company of a certain border defense PLA unit.

The order exhorts: The commanders and fighters of all PLA units of the whole region must learn from them and make new contributions toward supporting and defending the four modernizations.

NORTH REGION

BEIJING OFFICIALS EVALUATED BY SUBORDINATES

OW171627 Beijing XINHUA in English 1211 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Party and government functionaries in Beijing are now evaluating the work and conduct of their leaders, in an effort to get rid of bureaucracy and promote office democracy.

So far 1,000 leading officials have gone through what is called "evaluation sessions", at which their subordinates are free to criticize.

The drive, initiated by the municipal party committee and government, will eventually involve all bureau, urban district and county leaders, as well as higher officials.

Yan Changyuan, chief of the Water Conservancy Bureau, was among the first to be evaluated. While describing him as a hard working person, his subordinates criticized him for seldom going to the grassroots unit to gain a first-hand knowledge of the conditions there. Shortly after the session, Yang respond to the criticism by going down to two factories operating under his bureau.

Some other officials had received even sharper criticisms. One was a deputy chief of the municipal Administration Bureau, who was criticized for using his power to occupy four government-owned apartments for his family of 10. But the deputy chief rejected the criticism, saying that his family lived in a four-room apartment, not in four apartments. The municipal government investigated the case and confirmed the criticism. The deputy chief was dismissed from his post and made to give up the apartments he was not entitled to.

Jin Jian, deputy secretary of the municipal Communist Party Committee said that evaluation sessions were a good form to exercise supervision of senior officials by their subordinates. Officials should not only be checked on by their superior organizations but also evaluated by their subordinates who know them well, he said. From now on, such activities will be held once every year, Jin said.

NEI MONGGOL MEETING CALLS FOR PLANTING TREES, GRASS

SK180235 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Excerpts] From 10 to 12 July, the regional CPC Committee and the government held an on-the-spot office meeting in Horinger County to study and discuss the issues of how to further implement the economic construction policy of taking forestry and animal husbandry as the major undertakings while diversifying the economy and how to speed up the planting of grass and trees in order to develop animal husbandry and the commodity economy in the loess hills and gullies.

This on-the-spot office meeting was held according to the suggestions of Comrade Zhang Shuguang, secretary of the regional CPC Committeee given to this county while making an investigation tour there. Prior to the meeting, leaders of the region and the relevant departments, and of the relevant leagues, banners, counties and cities conducted intensive investigations and study. The meeting was jointly presided over by Tian Congming, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, and Bai Jungqing, vice chairman of the regional government.

Attending the on-the-spot office meeting were the principal responsible leaders of two leagues and eight banners, counties, and cities, including In Ju League and Ulanqab League; Dalad, Ejin Horo, and Jungar Banners; Dongsheng City; and Qingshuihe, Horinger, Liangcheng, and Wuchuan Counties, as well as the responsible persons of the relevant regional departments. [passage omitted]

The meeting discussed in particular the policies and measures for rapidly making the loess hilly areas and gullies prosperous. The meeting stressed that leaders at all levels in these areas should exert the same efforts to plant grass and trees and to develop animal husbandry as they did in grain production. In terms of policies and measures, they should encourage the people to plant grass and trees and to develop animal husbandry while encouraging them to cultivate grain. To this end, the industrial, commercial, communications, scientific, technological, and the agricultural production departments at all levels, should serve this work in a systematic and coordinated manner, display their own functional role, and implement the policies and measures at each level. While attending to planting grass and trees and developing animal husbandry, these areas should also vigorously develop township enterprises and diversify their economy in line with their own situation. Areas that are suitable for grain cultivation should strive to carry out intensive and meticulous farming, raise the per-unit area yield, and do a good job in grain processing and conversion, in order to make full use of grain and to promote the development of animal husbandry. All banners, counties and cities as well as all townships and villages should proceed with their work from their own reality, make overall plans, implement different plans in different areas, carry out the work according to their own capability, be firm in their work, and pay attention to actual results. [passage omitted]

SHANXI SECRETARY DISCUSSES PROBLEMS CONCERNING AGED

HK170711 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jul 86 p 1

["Li Ligong Speech at the Founding Ceremony of the Shanxi Provincial Committee for Aged People and the First Provincial Work Conference on Arrangements for Aged People (27 June 1986)"]

[Text] Comrades:

The Shanxi Provincial Committee for the Aged has been established today and has held its first work conference. This is a happy event for the aged of the whole province. On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, I would like to extend my warmest congratulations and to take the opportunity to wish the aged of the whole province good health and a happy life!

In recent years, our work for the aged has developed rapidly, achieved remarkable successes, and exerted a far-reaching influence. All localities and departments have made great efforts and done a great deal of work for the aged. Under the guidance of the National Committee on Aging, I believe that the provincial Committee for the Aged, after its founding, will conduct investigations and studies, make overall plans, exercise supervision, and do a good job and create a new situation in our work for the aged.

Now I would like to present some of my views on how to make proper arrangements for the aged.

First, party and government leaders at all levels should support and be concerned with the matter. Millions upon millions of the aged, including workers, peasants, cadres, intellectuals, writers, and artists, are all the wealth of our party. [paragraph continues]

They have accumulated rich experience and made outstanding contributions to China's revolution and construction. Without the efforts of the aged, it would be impossible to carry out the four modernizations and to train a new generation of people for communism. Now, they ought to be respected by the party and people and be cared for by society. The work for the aged covers much ground. It is an important topic to be probed in social and natural sciences. In order to do the work well, we should rely on the efforts of: The leaders at all levels; various localities, departments, and units; neighborhood committees in cities; and leading cadres of townships and towns, rather than just on the committee for the aged, a few people, or certain units. With the profound concern of the whole party and society, the work for the aged will develop vigorously, thus enabling millions upon millions of the aged to spend their remaining years in happiness.

Second, proceed from the actual conditions and help the aged solve their welfare problems. Respecting, cherishing, and providing for the aged are traditional virtues of the Chinese nation, which should be further developed under the socialist system. A man cannot live without the concern and support of others. When a man is advanced in age, he may experience inconveniences and need special care. For this reason, we must understand and sympathize with the aged, satisfy their reasonable material and spiritual needs, and where financial and material conditions permit, offer them as much convenience as possible. If their problems cannot be solved immediately, the reasons should be explained. In a word, we should do our best to let the aged spend their remaining years in happiness. Ill-treatment of the aged, mainly by a handful of degenerate people, is an ugly phenomenon in society today. We must ensure the legitimate rights of the aged, vigorously conduct education in the legal system, and condemn immoral conduct toward the aged so as to thoroughly eliminate the practice of ill-treating the aged.

Third, create conditions for the aged to exert their remaining energies. Although our veteran comrades who have withdrawn from the first line are old, they still have vigor and are willing to contribute continuously to the four modernizations. They stay at home, but their hearts are turned toward the four modernizations, which shows that old people still cherish high aspirations. There are also some veteran comrades who are old but vigorous and who can still make valuable contributions. In accordance with the instructions of Deng Xiaoping and other central leading comrades, we should organize the veteran comrades, provide them with convenience, and create conditions so that they can engage in interesting work within their capabilities and continue to exert their role. Our leading comrades at all levels, and the comrades engaged in the work for the aged, should cherish the veteran comrades' fine qualities. Besides providing for the aged, we should also use their remaining energies and make arrangements for their funerals.

Fourth, do practical work in a down-to-earth manner and avoid formalism.

As the committee for the aged has been founded, it should be worthy of the name. The committee should earnestly study the problems concerning the aged and do good things for the old people. We must satisfy the organizations at all levels as well as the veteran comrades and the younger generation. We must avoid paying lip service and doing work perfunctorily. Experts and qualified personnel in various fields can be organized to make a survey of the problems concerning the aged. They should write articles with original ideas and offer solutions so as to develop the work for the aged throughout the province in a deepgoing manner. That is all I want to say. I have come here today to see you and extend my congratulations to the conference.

TIANJIN'S NI ZHIFU ATTENDS RALLY OF ADVANCED

SK160541 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpts] On the morning of 30 June, the municipal CPC Committee held a ceremonious rally to celebrate the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC, and to commend advanced party organizations and fine party members. [passage omitted]

Leading comrades of the municipal party, government and Army organs, including Ni Zhifu, Li Ruihuan, Wu Zhen, Nie Bichu, Zhang Zaiwang, Zhang Huaisan, Chen Bing, Wang Xudong, Ji Zenghui, He Guomo, Chen Yiyi, Zheng Guozhong, Bai Hualing, Lan Baojing, Wang Peiren, Bai Hua, Zhao Jun, Xu Ming, Shi Jian, Xiao Yuan, Yu Songting, Kang Tiejun, Liao Canhui, and Zheng Wantong, and veteran comrades, including Liu Gang, Wang Enhui, Lu Da and Li Shusen, attended the rally. Representatives of the party members from all fronts of the municipality, totaling 2,200 were present.

The rally was presided over by Wang Xudong, Standing Committee member of the municipal CPC Committe.

At 0900 the rally opened amid the magnificent rendering of the "Internationale." Wu Zhen, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, read the municipal CPC Committee's decision on commending advanced party organizations and fine party members. Municipal leading comrades presented silk banners, medals, and certificates of honor to the advanced party organizations and fine party members who were conferred honorary titles. [passage omitted]

Before the rally, the municipal leading comrades met with the representatives of the 11 advanced party organizations and 22 fine party members, and held cordial talks with them. The municipal leading comrades encouraged them to make still further progress, and give more play to the role of party organizations as fighting bastions, and to the role of party members as vanguards and exemplars in carrying out reform and the four modernizations. Representatives of the advanced party organizations and fine party members pledged that they will live up to the ardent expectations of the party and the people, and make still greater contributions to party building and the two civilizations.

NORTHEAST REGION

JILIN SECRETARY AT MEETING ON SPIRITUAL CIVILIZATION

SK200313 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Today the provincial research center on the building of the socialist spiritual civilization held a meeting for experts and scholars to discuss the strategies for our province's building a spiritual civilization. More than 20 experts and scholars on the background and prerequisites for our province to formulate a strategic plan for the development of the spiritual civilization, and the connotation, levels, systems and specific content of the strategic plan, and put forward many valuable opinions and suggestions.

They held: In the new situation of opening to the outside world and reform, it is of great significance to study and formulate a strategic plan for the development of spiritual civilization. The provincial CPC Committee and other relevant departments should pay attention to giving overall guidance to the building of spiritual civilization.

The participating experts and scholars also held that studying and formulating a strategic plan for the development of spiritual civilization is an arduous and complicated task, which requires many departments to coordinate and exert efforts to create favorable conditions, and organize discussions and studies on the issues in many fields.

Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and responsible comrades of other relevant departments attended the meeting.

LIAONING SECRETARY, ACTING GOVERNOR APPOINTED

OW181232 Beijing XINHUA in English 1212 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Shenyang, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Li Changchun, an expert of industrial automation, has been appointed acting governor of Liaoning Province, according to a decision of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee.

A 1967 graduate of Harbin Industrial Engineering University, 41-year-old Li had been secretary of the Shenyang City Committee of the Chinese Communist Party.

His predecessor, Quan Shuren, has resigned and is now secretary of the provincial party committee.

Attend Defense Report Meeting

SK200323 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] On the morning of 19 July, the Liaoning Provincial Military District sponsored a report meeting on dedication to national defense and the four modernizations at Shenyang's (Beiling) armymen club. (Zhang Quilan), representative of the ten-sister mutual aid association composed of armymen's wives and a nurse of the Jinzhou City No 2 Hospital, (Mou Yanjiang), special-grade disabled armyman, and four other comrades gave vivid reports on their deeds of being brave to sacrifice and being dedicated to national defense, and making contributions to the country. Their deeds were highly praised by the participants.

Quan Shuren, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, Li Changchun, acting provincial governor, and (Huang Youtai), commander of the Liaoning Provincial Military District, attended the report meeting.

GANSU COMMENTARY ON MEETING ANNUAL REVENUE PLAN

HK151336 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 14 Jul 86

[Station commentary: "Firmly Grasp Financial Revenue, Fulfill the Annual Plan"]

[Text] The current economic situation in the province is good. Despite shortages of raw materials and power supply, the province's industrial production has maintained continuous and steady growth. A bumper harvest is expected in summer grain. Both urban and rural markets are brisk. Commodity circulation is expanding. All this has laid a good material foundation for us to fulfill the annual financial revenue plan. However, some problems still merit our attention. The main problems are: The comparable costs of enterprises have increased; some products are overstocked, resulting in shortage of circulating funds; and tax evasion and delay of tax payments are very serious in some enterprises. If we fail to properly solve these problems, it will be difficult to fulfill the province's annual financial revenue plan. We must realize that the shortage of raw materials, power supply, and funds will continue in the second half of this year. In particular, the accumulated water in the Nongyangxia reservoir in the upper reaches of the Huanghe may seriously affect the province's industrial and agricultural production. Therefore, we must seize the current favorable opportunity to try every means to increase production and income. Economic management departments at all levels must change their style, go deep into the grass roots, help enterprises resolve practical problems, and try every means to enliven enterprises, circulation, and funds, so as to create good external conditions for normal production and business operations of enterprises. By starting from reform of business operations,enterprises must also upgrade the quality of their.products, cut consumption, expand sales, and conteract the effect of increases in the prices of raw materials within enterprise.

Financial and tax departments at all levels must take effective measures to strengthen management of tax collection, plug all loopholes, check tax evasion, and collect all monies that should be collected. While properly collecting revenues, they must pay serious attention to expenditures. They must properly control and use the funds for special items and must strictly control nonproduction expenses.

This is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Fulfilling this year's financial revenue plan will be of great importance to a balance of the province's revenue and expenditure; to continuous, steady, and coordinated economic development in the province; and to smooth progress of the reform of the economic structure in the province. We must proceed from the overall situation, properly carry out our own work, and fulfill and overfulfill this year's financial revenue plan.

YIN KESHENG ATTENDS QINGHAI ECONOMICS MEETING

HK160855 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 15 Jul 86

[Text] On 15 July, the provincial CPC Committee and government convened a meeting on work in Pingan County, Haidong Prefecture.

The major issues discussed by the meeting were to study and determine the guiding ideology for Haidong Prefecture's economic development, its major goals in the Seventh 5-Year Plan and its major policies and measures, as well as some economic problems yet to be solved so as to promote a smooth progress in economic construction and structural reform.

Before the convening of the meeting, the provincial CPC Committee organized investigation teams to carry out investigation work in Haidong Prefecture.

Leaders of the provincial CPC Committee and government, including Yin Kesheng, Liu Feng, Gabulong, and Bainma Dandzin; principal leaders of Haidong Prefectural CPC Committee and government; as well as responsible comrades of departments concerned directly under the prefectural authorities attended the meeting.

QINGHAI MEETING ON GUIDELINES FOR HAIDONG PREFECTURE

HK180137 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Excerpts] A conference on work in Haidong Prefecture, convened by the provincial CPC Committee and government, concluded on 17 July after 3 days in session. [passage omitted]

Haidong is Qinghai's main agricultural area, and its population and farmland respectively account for 44 percent and 63 percent of the province's totals. Speeding up economic development in Haidong is of great significance for attaining the province's strategic goals in economic development and the Seventh 5-Year Plan. [passage omitted]

The meeting decided that the guideline for Haidong's economic construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan is to strengthen the agricultural foundation, develop township enterprises, invigorate county-level economy, and strive to eliminate poverty and make the people rich. In order to accomplish this guideline, the meeting put forward the following principles for future work in the prefecture:

1. Take advantage of strong points and avoid weak ones. We should take full advantage of Haidong's ample resources in land, building materials, and manpower.

2. Persevere in reform and opening up, and develop lateral economic ties.

3. Firmly embrace the concept of commodity economy, and correctly handle the relationship between developing grain production and promoting diversification.

4. Work hard and self-reliantly to change the prefecture's poverty and backwardness.

The meeting pointed out that agriculture is the foundation undertaking in Haidong. The development of agricultural production must be assigned a conspicuous position during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. [passage omitted] It is necessary to carry out reforms in depth, further readjust the rural production structure, get a good grasp of popularizing and applying science and technology, gradually increase agricultural input, strive to improve the production conditions, vigorously develop forestry, grass cultivation, and animal husbandry, build ecological agriculture, and strive to do a good job in building commodity production bases and concentrated production areas.

The meeting formulated a number of policy measures in view of certain practical difficulties and problems facing Haidong Prefecture in developing township enterprises. The meeting demanded that the counties actively develop country-run industries based on local conditions. [passage omitted]

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yin Kesheng and Deputy Secretary Liu Feng attended the meeting throughout and made speeches. Comrade Yin Kesheng demanded that the cadres at all levels in the prefecture unify their ideas regarding the goals of endeavor proposed by this meeting, step up their efforts, and work hard. [passage omitted]

QINGHAI STATISTICS BUREAU REVEALS SUCCESSES, PROBLEMS

HK180139 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2230 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The provincial statistics bureau held a press briefing on 17 July to announce the province's performance in fulfilling the state plans in the first half of the year.

The province's economy developed steadily during this period. The readjustment of the agricultural structure continued. The sown area of agricultural crops reached 7,562,500 mu, an increase of 55,600 mu over last year. In animal husbandry, the province has victoriously overcome the difficulty caused by particularly severe snowstorms, and the situation is better than last year except in certain places that were particularly hard hit.

Under the impetus of lateral economic ties, industrial production has risen steadily. Output value in the first half of the year was 958.9 million yuan, representing 45.8 percent of the year's plan and showing a rise of 5.5 percent over the same period last year. The scale of capital construction has been controlled. The scale of renovation and technical transformation has been expanded. [passage omitted]

Total value of exports in the first 6 months of the year was $10.77 million, an increase of 25 percent over the same period last year, and representing more than half of the year's plan.

The development of production and the prosperity of the markets have created conditions for increasing revenue. Local revenue during the first half of the year rose by 15.3 percent over the same period last year, while expenditures rose by 11.8 percent. Currency in circulation declined.

Generally speaking, the province's economic performance was good during the first half of the year, but there are also some problems. The outstauding ones are: Agricultural input dropped; economic results in industrial and communications enterprises are not good; and average cash income of the peasants and herdsmen has dropped compared with the same period last year.

In view of these problems, a responsible comrade of the provincial statistics bureau said that in the second half of the year the industry and communications front must concentrate forces on improving economic results. While promoting the work of assisting poor areas, the agricultural and pastoral regions must do a good job in organizing summer and autumn production and the procurement of agricultural and sideline products, and strive to increase output and income.

XIAN PAPER ON PROBLEMS IN LATERAL ECONOMIC TIES

HK160743 Xian XIBEI XINXI BAO in Chinese 23 Jun 86 p 3

[Article by Wang Quangen: "Problems Urgently Awaiting Solution in Lateral Economic Ties"]

[Text] There are some problems urgently awaiting solution that have affected the normal development of lateral economic ties. They are mainly the following:

First, outdated ideas and narrow utilitarian thinking.

Outdated ideas and narrow utilitarian thinking have seriously hindered and affected the further development of lateral economic ties. 1) The sense of departmental or regional ownership. Some departments and regions have vied with each other for power in lateral economic ties. Instead of delegating power and extending the decision-making power of enterprises, they have tried by every means to place restrictions, exercise "management" over enterprises, create obstructions of every description, and even make trouble out of nothing for fear that they would lose their power and "manor." With narrow regionalism and exclusive mentality, some regarded the enterprises and institutions not under their jursidiction as dissidents. Instead of supporting the economic ties between enterprises of other regions and local units, they regarded such cooperation as undermining their foundation and "benefiting at their expense." Consequently, they took measures to control, check, and suppress cooperation. 2) The practices of following the fashion, seeking undeserved reputation, and making things difficult for each other. Some departments and units regarded lateral economic ties as a fashion and vied with one another to show off. They did things in their own way, without giving support to or coordinating with the economic association, just like two or more persons indiscriminately pulling the strings of a puppet. 3) A lack of sense of economic efficiency. In developing lateral economic ties, some regions and departments failed to follow the economic laws and the principle of "equality, mutual benefit, and common progress." They adopted administrative means, knocked together a number of associations, and submitted the results to the higher authorities seeking glory. However, the results, which caused economic losses and damaged the reputation of reform and lateral economic ties, went counter to their wishes. 4) The narrow-minded view of small production. In the face of the current situation of competition and extensive commodity market, some large enterprises remained indifferent and stuck to their old ways of doing things. Some attempted to live in peace and tranquility by neither making contributions nor mistakes in reform. Some waited passively for association requested by others. Some small enterprises adopted guerrilla tactics in order to survive. 5) Narrow utilitarian thinking. In the lateral economic ties, the large, medium, and small enterprises are more eager for quick and instant benefit. Despite the long-term interests, overall situation, and benefits of others, some merely took immediate, partial, and their own interests into account. In the lateral economic ties, they vied with one another to play the leading role and no one wanted to play the minor role. With such a lack of sincerity, the association could not last long. Some cooperated well for one day, but disbanded on the following day.

Second, the slow access to information, inaccurate sources of information, lack of market feedback, imperfect information network, and lack of scientific macrocontrol and planned guidance over cooperative projects. The practice of "rushing headlong into mass action" was stirred up in the lateral economic ties. [paragraph continues]

Owing to a lack of unified planning, many of the guesthouses, catering services, garment shops, and small cement plants run by the associations were duplicate projects, which was something like the "Brownian movement." As a result, the sudden waxing and waning of enthusiasm had a great impact on the economy and market and brought about poor economic and social results.

Third, simplifying administrative procedures and delegating power are the key to the deepgoing development of reform and lateral economic ties. The key link of invigorating large and medium enterprises should be firmly grasped and the policy of delegating power to enterprises and institutions should be implemented in earnest. Under the influence of the party's policy on reform and opening up to the outside world, all localities and departments have enacted relevant policies on delegating power so as to invigorate enterprises and promote lateral economic ties. However, the policies are not being implemented in all enterprises. Some departments have even refused to implement the policies stipulated by the higher authorities in explicit terms for fear that the enterprises will no longer obey their orders when they are transferred to the lower levels. Some even tried to reverse the trend and regain the power already delegated to enterprises. Although enterprises were transferred to the lower levels, the administrative organs there exercised stricter management and bound the enterprises much tighter.

Fourth, the frequent exchange visits between officials wasted public funds and brought about poor results. In order to strengthen lateral economic ties and to know and supplement each other, the necessary investigation tours are beyond reproach. The point is that the frequent exchange visits are made by the officials of the provincial, city, and prefectural organs who are not in charge of making policy decisions. Consequently, the visits are usually concluded with the signing of memoranda or letters of intent. Besides wasting public funds and valuable time and aggravating traffic problems, some comrades are completely exhausted by greeting and seeing off guests, which is disadvantageous to the improvement of our work style.

Fifth, the distribution of benefits of each side of the association must be clearly defined and the relevant economic laws, policies, and stipulations must be established and perfected. After the stipulations are made, there is still a lot of work to do to put them into effect. So long as they are reasonable and useful, the associations established in lateral economic ties by making use of the relations between township party organizations, between teachers and students, and between higher and lower levels should not be blamed. Actually, these associations are also unavoidable. The problem is when the responsible person leaves, the agreement is no longer effective. This gives rise to personnel problems and disputes in the cooperation, which merits attention. The disputes and problems arising from lateral economic ties are more or less related to distribution of benefits. It is a pressing matter of the moment to appropriately deal with the problems and disputes, correctly handle the relations of benefits between the state and relevant parties of the association, and ensure the lateral eocnomic ties in rules and regulations, protect them in law, and support them in policies.

SHAANXI'S ECONOMY CONSTRUCTION MAINTAINS MOMENTUM

HK120514 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 10 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Our province's economic construction maintained relatively good momentum in the first half of this year.

The output of summer grain crops is estimated to top 4.75 billion kilograms, an increase of over 150 kilograms over last year; the output of rape is expected to reach 185 million kilograms, increasing by 20 million kilograms or 12.4 percent over last year. [passage omitted]

The province's total industrial output value in the first half of this year amounted to 8.75 billion yuan, fulfilling 48 percent of the annual plan and showing an increase of 3.3 percent over the corresponding period of last year. The main features of the province's industrial production are as follows: the output value rose month after month, in June it topped 1.7 billion yuan, recording an all-time high of the month. Industrial production of local enterprises developed with great momentum and its output value reached 6.37 billion yuan, an increase of 5.8 percent over the corresponding period of last year; the growth rate was higher than the national average growth rate between January and May. Supply of readily marketable commodities, energy and raw materials increased by a big margin. Compared with the corresponding period of last year, the output of television sets, recorders, wrist watches and washing machines all increased substantially. The growth rate of electricity and crude oil was 9 percent and 8 percent respectively; both cement and [word indistinct], by over 8 percent. Town industries developed rapidly and their output value amounted to 16.5 billion yuan, representing a rise of 30 percent over the corresponding period of last year.

The province's revenue and expenditure in the first half of the year balanced the budget in main. By the end of June, the province fulfilled 47.1 percent of the annual revenue budget and quarterly expenditure constituted 46.07 percent of the annual expenditure budget. The scale of investment in fixed assets in state enterprises was under control and the investment focused on energy, transport and the projects of exploiting natural resources south and north of Shaanxi Province.

There was an ample supply of commodities in urban and rural areas and the market was also lively. Total volume of retail sales reached 4.9 billion yuan, up by 13 percent over the corresponding period of last year. [passage omitted]

Foreign trade for exports developed considerably. By the end of June, total export volume exceeded 80 million yuan, fulfilling 64 percent of the annual plan, and registering more than 100 percent over the corresponding period of last year. [passage omitted]

The projects invested by foreign capital in our province develop smoothly and construction of some large-scale projects will start soon. At a symposium on economic and technological cooperation held recently by our province in Australia, 28 agreements were reached with a total sum of over U.S.$190 million.

In the first half of this year, lateral economic cooperation advanced quickly in our province. More than 1,400 contracts on economic and technological cooperation were concluded, absorbing a total of 140 million yuan investment funds.

SHAANXI RADIO COMMENTS ON AGRICULTURAL PROBLEMS

HK170359 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Station commentary: "Get a Good Grasp on Building Grain Base Counties and Ensure Sustained and Steady Increase in Grain Output"]

[Excerpts] Shaanxi scored notable success in grain production during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Since 1983, we have discarded our label as an eater of grain shipped in from elsewhere. Balanced purchase and sales have been achieved in the province for 3 successive years.

However, there are still great discrepancies between the province's grain output and commodity rate and the figures for the whole country. Grain yield is 73 kilograms per mu below the national average, while the amount of grain available per person is 55 kilograms below the natonal average. [passage omitted]

At present there are many problems in agricultural production. For instance, the area of farmland is declining every year, water conservancy installations are in disrepair, agricultural input has fallen, soil fertility has deteriorated, fine-strain seed has degenerated, and there are serious plant diseases and insect pests. There is insufficient reserve strength for agricultural development.

To promote sustained and steady development of the province's grain production, the provincial CPC Committee and government have taken the strategic decision to step up the building of grain base counties. The leaders at all levels must fully understand the farreaching significance of this decision. [passage omitted]

XINJIANG LEADERS MEET MINORITY REPRESENTATIVES

HK160908 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Yesterday afternoon, regional party and government leaders Wang Enmao, Song Hanliang, Tomur Dawamat, Janabil, Li Shoushan, Amudun Niyaz, and Zhagn Xixue met at the (Kunlun) Guesthouse with Xinjiang representatives of the national minority-nationality study and visit group who have just returned to Urumqi from the interior.

In June, 32 representatives from 12 nationalities in the region joined the national minority-nationality study and visit group organized by the State Nationalities Affairs Commission. Most of them were responsible comrades in charge of economic work in various areas. [passage omitted]

The representatives reported to Wang Enmao, Song Hanliang, Tomur Dawamat, and other leading comrades what they studied and visited while in the national minority-nationality study and visit group. Wang Enmao, Song Hanliang, and Tomur Dawamat delivered speeches, expressing the hope that after returning to their own units, the representatives would properly relay and propagate the excellent situation throughout the country, convey the concern of central leading comrades for people of various nationalities in Xinjiang, strengthen nationality unity in all localities and units in connection with local conditions, uphold the principle of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, and speed up the region's economic construction and economic reform.

TAIWAN-U.S. TRADE NEGOTIATIONS CONCLUDE

Taiwan Should Lower Tariffs, Diversify

OW192054 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Station commentary: "The Sino-American Textile Agreement and Future Prospects of International Trade"]

[Excerpts] The ROC [Republic of China]-U.S. textile talks have ended. Contrary to people's expectations that the ROC would follow the lines of the U.S.-Hong Kong accord with regard to growth rates for textile exports to the United States, the outcome of the talks shows that we are being treated differently. [passage omitted] The textile sector at home is highly critical of this outcome. Nevertheless, negotiator Hasao Wan-chang, director general of the Board of Foreign Trade, should not be blamed but should be credited for his tenacity and flexibility in negotiations. We must not nitpick the ROC negotiator in view of the nagging obstacles hindering textile exports to the United States. [passage omitted]

During the trade talks, the U.S. side roundly criticized the ROC's unfair trade practices. The Americans accused the ROC of imposing high tariffs, currently running at 67.5 percent, on U.S. textile imports to this country. We are accused of lacking good faith in opening our markets on account of the high tariffs. Our position is untenable, because our tariffs are undeniably high. What perplexed us is that the domestic textile sector has not demanded high tariff protection. Rather, they have lodged complaints with the government for tarnishing the ROC's trading image with high tariffs that have added difficulties to exports. The ROC representative to the United States, Chien Fu, commented after the textile talks: Should we fail to liberalize and internationalize our economy and trade, problems similar to our textile exports to the United States will continue to arise. The departments concerned should take heed of his poignant remarks.

The United States has a huge market not only for textile products, but also for shoes, hats, steel, machinery, furniture, and handicrafts produced in the Republic of China. ROC exports will be greatly curbed should the United States take similar measures on imports of various other commodities. Hence, ROC exporters must be encouraged, guided and prodded to actively develop new trading partners and diversify their exports markets rather than putting all eggs in one basket in the United States. The domestic manufacturers must further improve product quality and raise the value of products in order to better adapt to changes in international trade. They must take more initiative to score still greater achievements.

Tariffs on 32 U.S. Products to Decrease

OW190529 Taipei CNA in English 0240 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 18 (CNA) -- The Republic of China [ROC] has agreed in principle to accept the U.S. Government's request to reduce import tariffs on 32 categories of American products, such as medical and examination equipment.

. . .

U.S. Trade representatives, after ending their talks with this nation on the ROC's importing of American cigarettes and alcoholic beverages, found that the nation's tariffs on some 30 categories of American products are still too high, and therefore, they have recently suggested that the ROC Government reduce its tariffs on these products.

Hsu Kuo-an, director of the Industrial Development Bureau [IDB], convened a meeting Friday to discuss the U.S. proposal item by item. After fervent discussions, participants in the meeting agreed to suggest the Finance Ministry reduce tariffs on these products.

IDB Deputy Director Wu Hui-jan said after the meeting that the 32 products include medical and examination equipment, paper, and electric radiators. Wu said he believes that the tariff cuts on these products will not harm domestic industries.

Wu noted that the government did not accept all U.S. requests for tariff cuts. The 32 categories do not include textile products, apparel, farm produce, video tape recorders, cigarettes or alcoholic beverages, he said.

TAIWAN TO BUY MORE GRAINS FROM SOUTH AFRICA

OW181451 Taipei CNA in English 1430 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 18 (CNA) -- Minister of Economic Affairs Lee Tahai said Friday that to boost economic and trade cooperation, the Republic of China [ROC] will buy grains in quantity from the Republic of South Africa [RSA] over the next three years.

Lee made the remarks while addressing the first joint meeting of the ROC-RSA economic relations council and the RSA-ROC economic relations council, which opened Friday in Taipei.

He said the two governments have strived to expand economic and trade cooperation, adding however, progress has slowed down over the past years.

To accelerate economic and trade relations, he said, the ROC will sign a three-year agreement with South Africa for the purchase of 200,000 metric tons of grains during the period. Moreover, the Taiwan Power Company will continue to import coals from that country, he said.

As private ROC companies have high interest in South African jewels, Lee said the government will help them to enter joint ventures with the South African jewel mining industry.

KMT THREATENS TO OUTLAW OPPOSITION PARTY

HK190609 Hong Kong AFP in English 0531 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 19 (AFP) -- The ruling Kuomintang (KMT) has warned a major opposition group that it would soon be outlawed if it failed to abide by rules governing the opening of branch offices, a newspaper said Saturday.

The mass-circulation UNITED DAILY NEWS said top KMT officials decided in a meeting Friday that the ruling party would soon declare the Tangwai Research Association for Public Policies (TRAPP) an illegal organization and authorize government agencies to crack down on its activities.

However, the report said, KMT leaders had agreed that to maintain social harmony the crackdown would not be launched immediately, but would go ahead pending "a change in the situation and the right timing."

The KMT has accused TRAPP of breaking an agreement it says was reached in May by refusing both to register the group with the interior ministry and to drop the word "tangwai" -- meaning "outside of the (KMT) party" -- from its name.

TRAPP members argued they had never agreed to the two points since being granted permission to open branch offices in the first formal meeting between the two sides May 10.

Since then TRAPP has opened 10 branch offices. The group was organized two years ago by 53 opposition members in the National Assembly, the legislative Yuan (parliament) and the control Yuan, Taiwan's highest watchdog body.

The KMT's decision to allow the opposition group to open offices was described at the time as a milestone in Taiwan's political development and a major breakthough in the face of a 40-year ban on the formation of new political parties.

The newspaper report said the KMT was always ready to continue a sincere exchange of views with TRAPP leaders and had urged the Tangwai members to resume a third meeting with the ruling party they postponed indefinitely last month.

A high-ranking KMT official had warned earlier this week that the lack of sincerity shown by some TRAPP leaders might lead to confrontation.

The official was quoted by the INDEPENDENCE EVENING POST as saying that the KMT had "made enough concessions" in allowing TRAPP to open branch offices.

But instead of offering to compromise, TRAPP had come up with the so-called "democracy timetable" which proposed that the KMT meet for talks with the Chinese Communists in 1991, he said.

"This is absolutely not acceptable to the KMT," the official added.

TRAPP members have called on the KMT to follow a timetable which would involve the abolition of martial law, in force since 1949, the creation of new political parties, elections to rejuvenate the congress , a presidential election and peace talks with Beijing in 1991.

TAIWANESE FIGHTER PLAN DISSIMILAR TO F-16

OW191643 Taipei CNA in English 1448 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 19 (CNA) -- The new fighter plane being developed in the Republic of China is designed to meet the country's defense needs and is incomparable with the U.S. - made multifunctional F-16 jet fighter, Gen. Chang Hui-Yuan, spokesman for the Ministry of National Defense, said Saturday.

Chang made the remarks while commenting on reports that the ROC [Republic of China] developed fighter will be comparable in performance to the U.S.-made F-16.

The spokesman said that the two jet fighters differ in many aspects and can not be compared with one another.

DISCORD CAUSES JOURNAL TO INTERRUPT PUBLICATION

HK141544 Hong Kong CHING PAO in Chinese No 103, 10 Jul 86 pp 32-34

[Article by Yen Che: "The Contention for ELDERLY CHINESE -- A Piece of Odd News Under the 'Relaxed Atmosphere'"]

[Excerpts] On the inner spine of the 14 March issue of the Beijing-based CANKAO XIAOXI, circulating nationwide with an amazing volume, is a notice to the readers of ELDERLY CHINESE which reads: "The journal ELDERLY CHINESE must regretfully delay its publication because of grave intervention. Ji Xichen, its chief editor, and Zheng Xinyong, deputy chief director, are trying to change the situation, working hard to realize the normal publication of the journal; here we express our apology to the readers."

This notice is really shocking to the public in that it appears at a time when Mainland China has brought order out of chaos and swept clean the noxious atmosphere of the "Cultural Revolution" and a "relaxed and harmonious" environment is to be created in a big way; how could ELDERLY CHINESE, a monthly first initiated in October 1983, with a circulation of 400,000, "delay its publication because of grave intervention"? And what kind of a situation are the two chief editors of the journal "trying to change"? These questions have roused the curiosity of the author, who started making inquiries about it, and found that this journal, quite popular among Mainland China's elderly readers (mostly old intellectuals and retired cadres) has gone through a "farce" quite similar to the atmosphere of the "Cultural Revolution." It can be summed up briefly: Some bureaucrats have joined forces with the onetime rebels and "forced the editorial department to relinquish its functions," which has caused unrest in the editorial department headed by Ji and Zheng, and the struggle is still going on.

The author believes that the contention over ELDERLY CHINESE has its typical social significance, and would like to brief the readers on the origin and development of the incident.

A Long and Tortuous Road; Great Trouble Ahead

New magazines and newspapers have mushroomed in great variety in the mainland in recent years. However, there was no journal suitable for elderly readers before the year 1983. Zheng Xinyong, a veteran Shanghai journalist and founder of the journal MINGZHU YU FAZHI [DEMOCRACY AND THE LEGAL SYSTEM] went to Beijing in search of a partner to run such a magazine, and eventually initiated ELDERLY CHINESE in cooperation with Ji Xichen, a veteran reporter of RENMIN RIBAO. Because elderly readers had longed for a journal devoted to them, ELDERLY CHINESE became very popular, with many people vying for subscriptions. Particularly when Zheng Xinyong managed to get the inscription "Elderly Chinese" of Deng Xiaoping for its logo, and a story of General Secretary Hu Yaobang and his teacher was carried in its initial issue, its circulation volume grew tremendously. However, the law that "a good thing can change into a bad thing, and vice versa" has always been very difficult to grasp in the hinterland. The popularity of ELDERLY CHINESE and its good market have brought about unexpected trouble to and an attack on its founders. [passage omitted]

Working Their Hearts Out With Tears; Maneuvering Among Various Political Groupings

Friends overseas may not have a good idea of the conventional system or "old habit" of running a newspaper or journal in Mainland China. The publication of any newspaper or journal should be registered at the publication department through a "responsible unit" before it is approved for publication. And this "responsible unit" may be compared to an old-fashioned "mother-in-law." The ELDERLY CHINESE founded by Ji and Zheng managed to be linked with the "National Committee for Old Age Problems of China." It is by no means a large organ, rather, it is "social organization" in name only, with but five or six workers. It is a provincial organ established to accept the invitation of an international conference for old age problems to be held in Vienna. The organ had neither the desire nor the skill to run a journal 3 years ago. Ji and Zheng were, at that time, looking for a responsible organ for their planned journal, and the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" regarded it as a windfall and promptly agreed to the proposal. Thus, the committee in question became the "responsible unit" for ELDERLY CHINESE without making any effort.

Linking oneself with a "responsible unit" means coming under its authority, and it is the rule that one should obey the orders of the "responsible unit," which would in turn send its people to control financial and personnel questions. However, those people in the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" are ignorant and incompetent, know nothing about running a journal nor are they interested in it, and the focus in their eyes is, "money" -- the financial income of the journal. When the journal was initiated, some large unit donated 200,000 yuan to it, which the officials of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" grasped firmly in their hands. They have not the least understanding of the intellectuals' aim for running such a magazine, and turned the funds of the journal into the capital of a corporation existing in portfolio only which they organized. They would not even pay the indispensable editing and contribution fees. It's pitiable that Ji and Zheng have worked their hearts out running this journal for the elderly with increasing returns from the market, and the profits were not used in running the journal, but consumed in a car business, when the editors and reporters could not help complaining (later, an official circular was issued on the case of that corporation existing in portfolio only; it was dealt with according to the law for its illegal operation and tax evasion, and had a fine imposed on it of more than 100,000 yuan, while its responsible person was apprehended).

It is said that some officials of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" regarded ELDERLY CHINESE not only as a source of ready money, but also as a stepping-stone for promotion. When they saw the initial success of ELDERLY CHINESE and its influence among the CPC top echelon, and articles and inscriptions by "leading members of the party and state," their ambition welled up, and they wanted to change the social organization into a governmental organ through the channel of the journal. To accomplish this, the chieftains of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" would naturally drive the two chief editors of ELDERLY CHINESE to render service for them, but this demand was resisted by the two righteous men of letters. [paragraph continues]

As revenge, those officials were determined to remove Ji and Zheng from the editorial department and to appoint others who would act on their command. It was not by coincidence that the person selected by the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" in their plan for reshuffling was a onetime chieftain of the rebels, who had criticized and denounced veteran cadres and acted as a most aggressive henceman in the campaign of "repudiating Deng Xiaoping." He is said to be one of the "people of the three categories" who has managed to escape unpunished and has longed to change his feature. When he got the order of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" to reorganize the editorial department of ELDERLY CHINESE, he was in his element, with might redoubled, and went to the editorial department with the "document" (author's note: It is said that the editorial department and the administrative organ under the director have long been separated, not working in the same office,) in an attempt to take over by force, and a fight almost broke out. Fortunately enough, the ways of the Red Guards and the arbitrary actions of the rebels are no longer acceptable today. Ji and Zheng argued strongly on just grounds, and justice was sought in Zhongnanhai under fierce contention.

Yang Xianzhen Righteously Writes a Letter; Deng Liqun Makes Some "Sensible" Remark

Under the helpless situation of their existence being threatened and the journal drastically dealt with, Ji, Zheng, and their colleagues of the editorial department issued their appeal on "Saving ELDERLY CHINESE" hoping that "god" would be moved and the cause would be handled fairly, in order that the expectations of the readers would not be disappointed. Eventually, their action moved an old CPC theoretical worker, Yang Xianzhen, who had been labeled "revisionist" (for his famous theory of "combining two into one"). This former director of the CPC Central Party School promptly wrote a letter to General Secretary Hu Yaobang, to expose that some people had entrusted a onetime chieftain of the rebels to take over the editorial department of ELDERLY CHINESE, an absurd and rough action, and he believed that this act of seizing power must be promptly checked in order to ensure the normal work of the journal. At the same time, Deng Xiqun, who was at that time still responsible for ideological work, also read about the report concerning the incident. Considering it nonsensical, he wrote a remark on it, saying: "ELDERLY CHINESE combined with the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" on a voluntary basis in the past, and they will separate from each other on a voluntary basis from now on. For the normal publication and circulation of the journal, ELDERLY CHINESE should be left in the charge of the original chief editors." Deng Liqun's instruction on this incident was "sensible" and his view was objective, aiming at the incident itself with nobody involved, and his attitude was clear-cut, tending to be reformative. This secretary did not know Ji and Zheng in person, and he was considering the matter as it stood. His instruction should have been carried out. However, nobody expected that Deng Liqun's instruction could have a negative effect. Some of the officials of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems" and the onetime chieftain of the rebels seized the opportunity to spread rumors in a big way, exaggerating things and raising the matter to the higher plane of principle. They have deliberately created contradictions in the top echelon by mixing the two veteran newspapermen with Deng Liqun, who was never been so popular among the people, to the effect that the matter is made more complicated.

It is still rather difficult to forecast how General Secretary Hu Yaobang will deal with this matter. Although the revered Hu has a thousand and one things to attend to, and many important affairs of the party and state to take care of, he would not leave a letter from Yang Xianzhen unanswered, the latter being in his nineties and a revolutionary of the older generation. The letter must have been intercepted on its way, and never reached Hu; and someone had sent the letter, through another channel, to the superior of an upper level of the "National Committee for Old Age Problems," by taking advantage of the power in his hands, and a department at the central level in part of labor and personnel has been in charge of this conflict. In the end, the responsible person of the department adopted an oversimplified way of meting out punishment to both parties, with the decision that both Ji, Zheng, and the "important personality taking over," the editorial department be removed from office. In order to ensure the normal publication of ELDERLY CHINESE, a certain Li, who is the responsible person of a minor organ weekly LAODONG RENSHI BAO [LABOR AND PERSONNEL], was appointed to the job.

At present, publication of ELDERLY CHINESE has already resumed under the leadership of Comrade Li, with the 1986 nos. 1 and 2 issues available to the public. But the contents are all articles carried in the same journal in 1985, when Ji and Zheng were editors. One really does not know whether to laugh or cry about it.

Looking at the unfinished contention for ELDERLY CHINESE we may have a picture of how difficult it is for men of letters in Mainland China to initiate an undertaking, as well as the profound contradictions between reform and the conservative forces and the old system.

Anyway, it is normal for "the original people to run the journal ELDERLY CHINESE," but who knows how such a great conflict can be brought about. This may serve as a piece of odd news under the relaxed and harmonious atmosphere emerging in Mainland China.

[dated] Completed on 17 June 1986, during a brief stay in Beijing

TA KUNG PAO EXAMINES DENG'S POLITICAL REFORMS

HK170203 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 Jul 86 p 2

["Special Dispatch" from Beijing on 15 July by staff reporter Hou Tung-hai: "Deng Xiaoping and   of the Political Structure"]

[Text] A Party School Symposium Discusses a Reform of the Political Structure

At a meeting with Korean Vice President Yi Chong-ok on 14 July, Deng Xiaoping said: The urban economic reform which China will finish in the next 5 years is in fact an overall reform of the economic structure, including some reforms of the political structure. This is the first occasion in recent times that Deng Xiaoping has mentioned China's political reform in public. This, plus the theoretical symposium on political structure held from 10 to 12 July by the Senior Party School of the CPC Central Committee, which is responsible for training senior Chinese party and government cadres, and the trends in theoretical circles in this field, has clearly shown that while unswervingly pushing forward with economic reform, China is promoting relevant political and cultural reforms.

The symposium, which was sponsored by the Senior Party School of the CPC Central Committee, touched upon the most sensitive and the most crucial issue in the current reform of the political structure, namely the relationship between the party and the government. The participants discussed various problems, such as the function of the party at the present stage, how to straighten out the relationship between the party and the government in practical life, and how to change the party's organization. The symposium was reportedly held according to Deng Xiaoping's instructions. He is the initiator of China's political reform. Deng Xiaoping regards the straightening out of the party-government relationship as a breakthrough point in the reform, beginning with the CPC Central Committee. For the moment we shall call this the "reform of the party." The 13th CPC National Congress will be in autumn next year, which is about 1 year away. By that time, people will probably be able to see the major breakthroughs made in the "reform of the party."

In fact, as far back as August 1980, Deng Xiaoping made a systematic and brilliant exposition on the question of reforming the superstructure in his speech at the enlarged meeting of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, entitled "On the Reform of the System of Party and State Leadership." This speech is undoubtedly a programmatic document for the reform of China's political structure today. Since it may help people understand and foresee the profound significance of this reform, I may as well quote some paragraphs as follows:

Deng Xiaoping's Exposition of 6 Years Ago

Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "As far as the leadership and cadre systems of our party and state are concerned, the major problems are bureaucracy, over-concentration of power, patriarchal methods, life tensure in leading posts, and privileges of various kinds.

"Bureaucracy remains a major and widespread problem in the political life of our party and state. Its harmful manifestations include the following: Standing high above the masses; abusing power; divorcing oneself from reality and the masses; spending a lot of time and effort putting up an impressive front; indulging in empty talk; sticking to a rigid way of thinking; being hidebound by convention; overstaffing administrative organs; being dilatory, inefficient, and irresponsible; failing to keep to one's word; circulating documents endlessly without solving problems; shifting responsibility to others; and even assuming the airs of a mandarin, reprimanding other people at every turn, vindictively attacking others, suppressing democracy, deceiving superiors and subordinates, being arbitrary and despotic, practicing favoritism, offering bribes, participating in corrupt practices in violation of the law, and so on. Such things have reached intolerable dimensions both in our domestic affairs and in our contacts with other countries.

"Bureaucracy is closely connected with our highly centralized management in the economic, political, cultural, and social fields, which we have long regarded as essential for the socialist system and for planning. Our leading organs at various levels have taken charge of many matters which they should not have done and cannot handle, or cannot handle efficiently. These matters could have been easily handled by the enterprises, institutions, and communities at the grass-roots level, provided we had proper rules and regulations and they acted according to the principles of democratic centralism. [paragraph continues]

"Difficulties have arisen from the custom of referring all these things to the leading organs and central departments of the party and government: No one is so versatile that he can take on any number of complex and unfamiliar jobs. This can be said to be the main causes of the bureaucracy peculiar to us today."

The Causes of Bureaucracy

"Another cause of our bureaucracy is that for a long time we have no strict administrative rules and regulations and no system of personal responsibility from top to bottom in the leading bodies of our party and government organizations and of our enterprises and institutions. We also lack strict and explicit terms of reference for each organization and post. Thus, there are no rules to go by and most people are often unable to handle matters independently and responsibly, big or small, which they should handle. They can only keep busy all day long making reports to higher levels, seeking instructions from them, writing comments on documents and passing them around." "They are always ducking responsibility, jockeying for power and wrangling with others, thinking only of their own units' interests. What is more, we have no regular methods for recruiting, rewarding, and punishing cadres, or for their retirement, resignation, or removal. Whether they do their work well or poorly, they have 'iron rice bowls.' They can be employed but not dismissed; promoted but not demoted. These things inevitably result in overstaffing and in too many administrative levels and deputy and nominal posts, all of which, in turn, foster the proliferation of bureaucracy. Hence the necessity for radical reform of these systems.

"Over-concentration of all power in party committees in the name of strengthening centralized party leadership. Moreover, the power of the party committees themselves is often in the hands of a few secretaries, especially the first secretaries, who direct and decide everything. Thus 'centralized party leadership' often turns into leadership by individuals. This problem exists, in varying degrees, in leading bodies at all levels throughout the country. Over-concentration of power in the hands of an individual or of a few people means that most functionaries have no decision-making power at all, while the few who do are overburdened. This inevitably leads to bureaucratism and various mistakes, and it inevitably impairs the democratic life, collective leadership, democratic centralism, and division of labor with individual responsibility in the party and government organizations at all levels. This phenomenon is connected to the influence of feudal autocracy in China's own history and also to the tradition of a high degree of concentration of power in the hands of individual leaders of the communist parties of various countries at the time of the Communist International."

The Reform Will Be Further Deepened

After analyzing patriarchal methods, life tenure in leading posts, and privileges, Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "It is true that the errors we made in the past were partly attributable to the way of thinking and style of work of some leaders. But they were even more attributable to the problems in our organizational and working systems. If these systems are sound, they can place restraints on the actions of bad people; if they are unsound, they may hamper the efforts of good people or indeed, in certain cases, may push them in the wrong direction. Even so great a man as Mao Zedong was influenced to a serious degree by certain unsound systems and institutions, which resulted in grave misfortunes for the party, the state, and himself.

In his speech Deng Xiaoping also touched on the question of eliminating the influence of feudalism and of bourgeois thinking. He pointed out: "All the defects I have just described bear the stamp of feudalism to one degree or another." "Now, it is essential to state clearly that we must continue to labor at this task, and that we must carry out a series of effective reforms in our institutions. Otherwise, our country and people will suffer further losses."

Six years have passed since Deng Xiaoping delivered his speech. However, the problems still exist and they are more incompatible with the economic development following the all-round reform of the economic structure. The situation whereby the political and cultural reforms lag behind the economic reform not only affects the intensive restructuring of the economy, but also makes it possible for us to backtrack if something should go wrong. The loss of control in some aspects of macroeconomic management in the second half of 1984 and the practice of quietly taking back the decision-making power that had just been delegated to enterprises in many localities and departments in the course of carrying out a retrenchment policy in 1985, and the dismissals of many reformers -- all these show that the ultimate success or failure of all reforms depends on the reform of the political structure and that without the modernization of politics and culture, modernization of the economy would be unimaginable.

The prologue of the political structural reform has been drawn back to enable the reform, which Deng Xiaoping called the second Chinese revolution, to be carried out more intensively.

POLITICAL REFORM TALK RISES FROM ECONOMIC REFORM

HK170946 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 17-23 Jul 86 p 2

["The Past Week" column]

[Text] Reform of China's Political System

So far the most explicit public statement from the Chinese leadership on the sensitive question of political reform in China, the remarks by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang on the subject made during an interview with the Yugoslav journal NEDELJNE INFORMATION NOVINE (NEWS WEEKLY) has given a new dimension to the ongoing economic restructuring.

Zhao said in effect that the role of the Chinese Government was bound to undergo farreaching changes as a result of the economic reform. These changes, which will come step by step, will affect the present system of government institutions as well as the cadre (personnel) system.

But it was the last sentence of the whole interview, published in a long report by XINHUA, that carried the greatest import:

'Without reform, it will be impossible for these fields to meet the requirements of the economic restructuring.'

From a whisper, the recent outburst of open discussions on political reform has been described by the eminent sociologist Fei Xiaotong as 'inevitable'. The lively discussions are seen as a result of 'the impact of the encouraging rise in the country's productive forces on the relations of production and our understanding of those relations'. 'It is also an impact on our ideologies,' Fei said.

Although still largely confined to academic circles, there is no doubt that the zealous probes into the deficiencies of China's long-standing political setup signalled the breaking of new ground hitherto held to be sacrosanct.

The recent wave of political awakening came in the wake of extensive and live discussions which unfolded in May to mark the 30th anniversary of the 'double-hundred policy'. Tantamount to freedom in artistic creation and academic research in Chinese political parlance, it was reaffirmed that the reason for the policies of 'letting a hundred flowers to bloom' and 'letting a hundred schools of thought contend' to have existed only in name over an extended period was not through any fault of their own. The two good policies were simply taken to be 'poisonous weeds' by a sudden quirk of history.

Mao Zedong, in whose name the double-hundred policy was launched, was quoted as having said later that 'the hundred schools of thought in fact consisted only of two schools'.

The question was raised in the recent commemorative articles that the 'hundred schools' and 'hundred flowers' must be allowed to take up political issues. 'Otherwise,' as one writer said, 'We would still be left with a single flower in the garden meant for a hundred.'

Director Yan Jiaqi

Not surprisingly, the recent probes into the country's political system were made by researchers attached to the vigorous Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

About two months ago, the man at the head of its research institute of literature, Liu Zaifu, brought a fusillade from an article published in the theoretical journal RED FLAG for his set of new ideas, one of which objects to the practice of putting literary works under political scrutiny.

This time, it was the director of the academy's research institute of political science, Yan Jiaqi, who sounded a loud note of unorthodoxy.

As Liu sees it, over-concentration of power is the main problem with China's political system. The answers are, first, a high degree of socialist democracy and, second, the establishment of a scientific system for making major political decisions.

He sees four ways in which the over concentration of power could be diffused.

Under the heading of what he calls 'the horizontal division of power', Liu believes that a clear division of work between the Party and the government is still a problem that needs to be solved not only on a theoretical plane but also in practice. This question naturally involves the relationships between the administrative, legislative and judicial organs of the state.

The second way, which Liu calls 'vertical power sharing', is designed to prevent high authorities from making decisions in lieu of their subordinates. Persons in leading positions have the right to veto decisions, but it should not be presumed that they have the right to override all decisions, Liu writes.

The third concerns human rights. In the Cultural Revolution, Liu states bluntly, the Chinese people did not have the right to choose their hair styles, not to mention privacy. 'They were deprived of the right to be happy and to think; they were even deprived of the right to be sad.'

Four, more direct or indirect participation of the people in the making of major policy decisions. This question concerns the institution of the National People's Congress, Liu says, or more precisely, the nomination and the election of NPC deputies, and their qualifications. While a sound legal system is indispensible to democracy, it would be wrong to equate the two concepts. A democracy must have mass particiapation, he insists.

It is clear from Premier Zhao's statement that the old political machine in China has clashed with the inexorable economic reform. Equally clear is the utter helplessness of many traditional methods in face of tangles and confusions resulting from the country's dramatic metamorphose from a rigid, highly centralized socioeconomic system to planned economy based on commodity production.

Whether the theories of Yan Jiayan will meet official approval is beside the point. The point is such seemingly sensitive views are published, and the fact that brilliant minds in China are aware that the old political machine definitely needs a good overhaul lest it impede the all-important economic reform.

It was China's new minister of culture, Wang Meng, who, in his 'inaugural speech' last week counselled against 'an aggressive attitued towards those who hold differing views.' This is not helpful to development, creativity, and a harmonious environment, he said. Advising officials in the cultural field to refrain from passing 'conclusive verdicts' on any work of art, Wang observed with candour that this was because time has proved that such verdicts often 'failed to pass the test of history.'

The remark may not apply to theories relating to the political system. But the spirit of keeping the contention of differing thoughts alive certainly does.

PRC APPROVES RELEASE OF DAYA BAY PLANT STUDY

HK200320 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST in English 20 Jul 86 p 1

[By Ann Quon]

[Text] China has given the Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company the go ahead to release the feasibility study on the controversial Daya Bay nuclear power plant.

The study has been the subject of intense lobbying by legislative councillors who have made numerous requests for its release following increasing local opposition to the plant.

In what is seen as a move to allay public suspicion over secrecy surrounding the project and its safety, it is understood that a decision has been made to make the study available to councillors.

However, there is no indication yet whether the study will also be made public after being given to Umelco members.

And, in a related development, China repeated yesterday it had signed a letter of intent with France to conduct a joint safety appraisal of Daya Bay.

The decision to release the feasibility study follows a request to disclose its contents from the financial Secretary, Mr Piers Jacobs.

As the top government official most closely involved in Daya Bay, he is behind a government campaign to make as much information available to the public and legislative councillors as possible.

This is to curb mounting opposition to the plant from turning into full-scale disapproval of the project, which is set for completion in 1992.

It is understood that the request by Mr Jacobs has been approved by Beijing through the Guangdong Nuclear Power Joint Venture Company.

An announcement on when the top-secret study is to be released will be made by Mr Jacobs within the next two weeks to the Legislative Council.

It is understood that only those parts of the study dealing with site selection, equipment study and system designs are to be handed over to councillors. What they will not get to see is sensitive commercial information considered "share sensitive".

This latest development follows behind-the-scenes lobbying by the Government to seek the release of the Document.

The document was commissioned by the joint venture company, owned 75 per cent by the Guangdong Nuclear Investment Company and 25 per cent by the Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company, a subsidary of Hong Kong's largest power utility, China Light and Power.

The Government request was made to the chairman of the Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company, Mr William Stones. It is understood that Mr Stones received approval for the feasibility study's release late last week and that it will be made available so soon as arrangements can be made with the appropriate authorities.

Public pressure has been mounting in recent weeks because of concern over the safety of the plant which is to be built 50 km from Hong Kong.

The move represents a major about-turn for both the Government and the joint venture company. Both in the past have refused to release the study and placed the responsibility for doing so squarely on each other's door-step.

The study is also expected to reveal that several sites were considered before Daya Bay was finally chosen. It is understood that one under consideration was at Mirs Bay near Hong Kong.

However, the proposal was rejected by China Light and Power because of concern that the public would not accept a nuclear plant so close to the urban area. China Light and Power has committed itself to buying up to 70 per cent of the total output of Daya Bay. However, a flexibility clause allows it to buy much less.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

China

Vol I No 140 22 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

Chances for Reagan-Gorbachev Summit Assessed [BEIJING REVIEW 21 Jul] A 1

UNITED STATES

Shultz, Shevardnadze To Meet in Late September B 1
Reagan Drafts Response to Soviet Arms Proposal B 1

SOVIET UNION

Soviet Politburo Fires Officials Over Chernobyl C 1
Moscow Sets Up New Ministry of Atomic Power C 2
USSR To Reconsider Atomic Industry Policy C 2
Moscow Taking Western Europe More Seriously C 3

NORTHEAST ASIA

Tian Jiyun Opens Japan Food Technology Exhibit D 1
    Hu Yaobang Speaks to Delegation D 1
    Yao Yilin, Japan's Inayama Talk D 2
XINHUA on Bank of China's Opening in Tokyo D 2
Work Begins on PRC-Japan Joint Tourist Project D 2
Japan's SDI Participation 'Virtually Confirmed' D 3
Japan Plans More Nuclear Power Stations D 3

WESTERN EUROPE

Turkish President Meets Zhao Ziyang 21 July G 1
PRC, France To Launch Nuclear Safety Appraisal G 1
EC Commission Official Reports on Aid to PRC G 2
Wan Li Meets, Fetes British Writer Han Suyin G 2

MIDDLE EAST & AFRICA

Iranian Delegation to Economic Meeting in PRC I 1
    Meets With Wan Li I 1
    Meets Zhang Jingfu I 1
    Zheng Tuobin Gives Dinner I 2
    Visits Petrochemical Plant I 2
    Received by Ulanhu I 2
    Zhang Jingfu Closes Meeting I 3
PRC, PDRY Sign Sports Cooperation Protocol I 3
    Sports Minister Receives Award I 3

WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Li Xiannian Sends Congratulatory Message to Nicaragua [Managua] J 1
El Salvador Rebel Leader Meets CPC Liasion Head J 1

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Meeting Views Defense Strategy for Year 2000 [LIAOWANG] K 1
PLA Navy Supports Construction Projects K 3
Regiment Educates Pilots in Lofty Ideals K 4
Chen Yun Talk on Economic Planning Reprinted [BEIJING REVIEW 21 Jul] K 5
Statistics Official Describes Economic Situation K 8
Journal on Liu Shaoqi, Socialist Contradictions [LILUN YUEKAN 25 Jun] K 9

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

EAST REGION

Li Guixian Speaks on Unity at Anhui Meeting [ANHUI RIBAO 2 Jul] O 1

CENTRAL-SOUTH REGION

Shenzhen Announces Namelists for New Leading Bodies P 1
Guangdong's Lin Ruo Urges Overcoming Calamity P 1
Henan Continues Drive Against Economic Crimes [HENAN RIBAO 7 Jul] P 2

NORTH REGION

Beijing Air Force Guides Party Rectification R 1
Ni Zhifu at Tianjin Road Opening Ceremony [TIANJIN RIBAO 2 Jul] R 1
Tianjin Cadres Attend Lecture on Civil Law [TIANJIN RIBAO 9 Jul] R 2

NORTHEAST REGION

Heilongjiang Secretary Attends Local Army Congress [HEILONGJIANG RIBAO 8 Jul] S 1
Heilongjiang Reviews County Party Rectification [HEILONGJIANG RIBAO 8 Jul] S 1
Heilongjiang Secretary on Rectifying Party Style S 2
Heilongjiang Commentary on Correcting Party Style S 4

NORTHWEST REGION

Gansu Leaders Meet Yunnan Frontline Dependents T 1
Xinjiang Radio Urges Rural Cadres To Repay Loans T 1

TAIWAN

Visit by U.S. Physicist Who Visited PRC Approved V 1
Premier Urges Private Sector Defense Cooperation V 1

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Controversy Over Daya Bay Plant Continues W 1
  PRC Attitude Discussed W 1
    [HSIN WAN PAO 19 Jul]
  Petition Group To Visit Beijing W 2
    [SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 21 Jul]
China Builds 13 Export Ships in First Half of Year W 3

CHANCES FOR REAGAN-GORBACHEV SUMMIT ASSESSED

OW211214 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 21 Jul 86 p 10

[Article by Zhang Yunwen: "Superpower Summit: Murky Future"]

[Text] Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Vladimir Petrovsky told reporters on July 1 that his country had proposed a "preparatory mechanism" for a long delayed pre-summit meeting between the U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and his Soviet counterpart, Eduard Shevardnadze. The United States responded with surprise, claiming it had long asked the Soviet Union to propose a date for foreign ministers' meeting but had so far got no answer.

A second summit meeting was agreed upon by U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev when they met in Geneva last November. Both sides agreed that a second summit meeting would be held when Gorbachev visits the United States this year. Reagan, in return, will visit the Soviet Union in 1987 for a third Soviet-U.S. summit.

But Reagan's invitation to Gorbachev for a visit to the United States in June has been given the cold shoulder by the Soviets because of the stalemate over the disarmament issue. In April, after the U.S. air attack on Libya, the Soviet Union cancelled a foreign ministers' meeting that was to have taken place in May.

In early June, Reagan sent a letter to Gorbachev, suggesting that the two foreign ministers meet in July, but in a letter from Gorbachev hand-delivered by the Soviet ambassador to Reagan not long ago, no date was mentioned for such a meeting. The White House has pushed for the foreign ministers' meeting in July in order to gain more time to prepare for the summit meeting between the two leaders. But the Soviet Union has stressed that the date and spot are not that crucial. The key, they say, is the summit's agenda. This means the Soviet Union is insisting that something substantive -- progress in disarmament talks -- must be the goal of the summit.

The importance of this summit meeting to Reagan's second term of office is evident. His two main pet issues have been tax reform and the reduction of nuclear arms and detente between the Soviet Union and the United States. On tax reform, he has been successful. But negotiations on nuclear disarmament are in deadlock. The compromise atmosphere created by the Geneva meeting last November has abated, and U.S. -Soviet relations have once again become strained, especially since Reagan recently declared the United States would no longer abide by the SALT II treaty.

Reagan, caught short by strong criticism of his move to end the SALT II treaty at home and abroad, was forced to speak positively of the new Soviet arms reduction proposal in a recent speech in Glassboro, New Jersey. Some U.S. political analysts maintain that if the summit meeting takes place this year, the Republicans will surely retain control of the Senate in their midterm elections in November. And if a third summit meeting were held, it would have a great impact on the 1988 presidential election, and Reagan's second term would make quite a mark in history.

But the Soviets are also making some concessions. In a turn-about, the Kremlin recently agreed that research work on Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative could proceed in laboratory as long as both the United States and the Soviet Union continued to observe the antiballistic missile treaty (ABM) for another 15 years. This recent flexibility over the "Star Wars" programme by the Soviets is being seen as a significant step towards productive arms talks and a possible treaty.

SHULTZ, SHEVARDNADZE TO MEET IN LATE SEPTEMBER

OW190050 Beijing XINHUA in English 2351 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 18 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze will meet in New York in late Spetember to prepare the second summit meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev, according to a senior U.S. Government official quoted by press reports here today. The official said "there has been blips in the diplomatic channels" between Washington and Moscow about the foreign ministers' meeting and the choice had narrowed down to late September when Shevardnaze will come to New York to attend the U.N. General Assembly session. The meeting was originally scheduled for May 14-16 but was canceled by the Soviet Union after U.S. bombing of Libya in April.

Shevardnadze said in London on Wednesday that Moscow was "ready to have a summit" with the United States and was "working hard to prepare" for it. But he stated that dates for neither a meeting between he and Shultz nor a Reagan-Gorbachev summit can be set until Washington responds positively to the latest Soviet arms control proposals. The White House said recently that the Reagan administration was preparing a reply and that it would be sent to the Soviets at the end of this month. Meanwhile, the White House announced today that the two superpowers have agreed to meet in Geneva around July 25 to discuss "issues related to nuclear testing."

REAGAN DRAFTS RESPONSE TO SOVIET ARMS PROPOSAL

OW211818 Beijing XINHUA in English 1753 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Washington, July 21 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan expressed its willingness to negotiate on all aspects of arms control raised by recent Soviet proposals but did not commit himself to limits on the "star wars" program, it was disclosed here today. The U.S. President expressed the willingness in the draft of a personal letter to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev. The draft letter has been approved by himself. The letter would be a response both to a message from Gorbachev on June 23 and to the Soviet proposals put forward in the last round of the Geneva arms control talks. Press reports quoted government sources as saying that Reagan's draft letter deals with a wide range of issues, including a 50 percent reduction in strategic arms, a compromise on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe and various regional issues.

They disclosed that Reagan's preliminary decision entailed several specific counter-proposals to Moscow, including some "new ideas". But the sources added that Reagan does not respond directly to Soviet proposals to ban U.S. deployment of space-based defense weapons for 15 to 20 years and to negotiate on restricting SDI research to laboratory level. Moscow has made such limits a condition for its agreement to major reductions in offensive strategic nuclear forces. However, the sources argued, if Soviet reaction to the letter is favorable, it is likely that a U.S.-Soviet summit could be held in Washington before the end of this year. The Soviets have made it clear that they would agree to dates for a second summit as well as for a preparatory meeting between the foreign ministes of the two countries only after the United States responds positively to their recent arms control proposals. Meanwhile, it was reported that President Reagan has sent senior arms control adviser Paul Nitze to Europe to brief allied governments on the draft response. He has also assigned Edward Rowny, another arms control adviser, to Asia on a similar mission.

SOVIET POLITBURO FIRES OFFICIALS OVER CHERNOBYL

OW200624 Beijing XINHUA in English 0600 GMT 20 Jul 86

["Chernobyl Accident Blamed on Worker Errors: Top Officials Fired" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, July 19 (XINHUA) -- The ruling Politburo of the Soviet Communist Party today blamed the Chernobyl disaster on "gross breaches of regulations" by workers at the nuclear power station and said four prominent officials have been fired for their responsibility in causing the accident.

The official news agency TASS said the Politburo held a special meeting today to discuss the report of a government investigating commission set up to establish the causes of the April 26 accident, and raised the official death toll from the mishap to 28. "It was established that the accident had been caused by a series of gross breaches of the reactor operational regulations by workers of the atomic power station," the Politburo said in a statement distributed by TASS.

The statement said the managers and specialists at the station failed to provide proper supervision and adequate safety measures and authorized unprepared experiments in the turbine generator of the plant's fourth reactor when it was sidelined for repairs at night. The Politburo reprimanded the Ministry of Power Engineering and Electrification and the State Committee for Safety in the Atomic Power Industry for lack of control over the situation at the Chernobyl station and for their failure to take effective measures to prevent breaches of discipline and operational regulations at the plant. "Irresponsibility, negligence and indiscipline led to grave consequences. Altogether 28 people died as a result of the accident and the health of many other was impaired," the Politburo statement said. The previous official death toll stood at 26, all but two of whom died from radiation sickness. The statement said a total of 203 people had been found to be suffering from radiation sickness and 30 are still in hospital.

According to the statement, the crippled reactor had spewed radioactive contamination over an area of about 1,000 square kilometers and the accident caused direct losses equivalent to about two billion roubles (2.6 billion U.S. dollars). Agricultural and industrial production had to be stopped and power supplies to the national economy had been impaired, it added. More than 100,000 people have been evacuated from the contaminated areas surrounding the Chernobyl station, located 130 km north of Kiev in the Ukraine.

The statement said the four officials were sacked for serious errors and shortcomings in their work, which led to the accident. They were named as Yevgeny Kulov, chairman of the State Committee for Safety in the Atomic Power Industry; G.A. Shasharin, deputy minister of power and electrification; Alexander Meshkov, first deputy minister of medium machine building; and Ivan Yemelyanov, deputy director of a research and design institute.

TASS said the former director of the Chernobyl atomic power station, identified only as Bryukhanov, was expelled from the Communist Party. His dismissal had been reported earlier. The news agency also said that Power and Electrification Minister Anatoly Maiorets, who deserved to be sacked, received instead a stern reprimand from the Politburo "in view of his short tenure of office." Criminal proceedings have also been initiated by the procurator's office against "persons guilty of the accident," it said.

The Politburo has also instructed party organs to investigate others who might be responsible for the accident, the Politburo statement said, adding that "a National Ministry of Atomic Power Engineering has been formed to raise the standards of management and responsibility for the development of nuclear power engineering." TASS said the Politburo directed ministries and departments to urgently draw up and carry out additional safety measures for existing nuclear power plants. Employees at these stations will be retrained and their stricter compliance with operational regulations is now required. "The condition of the damaged reactor is under dependable control and causes no worry" and sophisticated engineering measures are being taken to "entomb the reactor," the TASS report concluded.

MOSCOW SETS UP NEW MINISTRY OF ATOMIC POWER

OW220102 Beijing XINHUA in English 2352 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 21 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Government today appointed a veteran nuclear power station manager to head a new Ministry of Atomic Energy, set up to supervise the nuclear energy industry after the Chernobyl disaster. Nikolay Lukonin, born in 1928, will hold the new job, the Soviet news agency TASS said. Lukonin served as director of the Leningrad nuclear power station from 1976 to 1983. Since 1983, he has headed a giant nuclear power station at Ignalina, in the Lithuanian Republic.

The creation of the new ministry was announced on Saturday after a special meeting of the Soviet Communist Party Politburo to discuss the report of a government investigating commission set up to determine the cause of the April nuclear accident. The report said the disaster has claimed 28 lives and cost the country two billion roubles (2.9 billion U.S. dollars) in direct damage alone. More than 100,000 people were evacuated from an 18-mile (30 km)contaminated zone around the Chernobyl station and the nation's power supply was disrupted.

The Politburo said that those deemed responsible for the disaster will be put on trial. Last week, the head of the Soviet State committee for Safety in the Atomic Power Industry, Yevgeniy Kulov, was removed from his post. He was one of the four officials fired because of the Chernobyl accident.

USSR TO RECONSIDER ATOMIC INDUSTRY POLICY

OW190428 Beijing XINHUA in English 0148 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Moscow, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station last April has forced the Soviet Union to reconsider its atomic industry policy, a new weekly said. The latest issue of the weekly magazine NOVOYE VREMYA (NEW TIMES) quoted V. Legasov, first director of the Atomic Energy Institute in the Soviet Academy of Sciences, as saying that after the Chernobyl disaster the government has to review the concept of the country's atomic power industry, the distribution of atomic power stations and related technologies. Legasov told the magazine that the Chernobyl mishap was "a result of several unimaginable accidents," but he gave no details of such accidents. He said that the Soviet Union is making every effort to ensure that no such accidents will reoccur.

Meanwhile, Professor U. Sivintsev, director of the laboratory of the Institute, told the magazine that there are still strong radiations in the damaged no. 4 reactor at the Chernobyl station and that people cannot approach the reactor and nuclear fuels.

He said that the strong radiations damaged several robots which had been used in the decontamination work at the station. Workers are building reinforced concrete walls around the no. 4 reactor and the work is expected to end next autumn, the professor added. Earlier this week, the Soviet party newspaper PRAVDA reported that no. 1 and no. 2 reactors at the Chernobyl station will resume operation next October, while no. 3, the nearest to the damaged one, will be closed for some time.

MOSCOW TAKING WESTERN EUROPE MORE SERIOUSLY

OW181716 Beijing XINHUA in English 1504 GMT 18 Jul 86

["News Analysis: Moscow Wants Better Relations With Bonn (by Shen Yiming)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Foreign Minister of Federal Germany Hans-Dietrich Genscher arrives in the Soviet capital Sunday for a three-day visit, when he is expected to discuss international issues and bilateral relations with Eduard Shevardnadze, the Soviet foreign minister. Genscher's visit, following French President Francois Mitterrand's trip to Moscow and Shevardnadze's London trip, has shown that Moscow is taking Western Europe more seriously. The Kremlin is trying to take advantage of differences between the United States and its allies on disarmament to bolster its position in dealing with Washington.

In the past few years, Moscow and Bonn have operated under strained relations. The Soviet Union sharply criticized the Federal German Government's decision to strengthen its military forces, to deploy U.S. Pershing-2 missiles and binary chemical weapons in its territory, and to allow Federal German companies to participate in the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative ("star wars") program. Yet, the Kremlin found some positive factors, noting that Bonn intends to play a greater role in ensuring security and prosperity in Europe and has a desire to ease tense East-West relations. The Kremlin appreciates Bonn's stand that Europe should have its own say in improving East-West relations and should not leave the task only to the big powers.

Federal Germany's Chancellor Helmut Kohl recently stated his government would like to see a second summit between Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and U.S. President Ronald Reagan and would promote any disarmament process. Undoubtedly, disarmament topics will be prominent during Genscher's visit to Moscow. The Soviets will try to persuade Bonn to take a more independent position toward Washington on the issue of the European security, while Federal Germany, as a NATO member, will support its allies in the alliance and defend its own interests. Observers wouldn't hazard a guess as to how Genscher will respond to Soviet disarmament proposals when he meets Shevardnadze and other Soviet leaders.

Economic relations also will be covered. Federal Germany has been the Soviet Union's largest trading partner in the West, with trade reaching 7.08 billion roubles (8.85 billion U.S. dollars) in 1985. The two countries have indicated they want to expand trade and economic cooperation, particularly in machine building, ferrous and non-ferrous metallurgies and daily necessity production.

The Soviet Union also wants broader scientific and technological cooperation with Federal Germany. A spokesman for the Soviet Foreign Ministry said that Genscher and Shevardnadze will sign a scientific-technological agreement, which will promote cooperation in agriculture, medicine, and peaceful use of nuclear energy.

TIAN JIYUN OPENS JAPAN FOOD TECHNOLOGY EXHIBIT

OW181214 Beijing XINHUA in English 0735 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- A Japanese food technology exposition, the largest of its kind ever held in new China, opened at the Beijing Exhibition Center here this morning. A total of 49 Japanese companies displayed over 500 kinds products, and food processing technologies and equipment at the exhibition which covers a flour space of 11,000 square meters.

The technologies cover food purchasing, storage, transport, processing, packaging and sales The exhibition has a special hall, showing 370 kinds of Chinese food products processed by 14 Chinese provinces and municipalities.

Commenting on this, Secretary-General of the Chinese Reception Committee for the exhibition Fu Limin said: "The purpose is to invite Japanese friends to offer their suggestions on improving our food products." "We would also like to have business discussions with Japanese friends on exporting to Japan some of the food products displayed here," he added.

Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun, Commerce Minister Liu Yi and Honorary President of the Japanese Exhibition Inayama Yoshihiro, Japanese Ambassador to China Yosuke Nakae cut the ribbon for the exhibition. Prior to the ceremony, Tian Jiyun met with Inayama Yoshihiro and other Japanese friends.

Hu Yaobang Speaks to Delegation

OW181445 Beijing XINHUA in English 1436 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang said here today Japanese industrialists need not fear China will use imported technology to undercut competitors on the world market.

"It is an old story among the countries of the Orient that once an apprentice was trained and experienced he left his master unemployed," said Hu, general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee. "But in the new China, it no longer works that way. We want foreign investment and technology in order to raise the standard of living of our people." Hu promised: "We won't sell or in any way dump most of our products on the international market. And China means what it says."

Speaking to a delegation of Japanese industrialists here for the Japanese food technology exhibition, which opened in the Beijing Exhibition Centre this morning, Hu said the main trend of Sino-Japanese trade and economic cooperation has been good. "But since we agree on the main trend, we can talk about minor aspects," he said. For example, said Hu, "China has a problem with its unfavorable balance of trade with Japan. But as long both countries want to solve the problem, a solution is possible."

The general secretary noted that the total volume of bilateral trade might drop. "But it doesn't matter if there is a decline," he said. "Trade will increase again in two or three years." On the investment environment in China, Hu said the country would "try its best" to make investments attractive to foreigners. "As in love affairs -- you can bind a man and a woman together but that won't make them want each other," he said, drawing a laugh from the Japanese visitors.

Yoshihiro Inayama, a leading Japanese industrialist and head of the delegation, said trade and economic relations between Japan and China have developed substantially. But, he said, "I think China has felt dissatisfied in some respects." This "shows the Chinese have had high hopes," he said.

Yao Yilin, Japan's Inayama Talk

OW191250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1152 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin conferred here today with Yoshihiro Inayama, a leading Japanese industrialist, on the expansion of cooperation between the enterprises of the two countries in running joint ventures. Inayama, leader of the Japanese food technology exhibition, came here for the opening of the exhibition here yesterday. The Japanese industrialist is scheduled to leave here for home tomorrow.

XINHUA ON BANK OF CHINA'S OPENING IN TOKYO

OW181324 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The Bank of China opened its Tokyo office today, its first branch office in Japan. An opening ceremony was held this morning at the branch in Tokyo's Chiyoda District.

Li Shutian, director of the branch, pledged the office's active contribution to Sino-Japanese cooperation in economic, trade and financial fields.

Present at the ceremony were over 200 people including Toyoo Gyoten, Japanese vice-minister of finance for international affairs, Kaheita Okazaki, senior advisor of the Japan-China Association on Economy and Trade, and Zhang Shu, Chinese ambassador to Japan.

The Bank of China is the country's official institution for foreign exchange dealings. The Tokyo branch is its eighth branch abroad.

WORK BEGINS ON PRC-JAPAN JOINT TOURIST PROJECT

OW200732 Beijing XINHUA in English 0646 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 20 (XINHUA) -- The Chang-Fu-Gong center, a tourist project and the biggest Sino-Japanese joint venture in Beijing, began construction following a foundation-laying ceremony today. The project is co-invested by the Beijing Tourist Company and the Japan Tokyo Company Ltd with a total sum of more than 100 million U.S. dollars. It is located at Jianguomen near the city center and opposite to the ancient observatory, a site of historical significance.

The center, to be completed in 30 months, consists of hotel rooms, office space and apartments. The hotel will have 512 rooms and dining halls serving both Chinese and Japanese dishes.

JAPAN'S SDI PARTICIPATION 'VIRTUALLY CONFIRMED'

OW180952 Beijing XINHUA in English 0811 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Cabinet ministers have "virtually" agreed on Japan's participation in the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program, but held back a formal decision, according to the Kyodo News Service today.

The report said six cabinet ministers, including Chief Cabinet Secretary Masaharu Gotoda, had their third meeting on the matter today. They "virtually confirmed" Japan's taking part in the research, commonly known as "Star Wars", on the basis of what is called a "West German" formula, the report said. Under the formula, private enterprises would chiefly participate in the program and the government would not fund their activities.

Officials were quoted as having said Japan would try to work out an agreement with the United States on ways in which the Japanese private sector could join in the research while ensuring the return to Japan of derivative technology developed in the course of the project.

The ministers did not make a formal decision during the meeting and, instead, left the matter to their successors to decide. Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone is expected to form a new cabinet next week after the landslide victory of the ruling Liberal Democratic party in the July 6 twin election of the Diet (parliament).

JAPAN PLANS MORE NUCLEAR POWER STATIONS

OW191202 Beijing XINHUA in English 0934 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Japan will depend on nuclear power for 58 percent of its electricity needs by the year 2030, a government advisory panel said in a report today.

In "Nuclear Energy Vision," a report presented to the Ministry of International Trade and Industry (MITI), the official advisory group on energy, predicted that output capacity of nuclear power plants will reach 137 million kilowatts by 2030, 5.6 times more than the present level.

The report said that 32 nuclear reactors are currently operating in Japan with a combined power output capacity of 24.52 million kilowatts, or 26 percent of the country's total electricity output in fiscal 1985. This amounts to more than a quarter of the total generated by oil-combustion thermal power plants. The average operating capacity rate of the country's nuclear reactors reached a record high of 76 percent and the atom has replaced petroleum as Japan's No 1 energy source.

The report said Japan will lay greater emphasis on the safety of nuclear plants in view of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster in the Soviet Union. On other policies for nuclear energy exploitation, the report proposed to raise economic efficiency, give full play to non-governmental enterprises and promote international cooperation.

Japan ranks fourth in the world in the number of its nuclear plants, after the United States, the Soviet Union and France, but ranks only 12th in terms of nuclear output as a percentage of total energy produced.

TURKISH PRESIDENT MEETS ZHAO ZIYANG 21 JULY

OW211413 Beijing XINHUA in English 1343 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Istanbul, July 21 (XINHUA) -- Kenan Evren, president of the republic of Turkey, met visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang here today, expressing his satisfaction with the continued development of bilateral relations between Turkey and China. The meeting took place following Premier Zhao's cruise along the winding straits separating Europe and Asia this morning on his fifth day of his Turkish visit.

Evren said there was great potential for further developing bilateral economic and trade relations between Turkey and China. He added that the two countries may cooperate in a variety of ways and strive for long-term stable development. The president said there was a time-honored history in the relations between the people of Turkey and China, who have for centuries lived in friendship. Such friendship makes it easy for the two countries' leaders to achieve good results in their talks.

Evren described the talks between premiers of the two countries in Ankara as "very good" and as "having contributed to the development of friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries," especially in the economic and trade fields, he said.

The Chinese premier also expressed his satisfaction with the rapid development of Sino-Turkish relations since 1982, describing them as "having entered a new stage." He hoped that such relations would be further developed with the concern of the Turkish president.

The Turkish president suggested bilateral cooperation in contracting for construction projects in third countries and solving some problems in trade transport.

Zhao said that the problem of opening an air route between China and Turkey will be resolved soon. He conveyed regards to President Evren from Chinese leaders Deng Xiaoping and Li Xiannian. On behalf of Chinese president Li, Premier Zhao extended an invitation to the Turkish president to visit China again.

Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal was present at the meeting. After the meeting, President Evren gave a luncheon in honor of Premier Zhao. Premier Zhao and his party are scheduled to leave Istanbul for the port city of Izmir today to continue their visit.

PRC, FRANCE TO LAUNCH NUCLEAR SAFETY APPRAISAL

OW190644 Beijing XINHUA in English 0601 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) -- China and France will join hands in the safety appraisal of the Daya Bay nuclear plant in Guangdong Province to guarantee its absolute safety, according to the National Nuclear Safety Administration (NNSA) here today. The appraisal includes the general principle of safety design, interior and external events, nuclear fuel assemble, reactor in-core components, reactor cooling system, containment, reactor control and protection system, emergency core cooling system, accident analysis, quality assurance, plant operation as well as waste storage and disposal.

The joint appraisal will be carried out according to a letter of intent signed between the NNSA and the French Institute of Radiation Protection and Nuclear Safety in May this year. According to the letter, the appraisal will call for an investment of 30 million francs and one million yuan. The two governments have expressed their willingness to support the program, NNSA said.

An agreement on the first stage of the appraisal is expected to be reached in September this year, NNSA added.

A team made up by more than 100 Chinese nuclear safety specialists and technicians was set up last year. They have undergone a series of training programs and are conducting the safety appraisal in the Qinshan nuclear plant in Zhejiang Province.

In China, systematic safety appraisal will be carried out during the building and operation of nuclear power plants in line with the country's nuclear safety regulations and standards. The NNSA will be responsible for issuing building license, loading and trial operation permission and operation licence according to the result of the appraisal.

The nuclear island of the Daya Bay plant, including two 900-mw pressurized water reactors, was imported from France.

EC COMMISSION OFFICIAL REPORTS ON AID TO PRC

OW190106 Beijing XINHUA in English 0009 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Brussels, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The Commission of the European Community (EC) will give China development aid totalling 2.4 million ecus (one ecu equals roughly one U.S. dollar), a commission official announced today. Part of the aid package, 900,000 ecus, will go toward financing a project to improve the quality of natural rubber in south China.

The EC will provide modern equipment for conducting experiments and technical assistance to help existing rubber factories educate local personnel in the exploitation, processing and manufacturing of modern latex. The other portion of the aid, 1.5 million ecus, will be used to study and resolve the serious erosion problems in sichuan Province. For both projects, the EC will offer possibilities of educating personnel either on the project site or abroad.

In addition, the European Commission will finance development projects in Mexico, Honduras, Bolivia, Pakistan and Nepal. The aid for these projects, including China, totals 60 million ecus. Pakistan will receive the largest amount of aid, 26 million ecus, for rural electrification projects and training of personnel.

WAN LI MEETS, FETES BRITISH WRITER HAN SUYIN

OW190802 Beijing XINHUA in English 0735 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) -- Acting Premier Wan Li met and feted British writer Han Suyin here today. Han came to China on June 10 at the invitation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries. She has been to Gansu and Sichuan Provinces during her current visit.

IRANIAN DELEGATION TO ECONOMIC MEETING IN PRC

OW170202 Beijing XINHUA in English 2349 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Text] Tehran, July 16 (XINHUA) -- An Iranian economic delegation headed by Iranian prime minister's assistant Hamid Mirzadeh left here this evening for China. The delegation will take part in the second session of the Sino-Iran economic joint committee in Beijing.

At the Tehran international airport, Mirzadeh said that he will explore the way to expand technical, economic and commerical cooperation between Iran and China. Earlier, Iranian officials expressed their desire to Chinese diplomats here for increasing non-oil goods export to China.

Meets With Wan Li

OW180923 Beijing XINHUA in English 0629 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Acting Premier Wan Li met Iranian Deputy Prime Minister Hamid Mirzadeh and his party in the Great Hall of the People here this morning. They exchanged views on further development of bilateral economic relations and trade.

Meets Zhang Jingfu

OW171410 Beijing XINHUA in English 1356 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- The second meeting of China-Iran joint committee for economic, scientific and technological cooperation and trade was held this afternoon. Among those attending the meeting were chairman of the Chinese Committee and State Councillor Zhang Jingfu and an Iranian Government and economic delegation led by Deputy Prime Minister Hamid Mirzadeh. They conferred on the expansion of bilateral economic relations and trade.

Zhang said both China and Iran have much in common, hoping that the two countries will develop their long-term, stable relations on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. He noted some progress in bilateral economic relations and trade over the past few years but he said it is still not ideal. He hoped that Iran will adopt flexible pricing methods in common use internationally concerning its oil export to China so as to increase bilateral trade.

Mirzadeh said the two countries will seek new areas and ways for cooperation on the basis of maintaining their friendly relations and cooperation through mutual contacts.

This evening, Zhang gave a dinner for the delegation. In his toast Zhang said he believed that there exist broad prospects for bilateral relations and cooperation in political, economic and cultural fields.

Mirzadeh said the purpose of his delegation's China visit is pricely to expand and strengthen bilateral relations and cooperation. Through this meeting, he added, the two sides will take new steps to extend their friendly bilateral relations in evey field.

Mirzadeh and his delegation arrived here this morning at the invitation of Zhang Jingfu. They were met at the airport by Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin.

Zheng Tuobin Gives Dinner

OW181424 Beijing XINHUA in English 1159 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Zheng Tuobin, Chinese minister of foreign economic relations and trade, gave a dinner here today in honor of Iranian Deputy Prime Minister Hamid Mirzadeh and an economic delegation from the Iranian Government he is leading. Mirzadeh also met Chinese Minister of Chemical Industry Qin Zhongda and Chinese Minister of Nuclear Industry Jiang Xinxiong here today.

Visits Petrochemical Plant

OW191044 Beijing XINHUA in English 0927 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) -- Iranian Deputy Prime Minister Hamid Mirzadeh and his party today drove more than 50 kilometers from Beijing to visit the Yanshan General Petrochemical Corporation. They learned that the corporation has a staff of 40,000, runs seven chemical factories and four auxiliary factories. It is able to refine seven million tons of crude oil and produces 2.3 million tons of gasoline, Kersone, diesel oil and lubricating oils a year.

The Iranian deputy prime minister made round of two factories producing rubber and polyethylene and a refinery. Mirzadeh is here attending the second meeting of the China-Iran joint committee for economic, scientific and technological cooperation and trade.

Received by Ulanhu

OW211130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1119 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 21 (XINHUA) -- Vice-President Ulanhu today expressed his satisfaction at the development of friendly relations between China and Iran. He told to the visiting Iranian Deputy Prime Minister, Hamid Mirzadeh, that the Chinese Government and people attach great importance to the development of Sino-Iranian traditional friendship.

Since both countries belong to the Third World, he added, they should make up for their deficiencies through economic cooperation and trade. He expressed his belief that the cooperation in this field will be further developed as a result of the second meeting of the China-Iran joint committee for economic, scientific and technological cooperation and trade which ended in Beijing earlier today.

Mirzadeh said that the Iranian leaders pay great attention to the development of cooperation with China in the fields of economy, trade, science and technology, and highly evaluate the bilateral relations of friendship. He also said that the results of the second meeting were fruitful.

Zhang Jingfu Closes Meeting

OW211316 Beijing XINHUA in English 1227 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 21 (XINHUA) -- The second meeting of the China-Iran joint committee for economic, scientific and technological cooperation and trade ended here today. A summary of talks on the meeting was signed by Zhang Jingfu, chairman of the Chinese side to the meeting and state councillor, and Hamid Mirzadeh, chairman of the Iranian side and deputy prime minister.

At the closing ceremony, Zhang Jingfu said that the meeting was held in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual trust and achieved success. He drew attention to the smooth cooperation in economy and trade between the two countries and the good beginning in scientific and technological cooperation. He said he was confident of expanding their bilateral economic relations and trade as well as scientific and technological cooperation. Mirzadeh said that bilateral cooperation will be further developed through consultation and efforts by both sides and there exist broad prospects.

PRC, PDRY SIGN SPORTS COOPERATION PROTOCOL

OW171004 Beijing XINHUA in English 0941 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- A protocol for sports cooperation between China's State Physical Culture and Sports Commission and the Supreme Council for Sports of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen was signed here this afternoon. The document, signed by Chinese Minister Li Menghua of the sports commission and President Mohamed Ghalib Ahmed [spelling as received] of the Yemeni Sports Council, paved way for exchange of visits by sports delegations of the two countries in the future. And it encouraged sports exchanges, especially direct contacts between the nations' sports federations. According to the protocol, China and Democratic Yemen would exchange visits in the 1986-1987 period by table tennis and volleyball teams and coaches of table tennis, basketball and volleyball. China would provide Democratic Yemen with sports equipment free of charge. Also present at the signing ceremony here today were Vice-Minister Zhang Caizhen of the Chinese Sports Commission, and Ibrahim 'Abdalla Sa'idi, Democratic Yemen's ambassador to China.

Sports Minister Receives Award

OW170946 Beijing XINHUA in English 0932 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Minister Li Menghua of the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission was awarded here today with a gold order from the Supreme Council for sports of the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. Mohamed Ghalib Ahmed, [spelling of name as received] president of the council and leader of a visiting Democratic Yemeni sports delegation, presented the gold medal to the Chinese minister at an awarding ceremony in the Beijing indoor stadium this afternoon. The president also presented an order of honor to the Chinese Sports Commission and Chinese Olympic committee. The Yemeni council president said the awardings were done according to a recent joint decision by the council and the National Olympic Committee. Present at the ceremony were Vice-Minister Zhang Caizhen of the Chinese Sports Commission, Yemeni ambassador to China Ibrahim 'Abdallah Sa'idi, and representatives of Chinese athletes. The Yemeni sports delegation will leave here for home tomorrow.

LI XIANNIAN SENDS CONGRATULATORY MESSAGE TO NICARAGUA

PA191842 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 0300 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Note of congratulations sent by the PRC President Li Xiannian to Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega Saavedra, on the seventh anniversary of the triumph of the Sandinist People's Revolution, issued in Beijing, 18 July 1986]

[Text] Your Excellency,

Daniel Ortega Saavedra, president of the Republic of Nicaragua, Managua:

On occasion of the seventh anniversary of the triumph of the Nicaraguan Revolution, I am pleased to convey to you, on behalf of the PRC Government and people and on my own, our heartfelt congratulations to your excellency and to the Nicaraguan Government and people.

Seven years ago, in a long and heroic struggle, the Nicaraguan people overthrew Somoza's dictatorial domination and achieved the victory of the National Democratic Revolution, opening a new era in Nicaraguan history.

Today, the Nicaraguan people are engaged in a struggle, against foreign interference, to safeguard the national sovereignty and independence and for the development of the national economy.

The PRC people have always sympathized with and supported the Nicaraguan people in their just struggle and we sincerely hope that the Nicaraguan people will continue to achieve new accomplishments under your excellency's leadership.

With the reestablishment of diplomatic relations between the PRC and Nicaragua a new stage in the friendly cooperation between the two countries began.

The government and the people of the PRC sincerely appreciate the friendship between our two nations and are willing to make efforts, together with the Nicaraguan Government and people, to promote the progressive strengthening and development of the friendship and cooperation relations between the two countries.

Li Xiannian, president of the PRC.

Beijing, 18 July 1986.

EL SALVADOR REBEL LEADER MEETS CPC LIAISON HEAD

OW181720 Beijing XINHUA in English 1456 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- Zhu Liang, head of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met here this evening with a delegation from the Democratic Revolutionary Front of Salvador led by the front's President Guillermo Manuel Ungo. The Salvadoran visitors arrived here yesterday at the invitation of the International Liaison Department of the C.P.C. Central Committee.

MEETING VIEWS DEFENSE STRATEGY FOR YEAR 2000

HK200507 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0309 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jul (XINHUA) -- The overseas edition of LIAOWANG to be published tomorrow reports that representatives of the Chinese Army, Navy and Air Force and relevant experts and scholars, totalling over 100 persons, recently met in Beijing to explore questions of China's national defense development strategy for the year 2000.

The "Seminar on National Defense Strategy for the Year 2000 and Systems Engineering" which was convened by the Military Systems Engineering Commission of China [Zhongguo Junshi Xitong Gonacheng Weiyuanhui 0022 0948 6511 0057 4762 4827 1562 4453 1201 0765 2585], produced various conceptions, forecasts, and probes from various angles of national defense developments in the year 2000 in conjunction with the realities of China and its Armed Forces.

The meeting received a total of over 60 theses. The scope of these developed from general theorizing and qualitative analysis to a new stage of combining the application of systems engineering to carry out quantitative analysis. This showed that China's national defense strategic studies are advancing from a close to an open state, and reflect a new trend in which China's Armed Forces and national defense departments are actively strengthening lateral ties and are holding extensive academic exchanges with local experts and scholars on major affairs of state and national defense.

The well-known scientist Qian Xuesen said: "The application of system engineering to study national defense strategy problems for the year 2000 is a good idea. It is two sides of one problem. If we can do this, I hold that this is a marvellous thing, and the first time this has been done in China."

Deputy Chief of Staff Xu Xin said, "An upsurge in the study of China's national defense development strategy is now forming."

The meeting pointed out that the CPC Central Military Commission decided in 1985 that a major change should be brought about in the idea guiding the PLA's national defense construction, that is, it should change from basing work on the combat-readiness posture of "fighting an early war, a major war, and a nuclear war" to the track of peacetime construction. This policy decision will have a decisive impact on the overall situation in national defense construction. This is China's main basis in determining its national defense strategy, and is also the general guiding idea for launching studies on development strategy.

This meeting also applied system dynamics, dissipation structures, coordinates, the index method, and other new theoretical methods to study national defense strategy from the angles of strategic concepts, the international environment, national defense strategies for the different branches of the Armed Forces and for civil defense construction. These studies reached a certain academic breadth and depth.

This method of holding a common exploration of high-level national defense strategy in the name of an academic society and combining the Army and the civilians, with crisscrossing of many specializations of various sciences (natural science, social science, and military science), may become a new form of providing consultative services to the leadership for policymaking.

The experts attending the meeting also put forward many original views on national defense strategy and counterstrategy. Qian Xuesen held that they should exchange the overall strategy of the West for China's national strategic concept. He said that China's national strategy is the quadruplication and attainment of a comfortably well-off living standard set by the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee; overall strategy comprises a whole series of political, economic. diplomatic, science and education, and foreign trade strategies adopted in order to realize the central authorities' guidelines and attain the national strategy; and national defense strategy for the year 2000 is a component part under this overall strategy.

Cheng Ruisheng of the Foreign Affairs Study Association said when expounding on the international environment for national defense strategy that there are now two different analyses of the world situation. One stresses the role of the polarization of the United States and the Soviet Union, and the other stresses the role of multipolarization. Chen held that although the influence of these two hegemonies has weakened somewhat, they still play a role as the dominant factor.

Polarization is a good as well as bad thing, because the consequence of mutual confrontation acts as a constraint on the outbreak of a major war. He also said that in recent years some scholars in China and elsewhere have developed the view that due to the relatively fast economic development in the Asia-Pacific region, the center of the world economy has shifted to the Pacific, and the focus of the rivalry of the two hegemonists will also switch from Europe to the Asia-Pacific region. Actually the theoretical basis for such a view is incomplete; the focus of rivalry will remain in Europe for the new 15 years.

Wang Shuzhong of the World Economic and Political Research Center said that China's future strategy can be analyzed from three different levels: in the first level it is held that there will be a relatively great flying leap in China's national strength; in the second, it is held that the contradictions between certain great powers may intensify; and in the third, it is held that due to the rise of China, major changes will occur in the U.S.- Soviet bipolar structure. Western strategy is precisely built on playing the China card on the basis of this analysis. He pointed out that due to the growth in China's economic strength, its international status will change continually, and it is estimated that if the gross national product of the Western countries grows by an annual 3 percent while China's grows at 8 percent, then China will climb from its present eighth position to fifth position in the world table by the year 2000. He held that by that time the world pattern will no longer be a bipolar affair; instead it will be a tripod.

Mi Zhenyu and Chen Weimin of the Military Science Academy pointed out when expounding on national defense strategy and counterstrategy that all countries have different relations of advantages and disadvantages in the international environment, but the most essential component is economic interests.

To exterpolate war or its basic functions from this can mean nothing but the use of violent means to preserve or pursue economic interests. The fundamental constaining factor as to whether violent methods can be used is the weighing of national interests. They also pointed to the new concept of "fluid economy," and held that rivalries over economic interests in the world are mainly centered on fluid economy, and the probability of war breaking out by means of fluid economy is the greatest.

Su Enze of the Air Force Engineering Institute pointed out that China has established the concept of "wisdom strategy" [zhi zhanlue 2535 2069 3970], and in connection with reality has set to work to develop wisdom strategy from the angles of information, equipment, talent, and organization. The aim of the wisdom strategy he mentioned is to seize opportunities, gain time, develop plans, work up a fast rhythm, stress transformation into the excellent, skillfully occupy the high ground in intelligence.

PLA NAVY SUPPORTS CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

OW211401 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0011 GMT 21 Jul 86

[By reporter Cao Guoqiang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 21 Jul (XINHUA) -- While the coastal seas were previously used by the People's Navy solely for training and military exercises, they have now become a working area for supporting the nation's transportation and energy construction programs. According to incomplete statistics, the People's Navy has undertaken and participated in more than 300 state and local transportation and energy construction projects since last year. [passage omitted]

The construction of the Beicang power plant in Ningbo is one of the state's major projects in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Last May some 160 engineers, technicians, cadres, and fighters of a Dong Hai Fleet unit and the Naval Engineering Design and Research Institute undertook the geological survey work for the construction of the power plant's wharf. The work had to be carried out in a deep-sea area with rapid torrents and whirlpools and complex geological conditions, but the commanders and fighters braved the scorching sun and high temperatures and worked day and night on the spot. In only 2 weeks, they drilled to a depth of some 600 meters, and the quality of their work fully met the requirements. In praise of their work, the power plant's leader said that our Liberation Army was not only heroic in fighting battles but also superb in doing construction work.

To turn the Shengli oilfield into a "second Daqing" as early as possible, the Bei Hai Fleet, which undertook the construction of an oil transport project for the oilfield, dispatched some 1,000 commanders and fighters, more then 80 vehicles, and 34 vessels to do the work even though it was undergoing a reduction-in-strength reorganization. Last year they completed civil engineering construction involving the more then 600,000 cubic meters of earth and stone work and extended the landing stage by some 1,500 meters.

In March of last year, the state department concerned gave the Navy an emergency order to transport a large number of imported cars out of Hainan Dao.

On receiving this order, the Nan Hai, Dong Hai, and Bei Hai Fleets immediately dispatched 26 large vessels to form a transport fleet. After working consecutively for 70 days and nights, they completed the task of transporting these cars, totaling more than 40,000, out of the island. To commend their work, a special message was sent to the naval departments concerned by the State Council's General Office.

To meet the needs of national construction, the naval units concerned have assigned 20 military ports and docks on the coast for use exclusively by the local departments or for use by both military and civilian units. In addition, 12 military airports, including those in Qinhuangdao, Yantai, Ningbo, and Haikou, have been opened to the outside for supporting the work of local transportation departments.

REGIMENT EDUCATES PILOTS IN LOFTY IDEALS

OW191433 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0143 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Excepts] Jinan, 19 Jul (XINHUA) -- In the course of the party rectification, an Air Force regiment takes various measures to educate the pilots in lofty ideals in order to inspire their "dedication to a flying career" and to solve common problems among them.

1. The pilots are asked to correctly understand the hardship and risks in flying and to treat their job as a fighting post for realizing communist ideals. [passage omitted] In the course of party rectification, the regiment educates pilots in the party program and party membership requirements, asks them to review the party adminission oath, and give lectures on "devotion to flying." The pilots have understood that as party members and flyers, they should treat their job as the working post for communist cause, dedicate themselves to flying, and realize their lofty ideals. [passage omitted]

2. The pilots are asked to correctly handle their marriage and family problems and seek happiness in flying. As new pilots are still going through flight training, their tour with the regiment is an important stage for them to lay groundwork. However, a few of them are considering early marriages and are not concentrating on training. In the course of party rectification, the regiment party committee, in view of such a situation, educates them in lofty ideals and helps them assume a correct attitude toward love and marriage, so that they clearly understand the relationship between marriage and a flying career and know which is more important. [passage omitted]

3. The pilots are asked to assume a correct attitude toward promotion and conscientiously subordinate themselves to the needs of their flight duty. [passage omitted] They hold that as both pilots and leading cadres are the people's servants, they should not contend for higher positions, and instead, they should vie to make more contributions in flying.

4. The pilots are asked to assume a correct attitude toward Air Force pay and keep to a course of flying for the revolution. In the course of party rectification, the regiment party committee closely combined education in lofty ideals and education in current policies, guides the pilots to assume a correct attitude toward material interests, and strengthens their determination to fly for the revolution.

First, the party committee tells the pilots that it costs the state a large amount of money to train an all-around flyer. The party committee urges the pilots to bear firmly in mind the trust placed in them by the party and the people, give all they have without any reservation, and never demand better material treatment on the grounds of having flying skills. Second, the pilots are asked to be content with the current material treatment and know that the material treatment given to them by the party is not bad while our country is not rich and that the people's living standards are generally even lower. The pilots are urged to make more contributions to the party and the country. Third, the party committee has analyzed the fact that some pilots of the regiment and some fraternal units persisted in seeking material interests, committed mistakes, and degenerated. The party committee educates the pilots to remold their thinking; conscientiously resist corruption by such decadent ideas as seeking fame, gain, and pleasure; and "putting money above all else"; and firmly keep to a course of flying for the revolution.

The party rectification has strengthened the determination of the party members in the regiment to dedicate themselves to a flying career. At the end of June, the regiment completed 70 percent of this year's training duty. The new pilots who joined the regiment in July 1985 have completed their change-of-equipment training 6 months ahead of schedule.

CHEN YUN TALK ON ECONOMIC PLANNING REPRINTED

OW211251 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 21 Jul 86 p 14-15

["Outline" of a talk by Chen Yun on 8 March 1979]

[Text] 1. The principle of planning is to ensure planned and proportionate development. It was Marx who first formulated this concept.

CAPITAL is a work on political economy. It presents an analysis of capitalism.

In CAPITAL the author brings to light the fact that capitalist production is anarchic and that the growing productive forces are bound to come into irreconcilable contradication to the relations of production. Hence, capitalism will ultimately die out.

Before a socialist revolution was won in any country, Marx had already predicted that the socialist economy would develop in a planned and proportionate way. This theoretical proposition has proved to be correct in every sense of the word.

2. After 1917, the Soviet Union initiated a planned economy, and China did the same in the years following 1949. Both applied Marx's theory on developing the economy in a planned and proportionate manner.

It was quite right for the Soviet Union and China to follow such a path. The point, however, is that both countries failed to elaborate on Marx's principle (of planned and proportionate development) in the light of the experience they gained in building the socialist system and of the level of development of the productive forces in their respective countries. This accounts for the shortcomings that have appeared in their planned economies.

Over the past 60 years, there has been an important defect in the planning systems of both the Soviet Union and China. Namely, they have focused their attention on planned and proportionate development while neglecting market regulation, regulation according to the law of value, which the socialist system cannot do without. In other words, "anarchic" and "blind" production may be encouraged for regulating some sectors of the economy.

Our planning is so rigid and covers so many things that it leaves no room for the market to play its regulatory role automatically. Very often the plans are ill-concerted, and the planning departments are preoccupied with their daily routines.

Since the market has a very limited role to play as a regulator and the planning departments only take care of portioning out quotas for the manufacture of run-of-the-mill goods and some major items of products, it is impossible to produce a great variety of goods. The results is that the people are provided with a very limited variety of daily necessities.

3. There must be two types of economy throughout the socialist period:

(1) The planned economy (the type that needs to be developed in a planned and proportionate way).

(2) The market-regulated economy (the type that is not subjected to planning but is conducted in accordance with the changing market supply and demand, i.e. regulated in an unplanned way).

The first type is fundamental and predominant; the second, though supplementary and secondary in nature, is indispensable.

With both the state power and the first type of economy, we can build socialism. The second type is a useful supplement (not harmful, on the whole).

During the first years after liberation, we had only the first type of economy under our control. Despite the fact that the private, capitalist sector was still there, ours was a socialist country.

After we raised the per-catty price of ginned cotton to an equivalent of 8 catties of rice, there was a remarkable growth in cotton production.

The crux of the matter is that we are still unaware of the inevitability of and necessity for the existence of the two economies and that we are still undecided on the proportions each should assume in the different economic sectors.

This explains the following two shortcomings in our work of planning:

(a) We are not strict enought where we should be. Hence: capital construction is overextended; the electric power industry and transport services, instead of developing ahead of other undertakings, are lagging behind; The raw materials industry is not developing in proportion to the processing industry, and the latter is generally ahead of the former.

There is an imbalance within the iron and steel industry; the same is true between the various industries; and of course, imbalance between agriculture and industry poses the biggest problem.

B) We are not flexible enough where we should be. Hence:

The powers for planning are over-centralized;

We are still exercising tight and rigid controls over that part of agricultural production undertaken by the individuals or the collectives, the part that is not included in state plans; and

The local authorities are so keen on construction projects that they don't have much funds left at their disposal.

4. Neglect of the regulatory role of the market leads to neglect of the law of value, as illustrated by the fact that many comrades have no idea what "profit" means. No enterpreneurs but pampered youths can afford to act that way in managing the economy.

After being blockaded by the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia had no choice but give a free rein to the development of the market economy. (footnote 1) (After Yugoslavia was expelled from the Information Bureau of the Nine European Communist and Workers' Parties in June 1948, it was subjected to an economic blockade and political and military pressure. The Information Bureau was founded at a meeting held in Warsaw, Poland in September 1947 by respresentatives of the Communist and Workers' Parties of Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary, Poland, the Soviet Union, France, Czechoslovakia, Italy and Yugoslavia. In April 1956, the Bureau declared itself closed.) It seemed that in the early years the proportion of its economy covered by state plans was too small, but Yugoslavia paid attention to increasing that proportion later on.

5. The economy of our society is characterized by a vast population, with the rural residents accounting for 80 percent of the total, and a relatively small amount of arable land.

Yet, our comrades working in the planning, industrial and commercial departments do not have a profound understanding of this.

They are bound to run into snags unless they try to remedy this ignorance of theirs.

The arrangement made in the order of priority of agriculture, light industry and heavy industry for the development of our economy embodies an integration of Marxism with the practice of the Chinese revolution. (footnote 2) (In his talk in the early days of the Lushan Meeting held in 1959, Mao Zedong pointed out that in the past the development of the national economy had been planned in the order of priority of heavy industry, light and agriculture. He proposed to change the priorities to agriculture, light industry and heavy industry, with the last serving the first two. By the order of priority of agriculture, light industry and heavy industry mentioned here he meant that, in drawing up plans for the development of the national economy, priority should be given to agricultural production and its needs before making arrangements for the production of light industry in the light of market demand and the amount of raw materials that agriculture can provide. And the growth rate and production scale of heavy industry should be decided in keeping with those of agriculture and light industry, to avoid lopsided development of heavy industry and imbalances between the different sectors of the national economy.

Mao Zedong based those decisions on the fact that China was an agricultural country and analysed both the positive and negative experiences in the building of socialism in China and elsewhere before he put forth this principle and method for planning the development of the national economy.)

6. In the course of readjusting the economy and reforming the management system in the years to come, we shall lay stress on establishing a proper ratio between the planned economy and the market-regulated economy. The increase of the planned economy will not necessarily lead to the decrease of the market-regulated economy in absolute terms. Most likely the two will grow proportionately.

STATISTICS OFFICIAL DESCRIBES ECONOMIC SITUATION

OW191419 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1325 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Jul (XINHUA) -- During the first half of this year, China's economy broke away from the strained situation caused by "excessive development," showed normal and well-proportioned growth, and the general situation was good, said Zhang Zhongji, a press spokesman of the State Statistical Bureau.

At a news briefing held today, Zhang Zhongji stated the following six points, in particular:

A good harvest of summar grain and oil-bearing crops was achieved. According to date obtained from on-the-spot surveys at selected locations, the nation's summer grain output may reach 91.88 million metric tons. This is 3.14 million metric tons more than last year and close to the record of the rich-harvest year of 1984. Rapid progress was noted in summer-grain purchase. From 1 April to the end of June, 15,85 million metric tons of were purchased by the state, surpassing the record for last year's corresponding period by 5.16 million metric tons. [passage omitted] Production of summer-ripening rapeseed is about the same as or a little higher than 1985, which was a year noted for a bumper rapeseed harvest.

Industrial production demonstrated steady well-proportioned growth. The total industrial output value for the first half of this year reached 428.4 billion yuan, a 4.9 percent rise over last year's corresponding period, which saw a growth rate of 23.1 percent. [passage omitted]

Transportation was improved. The volume of cargo transported during the first half of this year by various means of transportation stood at 823.1 billion metric ton-kilometers, a 6.4 percent increase over last year's corresponding period. The volume of cargo transported by railways was 426.1 billion metric ton-kilometers, showing an increase of 8.4 percent. [passage omitted] The volume of passenger transportation by various means of transportation reached 218.3 billion passenger-kilometers, or 2.9 percent more than last year's corresponding period.

The growth of fixed asset investments slowed. Capital construction investment made by units owned by the whole people during the first half of this year was 7.9 percent more than last year's corresponding period. This growth rate was well below that registered for the corresponding period last year.

On the other hand, a quicker pace was achieved in the technological upgrading and transformation of enterprises. Investment made by units owned by the whole people for these purposes amounted to 15.2 billion yuan, 45 percent more than in last year's corresponding period.

The market is stable, and the upward trend of commodity prices has slowed. During the first half of this year, retail sales of commodities totaled 235.1 billion yuan, or 11.8 percent more than during last year's corresponding period. The supply of commodities was ample on the market; in particular, that of nonstaple foods was better than in previous years. Trade fair activities were brisk in both cities and countryside. Consumers were at ease about the availability of goods to meet their needs and demonstrated growing demand for various commodities. The rate of retail price rises on the market was gradually declining. Compared with the corresponding periods last year, the rate of the rise in the retail price index was 8.5 percent in January. It declined month by month and was about 3 percent in June. The average rate for the first half of this year as a whole was 5.5 percent. [passage omitted]

Imports and exports continued to increase. According to statistics compiled by Customs, the volume of total imports and exports for the first half of this year amounted to $33.43 billion, 10.9 percent higher than in last year's corresponding period. The growth rates for exports and imports were 14.4 percent and 8.6 percent, respectively. This year imports of some commodities were reduced, but because less foreign exchange was earned due to the lower prices of exported crude oil and farm and sideline products, the total amount of imports still exceeded that of exports by $6.37 billion. [passage omitted]

At the news briefing, Zhang Zhongji answered questions raised by Chinese and foreign reporters. Asked why the statistical figures of imports and exports published by Custom differed from those by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, he said that this was mainly due to the different approaches in compiling the statistics. The Customs statistics, he said, showed all imports into and exports out of our country, whereas the statistics of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade covered only those imported and exported commodities of a foreign trade nature. Besides, with the diversification of China'a foreign trade channels, some imports and exports made by departments other than the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade and by local authorities were not included in the statistics compiled by this ministry.

JOURNAL ON LIU SHAOQI, SOCIALIST CONTRADICTIONS

HK211011 Beijing LILUN YUEKAN in Chinese No 6, 25 Jun 86 pp 16-20

[Article by Zhang Jiangming: "Comrade Liu Shaoqi's Contribution to the Theory of Socialist Contradictions"]

[Text] Comrade Mao Zedong's theory of socialist contradictions was a great development of the Marxist-Leninist theory of contradictions in the history of development of socialism. As an outstanding Marxist, Comrade Liu Shaoqi long propounded and discussed the question of socialist contradictions. Comrade Liu Shaoqi discussed incisively the universality of social contradictions in socialist society and the contradictions among the workers themselves in his articles "Internal Contradictions of State-Run Factories and the Basic Tasks of Trade Union Work," published in 1951, and "How To Correctly Handle Internal Contradictions Among the People," published in 1957. His analysis and demonstration were rich in creative spirit and full of the breath of the times.

I

Comrade Liu Shaoqi was sensitive to the changes in social contradictions shortly after the founding of the PRC, and pointed out that socialist contradictions are a new type of social contradictions differing basically from capitalist contraditions. He believed that, in principle, class antagonism and exploitation no longer exist inside state-run factories, where the class contradiction between capital and labor is basically solved. The relation between the factory's administrative organs and the workers has basically changed to one of comradeship. So, does this mean that contradictions no longer exist inside socialist enterprise? Of course not. Contradictions still exist, and this is because "the structure of all things is one of contradictions, and the internal structure of state-run factories is certainly one of contradictions." ("Selected Work of Liu Shaoqi," Vol 2, p 93. Hereafter, quotations from the same work will be referred to by page number only.) The issue lies in the fact that the nature of contradictions has undergone a change; they have changed from being mainly class contradictions and exploitation into new contradictions and new relations, which are the contradictions and relations between state-run factory adminstrative organs and the workers, as well as various problems arising from such contradictions and relations. (p 93)

As contradictions exist in enterprises under ownership by the whole people, which are in the dominant position, contradictions naturally exist under socialist collective ownership and nonsocialist individual ownership, not to speak of national capitalist ownership, in which class contradictions still exist. Thus, we can see, contradictions exist universally in socialist society as well as in other societies.

Comrade Liu Shaoqi summed up the contradictions in socialist society into the two categories of social contradictions of different natures, and gave philosophical expositions on them. According to him, the contradictions in social society "can be largely divided into two categories: one is fundamentally antagonist and irreconcilable; and the other is fundamentally nonantagonistic and reconciable." (p 94) Here, we are told that in differentiating between contradictions of different natures, it is necessary to master two principles and criteria: First, whether they are antagonistic or nonantagonistic in essence. A contradiction is antagonistic and one between ourselves and the enemy if long-term and overall conflict of basic interests exists; and the contradiction is nonantagonistic and one among the people when the basic interests are the same and no conflict of basic interests exists. This latter category of contradictions might be intensified on a certain issue, and bring about some antagonistic sentiments; however, such phenomena are accidental, temporary, and partial, and generally they will not develop into external conflict. Second, will the two parties concerned in a contradiction "reconcile"? Here, the exposition employing the concept of "reconciliation" is original. The word "reconciliation" has several meanings: a peaceful solution not resorting to force; the two parties concerned can come to friendly terms and coexist harmoniously, when the contradiction will not grow more and more intense, and rapidly explode in the direction of antagonism. Differentiating between the two categories of contradictions of differing nature based on these two principles has enabled the theory of socialist contradictions to make a big step forward. This is because the queston of"whether the form of external conflict is adopted as a solution to old contradictions" often served as the criterion for differentiating between the two different categories of contradictions, and a possible "reconciliation" was seldom taken into consideration.

What is the significance of attaching attention to a possible "reconciliation" between the two parties concerned in a contradiction to the realities of socialist society? Comrade Liu Shaoqi believed that analyzing contradictions from the angle of "reconcilation" may prevent the conversion of contradictions among the people to antagonistic contradictions because of inappropriate handling; whereas antagonistic contradictions should be handled with the measure of "reconcilation" only when they acquire certain conditions. The aim of such practice is to reduce conflict, and to realize unification.

When observing a problem, we must first make a distinction between the two categories of contradictions of differing natures. During the transition period, the contradictions between the working class and the bourgeoisie were those of basic conflict between the exploiting and the exploited classes, and contradictions of an antagonistic nature; however, under the specific conditins in China, they could be converted to nonantagonistic contradictions. The contradictions within the working class, the contradictions between socialist state-run factory internal administrative organs and some of the workers are contradictions among the people. If these two categories of contradictions are confused, one will commit mistakes of a fundamental nature.

With contradictions of differing natures, the principles for handling them will be different. Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out: "Struggle should be stressed in the solution to contradictions when they manifest themselves as antagonistic. But when the contradictions appear to be nonantagonistic, we should refrain from the measure of struggle but adopt the measure of 'unity -- criticism -- unity' for a solution." (p 302) In terms of philosophy, it is "precisely to make use of the unity nature of contradiction to promote the reconciliation of contradictions, or to make use of struggle nature of contradictions to promote the conflict or breakdown of contradictions." (p 96) Regarding the question of making use of the unity or struggle nature of contradictions mentioned here, I believe we should have the following understanding: In socialist society, antagonistic and nonantagonistic contradictions have different natures; the identity and struggle in contradictions each have their own characteristics, and each had its different role and place in contradictions. Hence, the formation of two categories of contradictions, one characterized by identity, and the other by struggle. Contradictions characterized mainly by struggle are antagonistic, such as the "natural enemy" in nature, and the relation between the enemy and ourselves in a class society, and the solution to such contradictions must go through a bitter struggle of life or death, developing into external antagonism and conflict, with our party exterminating the other or the extermination of both parties in arriving at a new unity. Contradictions with unity as the main element may contain antagonism and struggle, however, because identity exists within them, there is a relationship of mutual coordination and infiltration. For a solution to the contradiction, generally no external struggle of an explosive nature is demanded, while coordination and reconciliation will continuously bring new essence to the original unity, and gradually develop to a higher phase. Thus we can see the final result of the struggle between the two parties concerned in an antagonistc contradiction will negate the existing interdependent relationship, bring about a breakdown of the original unity in the contradiction, and arrive at a new unity, when the starting point and the destination of nonantagonistic contradictions arrive at a new and higher unity on the basis of the original unity. Here, we must make clear that we do not mean that reconciliation and coordination are free of struggle, only that the nature and methods of struggle are different. [paragraph continues]

In contradictions in which struggle is the main element, struggle plays the dominant role, and unity is restricted by struggle; while in contradictions with unity as the main element, unity plays the dominant role, and the form, scope, nature, and degree of struggle will all be restricted by unity. In this sense, we can say that struggle should be stressed in the solution to antagonistic contradictions; and unity should be stressed in the solution to contradictions among the people.

As struggle should be stressed regarding antagonistic contradictions, and unity should be stressed regarding nonantagonistic contradictions, is the philosophical tenet that in the two categories of contradictions of differing natures, struggle has an absolute and unconditional nature and unity a relative and conditional nature still effective? Comrade Liu Shaoqi gave an affirmative answer to this question. Our usual explanatin is: The struggle in contradictions is unconditional and absolute, as it is absolute in material movement, functioning at all times in all places; struggle exists in the quantitative changes in matter, the more so in qualitative changes. As to unity, as the unity of two opposites, quantitative and qualitative changes likewise occur in the course of development of contradictions, and struggle is inevitable; however, when a contradiction has reached its height, the unified body will dissolve, and the old unity no longer exists. Hence, the relative nature of such unity. Comrade Liu Shaoqi linked theory closely with practice, and gave a new explanation on this point in a language easy to understand, pointing out that "this is because the cooperation and reconciliation of ny contradiction is mutual and conditional, while a single party will be enough to promote the struggle in a contradiction. Hence, struggle is unconditional and absolute." (p. 96)

Based on the different conditions of various stages, is there a principal contradiction in the two categories of contradictions of differing natures? Comrade Liu Shaoqi explicitly pointed out: "Prior to the founding of the PRC, the contradiction beteen the Chinese people and imperialism, feudalism, and bureaucratic capitalism was the principal contradiction. After the founding of the PRC, the land reform in particular, the principal contradiction changed; imperialism had been driven out, the landlord class had ben eliminated through the land reform, as well as bureaucratic capitalism, and the principal contradictiodn became the contradiction beteen the proletariat and the bourgeoisie; but since the socialist transformation of capitalist enterprises in China, the contradiction between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie has also been basically solved. The CPC Eighth National Congress touched upon this question. With all these contradictions basically solved, what is the principal contradiction at present? We should say the contradictions among the people has become the principal contradiction." (p. 296). This is a very important concept. If we had brought forward and adhered to this concept, we would not have proposed "taking class struggle as the key," neither would we have considered the contradiction between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie the principal contradiction remaining unchanged during the entire socialist period, nor would we have gone to the extreme and initiated the so-called "Great Cultural Revolution" in which a large number of revolutionary leading cadres were overthrown as "capitalist roaders," resulting in grave disaster for the party, state, and people of all nationalities. Thus we can see that whether the principal contradiction is clearly seen and grasped is a matter of great importance. [paragraph continues]

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the Central Committee has explicitly pointed out that after the basic completion of socialist transformation, the principal contradiction China is to solve is the contradiction between the ever-growing cultural and materal needs of the people and the backward social productive forces. This is entirely correct, and in conformity with China's objective reality.

II

At a comparatively early date, Comrade Liu Shaoqi gave clear explanations on the root causes of the rise of the two different categories of social contradictions in socialist society, their nature, and their development from the relations between production relations and productive forces, and between the superstructure and the economic base. Based on the change in the principal social contradiction at the beginning of the fifties, and the basic completion of the socialist transformation of production means after the founding of the PRC, Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out: "The superstructure in the past was a reactionary one, and so were the production relations. In the past, the reactionary classes represented backwardness, while the revolutionary classes represented progress. Therefore, the contradictions between the superstructure and the economic base, between production relations and productive forces and between progress and backwardness once demonstrated themselves as contradictions between the enemy and ourselves. However, this condition has now changed, the domestic situation has undergone fundamental changes, the reactionary ruling classes have already been eliminated, and the bourgeoisie has also been basically eliminated. The contradictions between the superstructure and the economic base, between production relations and productive forces, and between progress and backwardness today display themselves as contradictions not between the reactionaries and the revolutionaries, but among the people." (pp 298-299). For example, the present superstructure is the government led by the CPC, including politics, the law, and culture, and the contradictions between all these elements of the superstructure and the economic base have become contradictions among the people. Production relations today chiefly comprise socialist ownership by the whole people and collective ownership, as well as the distribution relations determined by these two systems of ownership; therefore, the contradictions betweeen socialist production relations and productive forces "are internal contradictions of socialist ownership, internal contradictions of ownership by the whole people, and internal contradictions of collective ownership, which are also contradictions among the people". (p 298). However, as remnants of old classes, old production relations, and some aspects of the old superstructure still exist in socialist society, and reactionary classses and the aggressive forces of imperialism still exist internationally, antagonistic contradictions and class struggle will continue to exist within a certain realm over a long period of time.

Ideologically speaking,materialism and idealism are two diametrically opposed ideological systems. The contradictions between them "often manifested themselves between classes and between ourselves and the enemy in the past." Thus, antagonistic contradictions also existed.

But now, a basic change has taken place in China's class relations, and such contradictions "are manifested not between the enemy and ourselves, not between antagonistic classes, but among the people. The two ideologies, materialism and idealism, true and false, as well as right and wrong, exist among the people. Therefore, these contradictions manifesting themselves among the people are nonantagonistic, and they are contradictions among the people." (p 30)

Idealism has different manifestations among the people, but the most concentrated and conspicuous forms of manifestation are subjectivism and dogmatism. Looking at it from a philosphical angle, we can say that subjectivism and dogmatism are precisely idealism in practical work. This is because idealism is wont to start from subjective wishes, without taking into consideration actual objective conditions. Beautiful wishes will eventually become castles in the air once divorced from actual conditions; and in the end,not only will one's ideals not be realized, but they will play the role of impeding social development. In handling the relation between subjective wishes and objective reality, subjectivism does not put objective reality first, so that it may truthfully reflect and conform to objective reality; on the contrary, it reverses the relation between matter and consciousness, in which matter determines consciousness, while the latter derives from the former. It runs counter to objective law in its actions, and forces the objective to be subject to the blueprint of subjective imagination. Dogmatism ignores changes in time, place, and conditions, regards rules in books as being of the first importance, and demands that changed objective condtions match the rules brawn from other objective conditions and printed in books or documents. The result also runs counter to objective law, divorcing the subjective from the objective, which likewise reverses the relation between matter and consciousness. Therefore, Comrade Liu Shaoqi said: "Subjectivism and dogmatism are nothing but idealism!" (p 300) However, among the people, the contradictions between materialism and idealism and dogmatism are nonantagonistic, and should be solved on the basis of the principles of handling contradictions among the people.

The differing natures of contradictions must be clearly distinguished, and should not be confused. However, under certain conditions, the two categories of contradictions of differing nature may be mutually converted. It is necessary to fully underastand the characteristics, conditions, and development of contradictions, so that the conversion of contradictions may develop in the direction favorable to the socialist cause. As mentioned above. regarding the contradictions between the enemy and ourselves, we should chiefly adopt the measures of struggle and dictatorship for their solution, which is the basic principle. However, under specific conditions, some contradictions between ourselves and the enemy may be handled as contradiction among the people, in order to favor the development of the socialist cause and to narrow the targets of attack. That means that regarding the contradictions between ourselves and the enemy, the measures of coordination and reconciliation may also be adopted when needed. China's socialist practice has fully proved the correctness of this concept, but it has simultaneously proved that once the contradictions among the people are handled as contradictions between ourselves and the enemy, once attention is attached to struggle but not to unity, the results can be very grave.

Aiming at the new conditions and new problems emerging in society in 1957, when socialist transformation was basically completed in China, Comrade Liu Shaoqi promptly and profoundly analyzed the "manifestations in great number," and the "specific manifestations" of contradictions among the people, and pointed out that "contradictions among the people are at present manifesting themselves in great number between the people and the leaders. To put it more accurately, they are manifesting themselves in the contradictions between the bureaucratism in leadership and the people." (p 303) In his analysis, Comrade Liu Shaoqi went on to say that, generally speaking, in this contradiction, bureaucratism in leadership is often the principal aspect of the contradiction. Regarding the unhealthy phenomena in society, and the failure to promptly solve the rational demands of the people, leading members should always bear responsibility for them. If the leadership should ignore the rational demands of the people or the unhealthy phenomena in society, the contradictions between the people and the leadership will conspicuously manifest themselves. True, completing and perfecting the system is one aspect of appropriately solving these contradictions, but we should not make light of bureaucratism in leadership. If leading organs had refrained from committing bureaucratism, the contradictions between the leadership and the masses would never have become so tense, neither would some important political incidents have occurred. In addition, Comrade Liu Shaoqi also believed that the contradictions among the people manifested themselves particularly in problems of distribution, which had a bearing on the living standards of the people themselves, and of whether the leadership adhered to the socialist principle of material interests regarding the fruits of their labor. The distribution principle of socialist countries is distribution according to work, being fair and rational. Failure in implementing this principle would give rise to complaints by the masses, and all kinds of contradictions, when production development would be impeded.

Do political-legal organs purely handle contradictions between ourselves and the enemy, or do they also handle some contradictions among the people? That was also a new question put forth at that time. In his article "Political-Legal Work and Correctly Handling the Contradictions Among the People," Comrade Liu Shaoqi explicitly pointed out that "public security organs, the procuratorate, and the courts of justice are dictatorship organs of the enemy; but as regards the people, they become organs for handling contradictions among the people." (p 451) He required that "under the conditions of the proletarian dictatorship, the state is also an educational organ. It is not enough to rely on school education to educate the people in becoming communists. You are apparatuses of dictatorship, but simultaneously you will have to take up the task of educating the people and handling contradictions among the people." (p 452) The chief functions of dictatorship apparatuses of socialist countries are of course to deal with the enemy and to defend the socialist system. However, dealing with contradictions between ourselves and the enemy involves not simply suppression, but a huge volume of work in education and reformation; and great efforts should be devoted to doing a good job in the conversion of contradictions, so that convicts may be reformed into new men through labor, and negative factors may be changed into positive ones. This is on the one hand. [paragraph continues]

On the other, minor offences also exist in huge volume among the people, and the socialist legal system is the manifestation of the will of the working class and the people, used not only to deal with the enemy, but the more so to regulate economic, political, cultural, and social life among the people and to maintain social order and public security, as well as a political situation of stability and unity, so that work and production may be carried on normally. The political-legal organs should educate every one of the people to observe the socialist legal system; they should adhere to the principle that the law must be observed where it exists, and that those violating the law must be dealt with. Regarding illegal activities among the people, they should be solved according to the Constitution and legal procedures, and handled with the measures of education, criticism, and even the meting out of appropriate punishment. Regarding such contradictions in the daily lives of the people as family, marriage, and property problems, political-legal departments should also handle them impartially according to the law, in situations where no solutions can be found between people, in order that the contradictions among the people may be handled more appropriately.

Contradictions among the people are based on unanimity of basic interests, hence, diametrically opposed antagonism does not exist. Comrade Liu Shaoqi on several occasions mentioned that contradictions among the people could be solved by means of combination. That was also an original idea. For example, in socialist countries, differences (contradictions) exist between party and nonparty members, and between party organizations and trade union organizations, which can be solved through the measure of combination. As another example, differences also exist between the vanguard of the proletariat and the workers, as well as between their views and demands of the trade unions, because of the difference in their political consciousness. The method for eliminating such differences is to unify the requirements and targets of the workers and the communist party; the combination of their different demands and targets is the most fundamental and constant task for all communists and advanced workers in union work. (p 98) As still another example, differences also exist between the targets of the cooperatives organized by the peasants and those of the vanguard of the working class. In order to eliminate the differences between them, "the vanguard has the responsibility to constantly and appropriately combine the different demands of the two different sets of targets." (p 101) In socialist society, national, collective, and personal interests are as identical as they are contradictory, and we should closely combine the interests of the three. All this demonstrates that adopting the method of combination as a solution to social contradictions is also a new characteristic of the social contradictions in socialist society. But of course, as mentioned above, it does not mean that the combination referred to by Comrade Liu Shaoqi is free of struggle, as with unity.

To sum up, back in the early fifties, Comrade Liu Shaoqi had already put forth and explored the question of contradictions among the people. After the publication of Comrade Mao Zedong's article "On the Correct Handling of Contradictions Among the People," Comrade Liu Shaoqi carried out further study and discussions on the contradictions among the people from the angle of Comrade Mao Zedong's views on productive forces and production relations (economic base) and superstructure. These concepts are still of very real significance for our correct handling of the contradictions among the people today.

LI GUIXIAN SPEAKS ON UNITY AT ANHUI MEETING

OW190637 Hefei ANHUI RIBAO in Chinese 2 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpts] On the afternoon of 1 July, more than 170 highly respected retired members of the Red Army and retired veteran cadres happily attended a get-together at the Anhui Provincial CPPCC Committee auditorium. The meeting was held jointly by the Anhui Provincial CPC Committee and the Anhui provincial people's government for veteran cadres on the occasion of "1 July."

Responsible comrades of the party, government, and Army in the province, including Li Guixian, Wang Yuzhao, Wang Guangyu, Shi Junjie, and Zhang Linyuan, as well as responsible comrades of Hefei City, PLA units stationed in Anhui, and provincial departments concerned attended the meeting.

Filled with revolutionary sentiments, comrades attending the meeting exchanged greetings, talked, and laughed loudly, celebrating the 65th anniversary of the founding of the Communist Party of China in a victorious mood.

The meeting was presided over by Shi Junjie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee. Li Guixian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke at the meeting. [passage omitted]

Comrade Li Guixian said: Anhui has abundant natural resources and many talented people. It occupies an important position and can play an important role in building the four modernizations in our country. The party Central Committee places great hopes on the work in this province. We cannot do a good job in carrying out various tasks without the participation and support of veteran cadres. I earnestly hope that all veteran cadres offer plans and make contributions to revitalizing Anhui's economy and helping people get rich. We must strive to strengthen unity within the party and with other parties and nonparty personages, unity between new and veteran cadres, and unity of people of all nationalities. We should give full play to all positive factors, unite as one, and do our best to further improve and accelerate economic construction in this province. We should keep to the ideology and line of seeking truth from facts, further consolidate the political situation of unity and stability, and develop the excellent situation. We should always show concern for the people's living and hardships, strengthen contacts between the party and the people, and adopt effective measures to improve peoole's living, especially the livelihood of people in the old revolutionary base areas. We should help the people get rich as quickly as possible.

Comrade Li Guixian emphatically pointed out: The party Central Committee has always shown concern for veteran cadres and attached importance to their work. Party committees at various levels must follow the instructions of central leading comrades to respect veteran cadres and do a good job in our work related to veteran cadres. We should implement the "two treatments" [liang ge dai yu 0357 0020 1769 6657] for retired cadres, strive to take better care of veteran cadres, and fully develop their capabilities.

Following Comrade Li Guixian's speech, the provincial cultural departments provided colorful performances. A happy festival mood permeated the get-together from beginning to end.

SHENZHEN ANNOUNCES NAMELISTS FOR NEW LEADING BODIES

HK171446 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1328 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Report by Zhan Moujun: "Shenzhen City Reorganizes Its Party and Government Leading Bodies" — ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Shenzhen, 17 Jul (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- After reorganizing its party and government leading bodies, Shenzhen City announced their namelists yesterday.

The members of the reorganized leading body of the Shenzhen City CPC Committee include: Li Hao [2621 3493], secretary of the party committee; Qin Wenjun [4440 2429 7486] and Zhou Xiwu [0719 3305 5294], its deputy secretaries; Li Haidong [2621 3189 2639], Zou Erkang [6760 1422 1660], Wen Guiqing [2429 6311 3237], Huang Jiyou [7806 4949 0645], and Yu Dehai [5713 1795 3189], members of its Standing Committee.

The members of the reorganized leading bodies of the Shenzhen City people's government are Mayor Li Hao and Vice Mayors Zhou Xiwu, Zou Erkang, Li Guangzhen [2621 1639 6966], Li Chuanfang [2621 0278 5364], Zhu Yuening [2612 1878 1337], and Zhang Hongyi [1728 7703 5030].

Shenzhen's new party and government leading bodies have six new members. They are Qin Wenjun (previously director of Guangdong Provincial Policy Research Office), Li Haidong (previously vice chairman of Guangdong Provincial Economic Commission), Huang Jiyou (previously commissar of Shenzhen Garrison Command), Yu Dehai (previously deputy secretary of the Shekou Industrial Zone's party committee), Zhu Yening (previously deputy director of the State Council's Investigations and Survey Office [tiao yan shi -- 6148 4282 1358], and Zhang Hongyi (previously director of the Shenzhen branch of the Bank of China). These six persons are all graduate of institutions of higher learning and they are all quite young. For example, Zhang Hongyi, Zhu Yuening, and Li Haidong are about 41 or 42 years old. They have worked as leaders at central or provincial leadership organs or grass-roots units.

The average age of the 12 members of the reorganized party and government leading bodies is 50. Eight of them are graduates of institutions of higher learning.

Yesterday, in addition to announcing the formation of new party and government leading bodies, the formation of a group to make preparations for the Shenzhen City People's Congress was also announced. Zhou Ding [0719 7844], previously a deputy secretary of the Shenzhen City CPC Committee and a vice mayor, is the group's leader. His deputies are Luo Changren [5012 2490 0088], previously a vice mayor of Shenzhen, Zhen Xipei [3914 6932 1014], and Wu Xiaolan [0702 1420 5695].

GUANGDONG'S LIN RUO URGES OVERCOMING CALAMITY

HK171045 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] Yesterday, while inspecting the serious calamity caused by No 7 violent typhoon of this year in Mexican Prefecture, Guangdong Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Lin Ruo stressed: The disaster area must urgently mobilize, take vigorous measures to quickly crash-reap the inundated early rice and peanuts, and reduce losses as far as possible.

At the same time, it is necessary to seriously do well in grasping the crash-sowing of late rice and the arrangements for the victims of the diaster, to promptly repair and protect the embankments, to crash-repair water conservation facilities, including channels and dams, and to ensure that late rice production will not be affected.

Comrade Lin Ruo hoped that the cadres and masses of the diaster area will enhance their confidence of overcoming the calamity, carry forward the spirit of self-reliance and hard struggle, and rely on their own efforts to overcome the calamity. It is essential to draw experience and lesson from this; to be determined to do a good job in afforestation, greening, and water and soil conservation; and to improve the ecological environment. In doing so, we can reduce the natural calamity and ensure a bumper agricultural harvest.

HENAN CONTINUES DRIVE AGAINST ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK180625 Zhengzhou HENAN RIBAO in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 1

[Report by correspondents Gu Xiaoqian and Qin Youtang: "Provincial Procuratorial Departments Score Marked Achievements in Cracking Down on Economic Crimes"]

[Text] Since the beginning of this year, the procuratorial departments in our province have firmly grasped the work of cracking down on economic crimes and have made marked achievements in this respect. By the end of May, they had handled more than 2,200 economic cases of various kinds and retrieved an economic loss totalling more than 10 million yuan. In particular, they had handled a number of major and important cases, including more than 370 cases involving a sum of over 10,000 yuan.

Since January this year, the procuratorial departments in our province have adopted a series of powerful measures to push forward the struggle against economic crimes on the basis of the breakthrough made in the second half of last year. When handling cases, the leaders of the procuratorial organs at various levels went right to the front line and personally handled the major and important cases. While making an overall arrangement and taking all factors into consideration, they made the key points stand out. When there were obstructions in the course of handling cases, they personally removed the obstacles and solved the difficulties, ensuring the smooth handling of the cases. In Zhumadian Prefecture, since the branch offices there adopted the responsibility system for chief procurators to personally handle cases, some 60 new cases were placed on file for investigation and prosecution in the space of half a month from 20 April to 5 May, thus opening up a new prospect in this work.

While handling the cases, the procuratorial organs at all levels have also paid great attention to improving the work style of the cadres and policemen and their ability to handle cases. The procuratorate of Shangqiu County needed only 24 hours to crack a swinding case involving more than 100,000 yuan.

From 28 June to 3 July, the provincial procuratorial departments held a meeting in Shangqiu County to exchange experiences. Zhang Siqing, deputy procurator-general of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, and Song Zhaosu, a member of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and secretary of the provincial Political and Legal Committee, attended the meeting. The meeting decided to give a first-class merit citation to the Shangqiu County Procuratorate and to the Longting District Procuratorate in Kaifeng City, and give a second-class merit citation to the Zhengzhou City Procurate and other units.

BEIJING AIR FORCE GUIDES PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW180357 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0802 GMT 17 Jul 86

[By reporter Cai Shanwu]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Jul (XINHUA) - Xu Lefu, party secretary and political commissar of the Air Force under the Beijing Military Region, went down among units on nine occasions to guide party rectification. The Air Force Party Rectification Office recently circulated his solid experience and meticulous work in guiding party rectification.

In April last year, after having completed the party rectification task in the Air Force party committee and organs, the Beijing Military Region began party rectification in corps, division, regiment, battalion, and in units below battalion level. It is now a year later. Xu Lefu, who is responsible for the work, explained party rectification in the whole military region in two words; the first being "solidness," meaning proceeding from reality and stressing practical results; the second being "strictness," meaning strict checking during party rectification to guarantee quality. On nine occasions, he went down among units and personally presided over discussion/meetings, hearing suggestions from party members and the masses. He also took part in checking-and-examination meetings attended by the main leading members of lower-level party committees, where problems were speedily solved. [passage omitted]

Since last year, Xu Lefu has had many heart-to-heart talks with 100 leading cadres and party members during his visits to units to guide party rectification. In accordance with the special characteristics of each person, he did a lot of meticulous ideological work with many people.

His direct style has won him the initiative in guiding party rectification in his subordinate units. Experiences from party rectification, gathered by him or by organs' cadres at his prompting, were promptly promoted. As these experiences came from practice, they were instrumental in he Beijing Military Region's Air Force party committee for correctly guiding troops' party rectification work.

NI ZHIFU AT TIANJIN ROAD OPENING CEREMONY

SK170156 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 2 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpts] Yesterday, when the people were happily celebrating the 65th anniversary of the founding of the party, the central ring road was decorated with fluttering colorful flags. The beating of gongs and drums resounded to the skies, At 0900, Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, cut the red silk ribbon on the Zhongshanmen overpass. Ten thousand pigeons and 1,000 colored balloons soared into the sky to declare the completion of the 34.5 5-km ling central ring road and its opening to traffic. The main artery of communications of Tianjin Municipality began to beat.

The ceremony to mark the opening of the central ring road to traffic was presided over by Zhang Zaiwang, chairman of the municipal People's Congress Standing Committee. Major Li Ruihuan gave a speech. He called on all fronts and all units throughout the municipality to emulate the spirit of the central ring road builders of bringing benefit to mankind, to study the experiences gained in building the central ring road, to overcome difficulties in the road of advance, and to promote the development of all fields of work.

Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the National CPPCC Committee; Ma Yuhuai, adviser to the Ministry of Forestry Industry; He Haoju, chairman of the Sichuan Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; and Zhang Junqiu, a well-known Beijing opera performer, also attended the ceremony and toured the full length of the central ring road.

Also attending were Wu Zhen, Nie Bichu, Yan Dakai, Chen Bing, Yang Jingheng, Wang Shudong, Ji Zenghui, He Guomo, Chen Yiyi, Zheng Guozhong, Bai Hualing, Li Huifen, Zhang Lichang, Wang Peiren, Bai Hua, Li Zhongyuan, Zhao Jun, Liu Zenghkun, Xu Ming, Yang Jianbai, Fan Quan, Han Tianya, Yu Fujing, Shi Jian, Yao Jun, Liu Jinfeng, Li Changxing, Mao Changwu, Xiao Yuan, Zhou Ru, Huang Yusheng, Yu Songting, Chen Ruyu, Liao Canhui, Zheng Wantong, Huang Yanzhi, Cao Zhongnan, Wang Enhui, Lu Da, Li Shusen, Wu Zhen, and Tan Songping [passage omitted]

Prior to the ceremony, leading municipal leaders met with the personnel who had rendered meritorious service on the construction of the central ring road and posed for a group photo with them.

TIANJIN CADRES ATTEND LECTURE ON CIVIL LAW

SK210515 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 9 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] The 4-month legal knowledge popularization study class for leading Tianjin municipal cadres held its ninth lecture on the law of civil procedures yesterday. Up to that lecture, the scheduled course of the legal knowledge popularization study class has been completed. A review of the lectures began.

Attending yesterday's study class were more than 200 persons, including Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, Nie Bichu, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, Zhang Zaiwang, chairman of the municipal People's Congress Standing Committee, and Yang Jingheng, Wang Shudong, Chen Yiyi, Zhang Dinghua, Bai Hua, Liu Zengkun, Xu Ming, Yang Jinabai, Han Tianya, Yu Songting, Liao Canhui, and Zheng Wantong, as well as responsible comrades of various municipal departments, commissions and offices.

This legal knowledge popularization study class for leading municipal cadres began on 11 March and presented lectures on "basic theories on the science of law," the "Constitution," the "marriage law," the "general principles of civil code," the "economic contract law," the "criminal," the "law on criminal procedures," and the "inheritance law."

Comrade Ni Zhifu came to class early yesterday morning. He listened to the teacher's lecture conscientiously. During the class intermission, he exchanged his study experience with the comrades around him and talked with them about how to strengthen the building of the legal system in Tianjin Municipality.

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ATTENDS LOCAL ARMY CONGRESS

SK200650 Harbin HEILGONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpts] On 5 July at the sixth party congress of locally stationed PLA units, Political Commissar Dong Yisheng stressed in his work report the issues of furthering the activities to promote the socialist spiritual civilization cooperatively by the armymen and the civilians, and greatly strengthening the unity between the Army and the government, and between the Army and the people. [passage omitted]

Representatives to the congress reviewed their achievements but did not feel satisfied. They were determined to continuously promote those activities focusing on improving social conduct during the Seventh 5-year Plan period. They also put forward a new fighting goal: to establish and improve an initial network of civilized cities and towns composed of eight cities and eight counties (towns) and centering on Harbin by 1990, and to strive to create more civilized units together with civilians. In the first 2 years, 65 percent of the total targeted number of civilized units should be completed, and in the latter 3 years, 80 percent should be completed. In particular, new developments should be achieved in the experiences of a certain PLA unit stationed in Jiamusi in building civilized units together with civilians; in those of a certian PLA unit stationed in Daqin in promoting its own spiritual civilization units; and in those of a certain PLA unit stationed in Qiqihar in cooperating with individual business households to promote the spiritual civilization. In 5 years, more than 2 million work days should be devoted to local construction, averaging more than 400,000 work days a year. In addition, manpower should be concentrated every year on one or two large-scale construction projects which need more than 100,000 work days each.

Sun Weiben, secretary, and Li Genshen, Liu Chengguo, and Zhou Wenhua, deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee; and He Shoulun, deputy governor; attended the congress. Sun Weiben spoke. He highly praised the units for their achievements in party building, military and political training, and the activities to build civilized units cooperatively with civilians, and urged the masses of commanders and fighters to make unremitting efforts to win greater honor.

HEILONGJIANG REVIEWS COUNTY PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK200316 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO In Chinese 8 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpt] Our province has achieved notable results in county-level party rectification, with party members enhancing their party spirit, party style being corrected, and party discipline safeguarded. The party rectification has facilitated reform and economic construction.

At present, the county-level party rectification of our province is drawing to an end. As soon as the party rectification began, all units emphatically paid attention to enhancing party spirit and correcting party style with the purpose of fulfilling the four basic tasks for party rectification. In view of the problems that some party members were listless, did not hold fast the purpose of serving the people, and had little respect of organization, all localities emphatically coducted education on ideals, the purpose of the party, and discipline, and exerted more efforts to enhance the political consciousness of party members, thus further unifying their understanding of the party's line, principles and policies, enhancing their confidence in reform, eliminating the idea of "doing everything for money's sake" and other wrong ideas, and enabling them to foster a firm communist belief and the idea of serving the people wholeheartedly. More and more people strove to become fine party members and exemplary cadres. The county-level party rectification units throughout the province named and commended 2,865 fine party members.

Focusing on the key link of correcting party style, all localities made sure that mistakes were redressed in the course of party rectification, and a great number of problems of party-member cadres who abused power for selfish gains, about which the massess had many complaints, were solved. For example, unwarranted bonuses and "small red envelopes" were returned; public funds used for extravagant wining and dining and the money given as gifts were paid back; discipline violation in housing construction, purchasing and marketing, and job arrangements for one's children, relatives and friends in violation of policies were examined and corrected; and embezzled money, bribes, and overdue public funds were also paid back.

With regard to serious cases involving power abuse for selfish gains and law and discipline violation, which were exposed during party rectification, all localities conscientiously investigated and handled them through such measures as placing the cases on file at different levels and assigning competent departments to handle them, with their leaders assuming the responsibility, and organizing specialized personnel to conduct investigations. Party and administrative discipline was taken against a group of party members who had violated discipline. Party members who were totally unqualified or basically unqualified were not allowed to register or had their registration postponed, thus ensuring the purity and exemplariness of party organizations. When investigating and handling cases, all localities also handled some typical cases publicly, thus enabling party members to receive a profound eduction on party spirit, party style and party discipline. [passage omitted]

HEILONGJIANG SECRETARY ON RECTIFYING PARTY STYLE

SK190254 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] The provincial meeting to exchange experiences in correcting party style, with the participation of the top leaders of prefectures, cities and provincial-level units, concluded today. It called for efforts to conscientiously strengthen leadership and persisently maintain the situation in which the whole party attends to party style.

Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, summed up the work to correct party style done by the province in the first half of the year. He said: In the first half of this year, party organizations at all levels throughout the province placed the correction of party style high on their agenda. Playing an exemplary role, leading organs and leading cadres actively enforced the responsibility system and started with the investigation and handling of cases to correct party style. They did a great deal of work and achieved marked results in rectifying party style and correcting unhealthy trends.

Speaking on the tasks for correcting party style to be carried out in the latter half of this year, Sun Weiben pointed out: Correcting party style is both an urgent and an arduous long-term task. Party organizations at all levels should continue to grasp it firmly and carry it out persistently. After consolidating the achievements that the whole party scored in correcting party style in the first half of this year, we should correctly understand and handle the relationship between rectifying party style and carrying out reform in the latter half of the year. We should correct unhealthy trends in all fields with the focus on correcting the unhealthy trends of various trades.

We should thoroughly solve the problems in ideology and work styles, and the problems of individualism, bureaucracy and liberalism, and strive to eliminate practically all the six unhealthy trends pointed out by the central authorities by the end of August without leaving any one unchecked. We should eliminate practically all the unhealthy trends about which the masses have the greatest complaints by the end of this year so that the regular practice of all trades can be improved notably.

While eliminating unhealthy trends with great efforts, we should actively foster healthy trends, commend the advanced, conduct education on the purpose of the party, ideals, discipline and professional ethics, and launch various activities to render civilized and top-quality service. We should consolidate and develop the achievements in party rectification. Following the deepening of the work to correct party style, leading organs and leading cadres should continue to play their exemplary role, take more initiative in examining and redressing their own problems, and develop healthy trends and remain uncorrupted. Leading organs and leading bodies should make public all the rules and regulations they have formulated to redress all the existing problems, and subject themselves to the supervision of the masses.

In correcting party style, party committees at all levels should pay attention to the major areas and typical cases. All prefectures, cities, and units hould also give different guidance according to different local characteristics. They should help to push forward the work of the units which have done a poor job in fundamentally improving party style. With regard to the units which have serious problems, they should treat them seriously, investigate and affix the responsibility of their leading persons, and interrogate some persons whose cases are typical.

Comrade Sun Weiben also pointed out that it is necessary to continue the investigation and handling of major and appalling cases with firm efforts to thoroughly investigate and conclude by the end of September all the cases that had been placed on file by the end of June this year, and to conclude by the end of this year most of the cases that have been placed on file by the end of September. In addition, it has called for efforts to conduct education on party spirit, party style and party discipline in a systematic manner at regular intervals. This year emphasis should be placed on enabling party members to restudy the party Constitution and the guiding principles for inner-Party political life while correcting party style so that they can cultivate the habit of taking the initiative in acting according to the party Constitution and the guiding principles. We should straighten out discipline, personnel discipline in particular, and conscientiously correct unhealthy trends in employment. We should also continue to improve the work style of offices to raise work efficiency.

Sun Weiben concluded: The tasks for rectifying party style for the latter half of this year are very arduous. However, as long as concerted efforts are exerted by the whole party, the goal to bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party style will be attained on schedule.

Hou Jie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, also spoke today to summarize the meeting. Participants to the meeting discussed Comrade Sun Weiben's speech. Zhou Wenhua, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, put forward specific opinions on how provincial organs should implement the guidelines of this meeting. (Zhao Da), director of the party rectification office of the provincial CPC Committee, worked out plans for the province's party rectification for the latter half of this year.

Attending were leading comrades of the six provincial-level bodies, including Li Genshen and Liu Chengguo, deputy secretaries of the provincial CPC Committee; Chen Lei, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission; Li Jianbai, chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Wang Zhao, chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee, and Wang Fei, secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission. Also attending were some retired cadres at and above the deputy chief level of provincial organs, including Zhao Dezun and Wang Yilun.

HEILONGJIANG COMMENTARY ON CORRECTING PARTY STYLE

SK190457 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Station commentary: "Grasp Party Style To Promote Reform"]

[Text] In rectifying party style, we should properly handle its relationship with reform, and grasp party style to promote reform. Rectifying party style and carrying out reform successfully are two tasks which supplement each other and should be carried out simultaneously. A success in the former will create a good social environment for the latter, and ensure its smooth progress along the socialist orientation. However, in carrying out their day-to-day work, some comrades have not clarified the relationship between rectifying party style and reform, holding that the former will inevitably affect the latter, putting the former against the latter, or thinking that they are two different things without any relations. Such ideas are wrong.

To correctly handle the relationship between rectifying party style and reform, we should investigate and study new situation, and solve new problems. We should neither overestimate the seriousness of unhealthy trends and resort to malpractices to correct them, nor should we lose the courage to correct the unhealthy trends, discipline violations, and criminal cases that we should correct and investigate whenever we hear some gossip or rumors. We should not be too surprised at the mistakes committed during the explorations for reform, and take the road back, nor should we be influenced by the people who, flaunting the banner of supporting and protecting reform, plead for lawbreakers and criminals. With regard to those who take advantage of the loopholes in reform to violate law and discipline, we must never make their mistakes sound less serious, and then never reduce them to nothing at all. In short, we should seek truth from facts, and concientiously draw a clear demarcation line between reform to enliven the economy and unhealthy trends, and between the explorations and creations made in reform and law and discipline violations. We should support the comrades engaging in reform, and help them eliminate misgivings and difficulties. With regard to those who take advantage of the loopholes in reform to indulge in unhealthy trends, violate law and discipline, and undermine reform, and those who frame others, we should resolutely investigate and strictly punish them so that the correction of party style and reform can proceed smoothly.

GANSU LEADERS MEET YUNNAN FRONTLINE DEPENDENTS

HK210215 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Leading comrades of Gansu Province and Lanzhou Military Region, including Li Ziqi, Jia Zhijie, Lu Kejian, and Ma Weizhi, cordially met on 19 July with the participants in a forum of Gansu dependents of PLA personnel at the Laoshan front in Yunnan. Li Ziqi expressed the hope that the representatives would promptly raise any problem they needed solved, so as to attract the leaders' attention and improve the work of supporting the Army and giving preferential treatment to its dependents. Thus the fighters can enjoy ease of mind in the frontline and shoulder still better the task of guarding the motherland. [passage omitted]

XINJIANG RADIO URGES RURAL CADRES TO REPAY LOANS

HK161055 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Station "Short Commentary": "Rural Cadres Must Take the Lead in Repaying Loans"]

[Text] Over the past few years, many peasants in some areas of the region have borrowed money from and owe money to others, and delaying repayment of loans has become a common practice. The region's rural collective bank savings reached more than 200 million yuan several years ago, but have fallen to just over 100 million yuan now. Most of this money was borrowed by individuals who have delayed repayment again and again. In some areas, peasants' income has increased due to rapid development of agricultural production, but more and more peasants have borrowed money from others.

How is it that more and more peasants have borrowed money from and owed money to collectives under the increasingly favorable economic situation in rural areas? One of the main reasons is that some rural cadres and peasants have a poor understanding of consolidating and developing rural cooperative economy. In particular, some rural cadres failed to set a good example themselves and refused to abide by financial and accounting rules and regulations. They borrowed money from collective bank savings and some of them refused to repay the loans for a long time. Influenced by their example, some peasants also borrowed money from collectives even though they themselves had enough money to use. Seeing that cadres have refused to repay their loans, the peasants are also prepared to delay repayment of their loans for a long time.

To protect the immediate and long-term interests of peasants, all rural areas must grasp the work of recovering loans. Above all, rural cadres must take the lead in repaying loans. The experience of (Qiata) village in (Jinma) township, Zepu County has proved that provided that rural cadres at all levels adhere to financial and accounting rules and regulations, and take the lead in repaying loans, it will not be difficult to properly carry out the work of repaying all collective loans in rural areas.

VISIT BY U.S. PHYSICIST WHO VISITED PRC APPROVED

HK210951 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 0946 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 18 Jul (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- The latest issue of Taiwan's SHIH PAO HSIN WEN CHOU KAN [CHINA TIMES NEWS WEEKLY] reveals the inside story of C.N. Yang's visit to Taiwan in the immediate future.

The article entitled "Inside Story of C.N. Yang's Return" says that Yang's visit to Taiwan at the end of July has widely attracted the attention of the Taiwan Government and various units concerned. Education Minister Li Huan and Director of the State Scientific Commission Chen Lu-an are the two key figures who have enabled Yang to visit Taiwan. Noted American physicist and Nobel Prize winner C.N. Yang was invited by Taiwan's Central Research Institute in 1958 to be a member of the institute. Due to the fact that he visited the mainland on several occasions, he became a "sensitive figure" in the eyes of some units concerned. After that, Taiwan's Central Research Institute regarded C.N. Yang as a "person who refused to have any contacts" because he "failed to take part in the activities of the research institute for 6 years running." Yang would "no longer be invited." Therefore, although Yang still has the honored title of member of Taiwan's Central Research Institute, he has never attended any meetings of members of the institute. Recently, the Hong Kong press reported that Dr C.N. Yang intended to visit Taiwan in September to congratulate Wu Tayu on his 80th birthday. Yu was his teacher and is director of Taiwan's Central Research Institute. In the meantime, he would visit Taiwan later this month to attend a meeting of the members of the Central Research Institute.

As revealed by SHIH PAO HSIN WEN CHOU KAN, the visit "was through Li Huan and Chen Lu-an, who reported to president of the executive Yuan Yu Kuo-hua and secretary of the KMT central headquarters Ma Shu-li and units responsible for security. They unanimously consented to the visit."

The Taiwan authorities have changed their rigid policy toward those who have visited the mainland. There is no doubt that it will be widely welcomed by the public.

PREMIER URGES PRIVATE SECTOR DEFENSE COOPERATION

OW220335 Taipei CNA in English 0247 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Taipei, July 21 (CNA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hwa said Monday that military authorities will transfer newly developed defense technologies that need not be classified to the private sector for commercial use. The government will also encourage civilian manufacturers to actively join in the production of defensive military equipment, the premier said.

Speaking at a session of the ongoing National Development Seminar, Yu said that the government will see to it in the future that the defense industry maintains close ties with private industries. He pointed out that the development of defense technologies requires huge outlays and that the military applications of these technologies are limited. To make good use of such research results, Yu said, the government has thus decided to transfer such knowhow to private industries.

Some Overseas Chinese scholars who have come to attend the seminar suggested that the government give priority to the development of electro-optics since it is closely related to national defense.

CONTROVERSY OVER DAYA BAY PLANT CONTINUES

PRC Attitude Discussed

HK210953 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 19 Jul 86 p 1

["New Talk" column: "News Items About the Daya Bay Nuclear Plant"]

[Text] New messages on the Daya Bay nuclear power plant came from both Beijing and Hong Kong yesterday.

A REUTER Beijing correspondent reported three points mentioned in Western diplomatic circles. First, the Chinese authorities are very concerned about the opposition voiced by many Hong Kong people on building a nuclear power plant at Daya Bay. Second, Vice Premier Li Peng met respectively with British and French ambassadors this week. Third, these diplomatic sources refused to disclose the contents of Li Peng's conversation but indicated that they had never heard of any policy changes on the part of China on the Daya Bay nuclear power plant.

Li Peng met the British ambassador on 14 July (Monday) and the French ambassador the next day (Tuesday). It is not known which side initiated the meetings but the reasons are understandable. The Daya Bay nuclear power plant is scheduled to use French nuclear reactors and British generators. The success or failure of the power plant is closely related to the two countries.

Wester diplomatic circles did not quote Li Peng's remraks at the meetings but explicitly pointed out that the building of the nuclear plant would be conducted according to the original plan. People can also find some indications from other sources.

China announced the day before yesterday that the State Council had approved the promulgation and implementation of the four safety regulations on the building of nuclear power plants, namely, the choice of site, design, operation, and quality control, setting strict requirements for the safety of nuclear power plants in four different aspects. The national regulations will govern the building of nuclear plants in various parts of the country in the future. Obviously, quality control at the Daya Bay nuclear power plant is subject to the four regulations.

In an interview with reporters this week, (Gu Hua Nian), nuclear industry councillor at the French Embassy in China, indicatedf that it would be impossible for the Guangdong's Daya Bay nuclear power plant, which is supplied and designed by France, to release radioactivity as the Chernobyl nuclear power plant did, because it has advanced equipment and will adopt many strict safety measures and because its safety coefficient reaches 100 percent.

He also cited the safety record of the existing French nuclear power plants as an example. There are now 47 nuclear power plants in France using pressurized water reactors and some are scores of kilometers away from Paris, Lyon, and Orleans. So far all these nuclear plants have been operating safely.

In Hong Kong, in answering a reporter's question while inspecting the Central and Western District on Thursday, Acting Governor Akers-Jones stressed: "We have indeed made our commitment and the consequences will be very serious if we withdraw, or even suggest withdrawing, from the commitment."

All these indications and all the messages received from various quarters show that the project will be conducted as normal and that there will not be any changes. In a concluding speech in the Legislative Council recess debate, Financial Secretary Piers Jacobs also said it seemed unnecessary to propose that the signing of the contract would be postponed.

It was rumored not long ago in Hong Kong that at a meeting with a certain personage Deng Xiaoping said that China would reconsider the question of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant. According to a report by a REUTER Hong Kong correspondent yesterday, a local "senior Chinese source" has clarified this issue. He said: Deng Xiaoping has never made any remarks which signify that Beijing will reconsider the question of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant.

Many people pointed out that, due to the lack of energy resources in the world, nuclear power plants have become the orientation for future development. Nuclear power accounts for 60 percent of the total electricity production in France and 30 percent in the United States. It is reported in the press today that the advisory commission of the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry has proposed the building of another 122 nuclear power plants so that Japan will become a nuclear power giant in 44 years time. Japan has only four islands but a dense population. It is frequently struck by typhoons and strong earthquakes. In spite of this, Japan has drawn up such a plan. We can thus see that nuclear power is not completely without a guarantee of safety. Taken as a whole, China is still backward in science and technology, but its individual advanced departmentes have reached and even surpassed the advanced world level.

There are only two methods of solving the problem. One is to achieve a balance at the lower level by calling everything off; another is to achieve a balance at the higher level removing the contradiction. On the question of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant, the Beijing authorities have obviously opted for the latter -- respecting science and popular will, showing concern for Hong Kong, and adopting all effective measures to ensure safety. This is a scientific and technological issue. It will not bring any good to develop it into a political one.

Petition Group To Visit Beijing

HK210402 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 21 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] Leaders of the joint pressure group lobbying against nuclear energy yesterday set aside their differences and decided to send a petition team to Beijing.

Representatives of the team will take with them signatures of more than one million Hong Kong people who say "no" to the Daya Bay nuclear project.

A spokesman for the Joint Conference for the Shelving of the Daya Bay Nuclear Plant, Mr Hui Ching-hon, said the team will meet officials of the New China News Agency in the next few days to arrange details of the trip.

Group leaders were previously split on whether to go north to lobby for their cause.

Some feared that the Beijing trip would annoy the Chinese Government and harm China-Hong Kong relations.

The joint conference comprises more than 100 labour, environmental, educational and religious organisations.

Campaigners are continuing their territory-wide signature campaign and have not set a closing day.

Commenting on the 1.02 million signatures collected, Mr Hui said he believed that the problem of duplicated signatures is minimal.

However, the campaigners have no intention of finding out the size of the problem because of limited resources.

"I believed only a few have put their names twice on our list," he said.

Meanwhile, Legislative Councillor Mr Szeto Wah said the public opinion survey commissioned by the SUNDAY MORNING POST, which revealed that 72 per cent of the public were against the Daya Bay project, confirmed Hong Kong people's worries over the issue are genuine and overwhelming.

The survey also found that despite the Government's conviction that pressure groups were behind the anti-nuclear campaign, only nine per cent of the public support this view.

Commenting on this, Mr Szeto said: "Based on my long experience in campaign work, pressure groups can never mobilise people for any course if the public do not really think what they are doing iscorrect and justified."

But another Legislative council member, Mr Ho Saichu, expressed reservation on the findings.

He said that since most people interviewed had complained about the lack of information over the nuclear plant, it was premature for them to have concluded that the project should be scrapped.

CHINA BUILDS 13 EXPORT SHIPS IN FIRST HALF OF YEAR

HK180811 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1053 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Excerpt] Hong Kong, 17 Jul (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- It is learned from Beijing that in the first half of this year China State Shipbuilding Corporation undertook contracts to build a total of 13 vessels (totaling over 240,000 tons) for export use, involving over $100 million. The number of vessels, tonnage and amount of money are all equal to the total volume of business in the whole of last year.

It is disclosed that China's shipbuilding industry has begun to gain publicity in the international biddings. The contract for building a 118,000-ton tanker secured by the Dalian Shipbuilding Factory and the contract for building a 18,200 cargo ship secured by the Jinan Shipbuilding Factory were won after beating all the big bidders in the international auctions attended by numerous businessmen. [passage omitted]

DAILY REPORT

China

Vol I No 141 23 July 1986

PRC INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL

Foreign Ministry Holds Weekly News Briefing A 1
    British Journalist Expelled A 1
    Aid to Indian Rebels Denied A 1
    Belgian Prince To Visit in August A 2
PRC Representative Urges Banning Space Weapons A 2

UNITED STATES

N.Y. TIMES Chief Meets With Official on Reporter [AFP] B 1
    Correspondent Expelled B 1
Speech of U.S. Ambassador on Sino-U.S. Trade [GUOJI SHANGBAO 14 Jul] B 2
Reagan Rules Out Sanctions Against South Africa B 3
Reagan Announcement To Abandon SALT II Viewed [SHIJIE ZHISHI 1 Jul] B 5
LIAOWANG Views Development of 'Reaganism' [OVERSEAS EDITION 14 Jul] B 7
XINHUA Analyzes U.S. Economic Performance B 10
PRC Body, Hawaii University Sign Agreement B 11

NORTHEAST ASIA

DPRK Envoy to PRC Denounces U.S., ROK Stand on Talks D 1
Kim Il-song Denounces U.S., ROK Stand on Proposal D 1
U.S. 'Spy Plane' Intrudes Into Korean Airspace D 1
Liaoning Secretary Receives DPRK Delegation [LIAONING RIBAO 7 Jul] D 2
DPRK Official Receives Jilin, Liaoning Groups D 2
Pyongyang Students Rally Against Nuclear War D 3
Japan-USSR Agreement Reached on Grave Visits D 3

SOUTH ASIA

Sino-Indian Talks End With Little Progress F 1
    Wan Li Cautions Patience F 1

WESTERN EUROPE

Zhao Ziyang Finishes European Phase of Trip G 1
    Meets PRC Officials in Istanbul G 1
    Ends Turkish Visit G 1
PRC, UK Sign Document on Grants, Soft Loan G 2
PRC-UK Liaison Group Meets in London 22 Jul G 2
Quan Shuren-Led Delegation Returns From FGR, UK [LIAONING RIBAO 7 Jul] G 2

MIDDLE EAST & AFRICA

Zhao Ziyang Arrives in Tunisia for Visit I 1
 Makes Statement at Airport I 1
Ties With Tunisia Reviewed on Eve of Zhao Visit I 2
PRC, Lebanese Foreign Ministry Officials Meet I 3
PRC, Kuwait To Cooperate in Desert Control I 3

PRC NATIONAL AFFAIRS

LIAOWANG Views Political Reform Seminar [21 Jul] K 1
GUANGMING RIBAO on Political Structural Reform [14 Jul] K 4
Wang Ruoshui Article on Marxist Philosophy [WEN HUI BAO 17 Jul] K 7
Concepts Change Due to Opening Up, Reform [RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION 22 Jul] K 14
GUANGMING RIBAO Article on Communist Ideals [11 Jul] K 15
Deputy Minister Speaks on Cultural Reform [WEN HUI BAO 17 Jul] K 17
Distribution of Videotapes Closely Controlled K 18
Deng Pufang at Beijing Station Ceremony K 18
Rural Supply, Marketing Cooperatives Develop [RENMIN RIBAO 17 Jul] K 19
 Commentator's Article [RENMIN RIBAO 17 Jul] K 19
RENMIN RIBAO on Reconstruction of Tangshan [17 Jul] K 21
RENMIN RIBAO Urges More Technology Imports [13 Jul] K 22
NONGMIN RIBAO Urges Increasing Peasant Incomes [11 Jul] K 25
NONGMIN RIBAO Stresses Importance of Agriculture [12 Jul] K 26
Correction to Leaders Discuss Bureaucratic Work Style K 28

PRC REGIONAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHWEST REGION

Guizhou Holds Meeting on Assisting Poor Areas Q 1
Sichuan's Nie Ronggui on Party Rectification Q 1
Xizang Leaders Stress Education for Progress Q 2
Xizang Holds Party School Work Conference Q 2

NORTH REGION

Tianjin's Ni Zhifu Speaks at Commendation Rally [TIANJIN RIBAO 1 Jul] R 1
Tianjin PLA Cadres Study Marxist Theories R 5

NORTHEAST REGION

Sun Weiben Hails Heilongjiang Land Reclamation S 1
Central Leaders Condole on Liaoning Official's Death [LIAONING RIBAO 4 Jul] S 2
Correction to Liaoning Completes Armed Forces Transfer S 3

TAIWAN

Taiwan Will Continue Ban on Communist Visitors V 1
Liberalization Will Narrow Trade Gap With U.S. V 1

HONG KONG MEDIA ON CHINA

Hong Kong Paper on 'Exodus' from Shenzhen W 1
[HONG KONG STANDARD 21 Jul]
ZHONGUO TONGXUN SHE Comments on CPC Political Reform W 2
Panel Recommends Direct Elections Before 1991 W 3
[SUNDAY STANDARD 20 Jul]
Journalist Expelled by PRC Arrives Kai Tak W 4
Hong Kong-EEC Talks End in Stalemate W 5
[SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST 20 Jul]
Renminbi Devaluation To Affect Daya Bay Profits W 6
[SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 23 Jul]

FOREIGN MINISTRY HOLDS WEEKLY NEWS BRIEFING

British Journalist Expelled

OW230954 Beijing XINHUA in English 0945 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today the explusion of a foreign correspondent from China was in conformity with the agreement between China and the United Kingdom on the establishment of a British Consulate-General at Shanghai and a Chinese Consulate-General at Manchester.

John F. Burns, resident correspondent for THE NEW YORK TIMES in Beijing, was expelled from China today for violating Chinese law and engaging in activities incompatible with his status as a journalist by deliberately intruding into Chinese areas closed to aliens. Burns holds a British passport.

Asked if the detention of Burns had been in accordance with the agreement between China and Britain, the spokesman briefed the press on the relevant content of the agreement here this afternoon at the weekly news briefing.

He quoted the relevant articles of the agreement between the governments of China and the United Kingdom on the establishment of a British Consulate-General at Shanghai and a Chinese Consulate-General at Manchester: "If a national of the sending state is arrested, committed to prison or detained in any other manner in the consular district, the competent authorities of the receiving state shall notify the consular post of the sending state to that effect as soon as possible and at the latest within seven days from the time at which the personal freedom of that national is restricted."

The agreement continues, "A visit to that national as requested by consular officers shall be arranged by the competent authorities of the receiving state two days after the consular post is notified of the restriction of the personal freedom of that national. Subsequent visits shall be permitted at intervals not exceeding one month."

The spokesman said Burns violated Chinese law and the Chinese department concerned handled the case by strickly following the relevant law.

Asked if the Chinese Foreign Ministry would accept a new correspondent from THE NEW YORK TIMES, he said, as it was Burns who violated Chinese law, so the responsibility only rests with Burns. "We don't consider the person who violated the law and the newspaper to be equally to blame and I don't think the incident will affect the relations between the newspaper and the Chinese department concerned."

If THE NEW YORK TIMES is interested in sending another correpsondent to Beijing, he said, it can send an application to the department concerned through the normal channels.

Aid to Indian Rebels Denied

OW230840 Beijing XINHUA in English 0836 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman today refuted a report by the Press Trust of India (PTI) that China is suppling weapons to the Naga rebels as "completely untrue."

In response to a question at a weekly news briefing, the spokesman said there are always some people in India who do not like to see China and India on friendly terms, concocting various kinds of rumors in an attempt to undermine Sino-Indian relations.

It is obviously with ulterior motives that the PTI has made such an unfounded report when the seventh round of talks between the Chinese and Indian officials is being held in Beijing, the spokesman said.

Belgian Prince To Visit in August

OW230921 Beijing XINHUA in English 0743 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) -- At the invitation of the Chinese Government, His Highness Prince Philippe of Belgium will come to China next month for an informal visit, a Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman announced at a weekly news briefing here today.

PRC REPRESENTATIVE URGES BANNING SPACE WEAPONS

OW221434 Beijing XINHUA in English 1418 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Geneva, July 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese representative Fan Guoxiang today called for reaching new international agreements on the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

At the summer session of the United Nations Geneva Conference on Disarmament, Fan said, "It is a cause of deep concern thatr the advanced space technology in the hands of the major space powers has been used to pursue their arms race and to strive for military preponderance."

"The major space powers' efforts to use outer space for military activities will lead to further escalation of the arms race and thus pose a greater threat to world peace," he said.

He said such activities include launching military satellites, buildup of a military satellite system, searching for anti-satellite technologies and developing more sophisticated space weapons capable of destroying nuclear missiles by the two superpowers.

"The development of space weapons has caused great anxiety and concern throughout the international community," he stressed.

Although current international agreements "reaffirmed the exclusively peaceful uses of outer space," they are "inadequate" because they contain no provisions explicitly banning the arms race, military activities or weapons in outer space, Fan said.

Fan also appealed to both Washington and Moscow to "engage in earnest negotiations for the speedy conclusion of an agreement without prejudice to the interests of other states."

The 40-nation Conference on Disarmament meets annually, holding sessions in the spring and summer.

N.Y. TIMES CHIEF MEETS WITH OFFICIAL ON REPORTER

HK221022 Hong Kong AFP in English 0905 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 22 (AFP) — NEW YORK TIMES editor E.M. Rosenthal met with a Chinese Foreign Ministry official here Tuesday to seek the release of his paper's Beijing correspondent, who is being held on suspicion of engaging in intelligence activities.

During a 30-minute meeting with Li Zhaoxing, deputy director of the Ministry's Information Department, Mr Rosenthal said that detention of correspondent John Burns had already begun to damage China's image abroad, NEW YORK TIMES foreign news editor Warren Hoge said.

Mr Li replied that Mr Burn's detention reflected the fact that China was a law-abiding country, adding that people abroad would certainly not criticize China for insisting that people living here abide by Chinese law, Mr Hoge said.

Meanwhile, Burns family friend said Mr Burns' wife, Jane Scott-Long, had been told by Chinese officials that no further visits were planned at present and that she should call back in "two or three days." Mrs Scott-Long was allowed to see her husband Monday for the first time since he was formally detained in the early hours of Friday morning here.

Mr Burns, British citizen who has been the NEW YORK TIMES correspondent here since 1984, was also allowed separate meetings with his editors and representatives of the British and U.S. Embassies.

His detention follows a motorcycle trip he made with an American lawyer and a Chinese friend to north central China that included passage through areas not open to foreigners.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry declined to comment on Mr Burns' meeting Tuesday with Mr Rosenthal and Mr Hoge. "We have lots of guests here everyday," said one official. The Ministry referred all questions concerning Mr Burns' detention to the Beijing Public Security Bureau, which declined to comment.

Mr Hoge said Mr Rosenthal had told the Foreign Ministry official that China had already made its point about foreigners in China abiding by its rules. Mr Burns is a journalist and only a joiurnalist, and is in no way involved in intelligence activies, Mr Rosenthal was quoted as saying. The correspondent's detention has already begun to damage China's reputation and the damage could be stopped by releasing him, the editor said.

U.S. officials have publicly expressed Washington's "strong concern" about Mr Burns' detention, and have said they have the fullest confidence in his journalistic integrity. British officials' response has been lower-key. They have said they are continuing to press for full information about Mr Burns and consular access.

According to Chinese regulations, a person under investigation can be held for 10 days, though in practice the period of detention can vary, Western experts said. During the first seven days investigations compile information, which is passed to the procurator, a court official whose job falls somewhere between that of the police and that of a public prosecutor. The procurator then has three days to decide whether to release the suspect, bring charges or authorize further detention.

Analysts said the lengthening period of Mr Burns' detention made it increasingly unlikely he would be able to continue his work in China if he was released, and raised the possibility that his case would be brought to trial. People who come to trial in China are virtually always found guilty and rarely get off with less than a fine and a short prison sentence.

Correspondent Expelled

OW230138 Beijing XINHUA in English 0115 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) -- John F. Burns, correspondent for THE NEW YORK TIMES resident in Beijing, was expelled from the territory of China for violating the law governing aliens entry into and exit from China and left Beijing this morning, an officer of the Beijing State Security Bureau stated here this morning.

The official said Burns has engaged in activities incompatible with his status as a journalist by deliberately breaking into Chinese areas closed to aliens, thereby violating "the law governing aliens entry into and exit from the People's Republic of China", from the end of June to early July.

After investigation of case, the official said, the Beijing State Security Bureau yesterday decided to expel Burns from the territory of China.

SPEECH OF U.S. AMBASSADOR ON SINO-U.S. TRADE

HK221201 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese 14 Jul 86 p 3

[Report by Pei: "U.S. Ambassador to China Lord on Problems Existing in Sino-U.S. Trade at Present"]

[Text] Recently, U.S. Ambassador to China Lord spoke lengthily at the 13th annual meeting of the Sino-U.S. Trade Committee in Washington.

While affirming the rapid development of bilateral trade, Lord also spoke of the following obstacles and problems confronting China:

One, aside from exporting some sensitive consumer items, China still has to find other commodities with export potential. On the other hand, the United States is threatened with dark shadows of further restrictions in the import of textile items and of increases in petitions against the dumping of goods. prices of oil and other Chinese export commodities have declined sharply.

Two, China's policy of introducing foreign capital and accelerating development is a wise one. However, due to her profound fear of a shortage of foreign exchange and of intensification of trade imbalances, she remains very conservative in the use of foreign credits.

Three, American businessmen continue to invest in China. However, the high cost of services and goods in China, strict control of foreign exchange, limited access to China's markets, the shackles of bureaucratism, the insufficiency and unpredictability of qualified local employees, and other such problems have disappointed many American businessmen.

Four, while the United States and its allies have greatly relaxed restrictions on imports, relaxation of controls on the transfer of technology remains slow and the scope unsatisfactory.

Five, the U.S. side strove to put the nuclear agreement into effect and has discussed the question of taking part in the Changjiang Sanxia project. Now, China has postponed these projects.

Six, exchanges of people and goods on both sides have increased. However, progress has still to be made on bilateral issues on aviation and sea transport.

Lord put forward: Both sides should set about resolving some thorny issues. To this end, he made the following suggestions for the U.S. side:

First, protectionism should be resisted. If China could not sell its products to the United States, then the United States would similarly not be able to sell to China.

Second, before entering the Chinese market, American enterprises should make proper preparations. They should have a full understanding of China, master the art of operating in China, be patient, acknowledge the effective role of money in competition in China, and should sign serious written agreements to avoid disputes.

At the same time, Lord put the following proposals to the Chinese side:

One, it is necessary to restrain those bureaucratic elements who attempt to get rich instantly by extorting high prices from foreigners for housing, services, and offices.

Two, it is necessary to repudiate the practice of imposing heavy taxes on equipment imported by foreign enterprises.

Three, it is necessary to clarify the formulation and implementation of economic legislation.

Four, it is necessary to improve statistical methods.

Five, China's exports are concentrated in a very narrow range of goods which is susceptible to foreign protectionism. Hence, export of products should be diversified.

Six, it is necessary to further open up China's markets to the outside world, which will be important to China's joining the GATT.

REAGAN RULES OUT SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA

OW230102 Beijing XINHUA in English 0037 GMT 23 Jul 86

["Reagan Defends South Africa Policy" -- XINHUA Headline]

[Text] Washington, July 22 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said a deeper Western involvement is needed to achieve the elimination of the apartheid system in South Africa. "We are determined to remain involved, diplomatically and economically, with all the states of southern Africa that wish constructive relations with the United States," he declared.

The President urged the Pretoria government to set a timetable for the elimination of the apartheid system to start a dialogue with its opponents. "To achieve that," he stressed, "we need -- not a Western withdrawal -- but deeper involvement by the Western business community."

But he ruled out economic sanctions against Pretoria as a means to forcing an end to apartheid in South Africa, saying "we must stay and work, not cut and run."

He said imposing sanctions against South Africa would "destroy America's flexibility, discard our diplomatic leverage and deepen the crisis" in that country.

The President's speech, delivered at the White House before the members of two major American foreign policy organizations, was his first "comprehensive statement" on South Africa in nearly a year.

It came at the end of a month-long review of the U.S. South African policy conducted by the Reagan administration under mounting pressure from the Congress for a tougher anti-apartheid policy, including the imposition of punitive economic sanctions against Pretoria.

But Reagan defended the Pretoria racist regime, asserting that although the apartheid system still exists, "there has been dramatic change" in South Africa in recent years and that the country now falls short of achieving economic and social justice only if judged by "Western standards."

The President today categorically rejected the "emotional clamor" across the nation for sanctions, citing strategic considerations.

"It would be a historic act of folly for the United States and the West — out of anguish and frustration and anger — to write off South Africa," he stated.

Justifying his "no-sanctions" position, Reagan claimed that sanctions would only hurt "the very people we seek to help."

In this respect, Reagan said, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was "right" in denouncing punitive sanctions against South Africa as "immoral" and "utterly repugnant."

While calling on the Pretoria regime to end the "repressive measures" against the black people, he termed the South African people's just struggle against apartheid as "acts of terrorism."

"In defending their society and people, the South African government has right and responsibility to maintain order in the face of terrorists," he claimed.

He condemned South Africa's strikes into neighboring states, but quickly added: "I also condemn that behavior" of the guerrillas of the African National Congress who operate "both within South Africa and from some neighboring countries".

The President also urged the Pretoria Government to release all political prisoners, including Nelson Mandela, leader of the outlawed African National Congress, to legalize the banned black political movements.

REAGAN ANNOUNCEMENT TO ABANDON SALT II VIEWED

HK180937 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 13, 1 Jul 86 pp 5-6

[Article by Han Bin and Zhuang Maocheng: "A Signal of an Intensified Nuclear Arms Race"]

[Excerpts] Just when people are very concerned and puzzled about the fact that the U.S.-Soviet arms control negotiations in Geneva are at a standstill, on 27 May, U.S. President Ronald Reagan announced that the United States would no longer be limited by the SALT II Arms Treaty with the Soviet Union. His lengthy announcement has cast a new shadow on the U.S.-Soviet Geneva talks. This is a dangerous signal that the United States and the Soviet Union may further intensify their nuclear arms race.

Reagan's announcement said in its denounciation that "Soviet violations had seriously damaged the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty," and declared that under such circumstances, the United States "would decide on the structure of its strategic forces in accordance with the nature and degree of the threat by the Soviet strateic forces," and "not on the basis of the SALT II Treaty." On the one hand, the announcement said that after the eighth U.S. Trident missile submarine starts its term of service this year, the United States will still dismantle another Neptune submarine in order to comply with the limits of the treaty; but on the other hand, it also said that the United States will equip its 131st B-52 bomber with cruise missiles by the end of this year regardless of the limits of the treaty. A senior official of the Reagan administration said that U.S. decision is imperative unless the Soviet Union obviously changes its attitude in the next few months.

The SALT II agreement was signed by Brezhnev and Carter in Vienna in June 1979.

From the wording of Reagan's announcement, it can be explained that the U.S. abandonment of SALT II is because the "treaty has deficiencies" and "it has not been officially ratified by the Congress," and even if it were ratified, it expired at the end of last year, and constant Soviet violations of the agreement seriously imperiled U.S. interests and security. However, observers have pointed out that Reagan's decision also conceals some other objectives.

First, this is an important step taken by the United States to further enhance its military strength in order to have a preponderance of strength over the Soviet Union in the arms race. The Reagan administration knows that a number of treaties and agreements have been signed since the United States and the Soviet Union started negotiations on nuclear arms control in 1969, but the Soviet Union has not been really limited by them. The momentum of Soviet arms expansion has not been even slightly contained. Soviet strategic weaponry has surpassed that of the United States quantitatively and qualitatively and its land-based ballastic missiles have long predominated.

Second, the announcement also intends to exert pressure on the Soviet Union and force it to make compromises in the Geneva disarmament talks. Since the talks resumed in March 1985, the two countries have been entangled in an incessant "war of proposals" on arms control and the stand of both parties on the question is being riven farther and farther from each other. No substantial progress has been so far achieved even though five rounds of talks have been held. [paragraph continues]

The second summit meeting of the two leaders scheduled to be held in the United States this year, which was proposed by them during their first meeting in November last year, seems to be uncertain because many new problems cropped up between the two countries. According to the press of foreign countries, Reagan's strongly worded announcement is aimed at bargaining with the Soviet Union so that the Geneva disarmament talks will achieve some progress in favor of the United States and the second U.S.-Soviet summit will be held as early as possible.

Third, Reagan's decision was made to assist in uniting the struggle at home. On the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty, there have long been different views in the United States. As early as when President Reagan assumed office in the White House, he disagreed with the treaty, but he did not take any action to abandon the treaty only out of consideration for the views of the NATO allies and the moderates at home. In recent years the conservative forces in the United States have markedly increased and their voice for breaking the bounds of the treaty is becoming louder and louder. In addition, the mid-term election of the Congress will start soon. Under such circumstances, Reagan determinedly made the decision by the "advice" of his hardline advisers in order to win the support of the ever-growing conservative forces so as to strive for more Republican seats in the Congress. Moreover, Reagan's decision will also influence the congressional debate on the 1987 defense budget and mow down the opposition of congressmen who call for less military expenditures by making use of the treaty, thus guaranteeing the smooth implementation of the development plan of strategic weaponry. Some people therefore said that Reagan's announcement was a victory of the faction which favors a tough policy toward the Soviet Union, represented by the defense department. What they said is perhaps quite reasonable.

Reagan's announcement has evoked strong repercussions throughout the world. The Soviet Government issued a statement on 31 May, denouncing the United States for "opening the sluice to carry out an unrestricted arms race. The statement also warned the United States "against any illusion" and said the Soviet Union "would not be indifferent" to U.S. violations of the treaty and would certainly "adopt the necessary measures" to maintain a strategic balance. At a press conference on 4 June, general staff chief of the Soviet Armed Forces, Akhromeyev, accused the United States of trying to "make the Soviet Union exhausted" by means of large-scale arms race, but he said that "the Soviet Union would find effective countermeasures" against the challenge. Soviet official statements and newspaper commentaries as well all hinted that Reagan's decision might force the Soviet Union to cancel the summit meeting of the two countries scheduled to be held this year. The reaction of some U.S. allies was also very strong. At the foreign minister's meeting of the NATO nations held from 29 to 30 May, U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz "was extremely isolated" and was criticized by participants with one voice. The meeting focused on discussing Reagan's announcement, but the issue was purposely not mentioned in its communique because of a sharp difference of views. At a press conference after the meeting, some foreign ministers said Reagan "unilaterally made the U.S. decision on the eve of the meeting" and the allies hoped it was not Reagan's "final decision." Opposition factions in the United States also made charges against the decision, describing it as a "very dangerous move." They worried that Reagan's decision may force the Soviet Union to speed up its development of its nuclear arsenal and this will be more harmful to the United States. People in many regions of the world also worry about a possible escalation of the nuclear arms race between the two superpowers. As this year is the International Peace Year in the world, what people hope for is that the United States and the Soviet Union, which possess the majority of nuclear weapons in the world, will take poitive action to stop the arms race and take the lead in substantially cutting down their nuclear arsenals. They should assume due responsibility for world peace and security of all countries and should not run counter to this.

LIAOWANG VIEWS DEVELOPMENT OF 'REAGANISM'

HK211432 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 28, 14 Jul 86 pp 24-25

[Article by Li Qinggong: "The U.S. Global Strategy -- Reaganism"]

[Text] At the beginning of this year, U.S. President Reagan delivered to the Congress a message entitled "Freedom, Regional Security, and Global Peace." He systematically expounded on current U.S. global foreign policy, stressing that "based on its actual strength and position" and by "military, diplomatic, economic, and propaganda means," the United States would counteract the Soviet influence in various regions of the world, with the aim of not only "containing Soviet expansion," but also "pushing back the Soviet sphere of influence to its own soil" and "ensuring U.S. security interests." The proposition of this message indicates that "Reaganism" advocated by the United States in recent years is "becoming perfect" and will become the guiding principle for U.S. foreign policy in the future.

The formation of "Reaganism" has undergone a gradual development. It started during the Reagan administration's first term of office and was at that time called the theory of "overwhelming the opponent," that is, using military, political and economic pressure to force the Soviet Union to return to its original sphere of influence. "Reaganism" has fully developed during the Reagan administration's second term of office. Reagan pointed out in his message this year that "the United States has extensive duties and security interests in Europe, the Pacific, the Middle East, and other regions bordering on the United States, which require the United States to shoulder the responsibility of exercising powerful, convincing, and consistent leadership."

Many factors have caused the emergence of "Reaganism." On the one hand, the domestic situation has laid the necessary foundation for the implementation of "Reaganism." Although the United States has been under the influence of an economic crisis in recent years, "Reaganism" has enabled it to maintain an economic growth for almost 4 consecutive years. Undoubtedly, this has provided a material foundation for the implementation of "Reaganism." In the military field, the policy of "reestablishing U.S. military strength" set forth shortly after Reagan's assumption of office has now been put into effect in an all-round way, thus basically changing the balance of forces between the United States and the Soviet Union and allowing the United States the ability to shift from the strategic defensive to the strategic offensive.

On the other hand, the present international situation has provided opportunities for the implementation of "Reaganism." The Soviet Union, which has been considered by the United States as its main opponent, is now carrying out a strategic readjustment with regard to its domestic and foreign policies. Although the Soviet Union has not given up its effort to carry out arms expansion, it needs a breathing spell to develop its economy, science, and technology, as these are prominently backward. After assuming office, Gorbachev put forward the strategy of "speeding up economic development." To maintain current Soviet competitiveness, he adopts flexible methods in politics and diplomacy so as to make up the potential inadequacy in the economic, military, and technological fields. [paragraph continues]

In terms of global strategy, the Soviet Union adopts a limited shrinkage [you xian shou suo 2589 7098 2392 4799] policy to avoid direct clashes with the United States. All this has made the United States feel that it has an opportunity to exploit.

Third World countries want to develop their economies and protect their sovereignty and independence. They have given a serious challenge to the global expansionist policy of the superpowers. As a result of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and its support for Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia and Cuba's dispatching troops to Angola, many Third World countries have lost confidence in the Soviet Union and are beginning to take precautions against a Soviet hegemonist moves. As many Third World countries have waited in vain for more economic aid from the Soviet Union, they are seeking certain regional economic cooperation, and some of them have turned to the West for help. Such a change also serves as factor which provides the United States with an opportunity to implement "Reaganism."

Another factor is that terrorist activities are becoming more serious in the world. This has caused much worry to many Western countries. Although some Western countries withhold their attitude toward the economic sanctions and military actions proposed by the United States, they have no choice but to tacitly agree with U.S. moves, as no better methods can yet be found to deal with terrorism; some of them have given support to a varying extent and others have cooperated in certain forms. This is as good as giving the United States the green light for the use of arms on regional issues.

With such a background, "Reaganism" has the following problems to solve:

The problem of giving prominence to "regional security " Over the last 5 years, the Reagan administration has devoted its efforts to improving its position at the arms control talks through strengthening U.S. military strength. Following the change in the situation and the improvement of U.S. military strength, the Reagan administration holds that the opportunity has come for counterattacking Soviet pressure on the United States, which started in the 1970's. The United States has therefore suggested that regional issues be put on the agenda of handling U.S.-Soviet relations. At a U.S.-Soviet summit conference in November last year, Reagan formally produced this trump card, listing regional issues as a "hot spot" in U.S.-Soviet relations.

In order of urgency, "Reaganism" is to solve three important regional issues. The first one is the Nicaragua issue. In Nicaragua, Soviet influence not only threatens U.S. sea traffic, but also undermines or monopolizes the forces of other Central American countries. The second one is the Angola issue. If the United States gets the upper hand there, it will be able to weaken Soviet influence in Africa and to maul Cuba's arrogance as well. The third one is the Afghanistan issue, the settlement of which will be advantageous to halting the Soviet expansionist move, hampering its "southward strategy," and solving the Cambodia question.

With regard to the settlement of these regional issues, the Reagan administration is of the opinion that the best policy is to achieve its ends without the use of force. According to this "Reaganist" principle, the Reagan administration is striving for a political solution to the Afghanistan issue through diplomatic channels; in Central America, the United States is seeking a method of holding three types of negotiations, that is, negotiations between civilian governments and guerrillas, negotiations between the U.S. and Nicaraguan Governments, and negotiations between the Nicaraguan Government and the anti-government force in Nicaragua; and on the Cambodia question, the United States supports ASEAN in its efforts to promote a political solution to the Cambodia question and to put an end to the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia.

"Reaganism" confirms that the key to solving regional issues lies in the integration of U.S. strength with that of its allies. Such integration played a major role in the past and is particularly important to the United States today. It enables the United States to use the strength of its allies and to let its allies share political risks. U.S. efforts to remove the estrangement between itself and its NATO allies, Reagan's visits to the ASEAN nations, and U.S. support for the Contadora and Lima groups, all these indicate that the United States is consolidating and expanding this integration of strength. The Reagan administration maintains that although this is traditional U.S. practice, it should become an important means to exercise "Reaganism" under the present circumstances, as by doing so the United States will make strategic progress at the cost of limited material and financial resources. "Reaganism" requires that military and economic aid as well as the sales of weapons should be made available to ensuring the security of countries directly under Soviet threat or threats by its allies. The Reagan administration deems it necessary to increase its military and economic aid and, if need be, to change some of its economic aid into military aid so as to guarantee the implementation of "Reaganism."

The problem of supporting "democratic movements." The Reagan administration is of the opinion that "transition to democracy" has been the trend since the beginning of the 1950's. By "democracy," it means the practicing of the Western political system. The percentage of people living in a democratic environment in Latin america has risen from 30 percent 10 years ago to 90 percent today. Now the Soviet Union has found it more and more difficult to maintain the progress it made in the 1970's due to the failure in U.S. policy. "Reaganism" asserts that the United States will make good use of this favorable trend and its influence to encourage "democratic reforms" and oppose any leftist or rightist tyranny, with the aim of overthrowing "Soviet-type dictatorships" and setting up a "democratic system."

The problem of "carefully using its military strength, with attention paid to actual results." "Reaganism" maintains that U.S. military strength plays an important role in maintaining a stable situation and ensuring that U.S. diplomacy will fully produce its results. "Diplomacy will fully produce its results. "Diplomacy without the support of actual strength is empty talk, and military strength without political targets will not have a long-lasting impact." The United States is careful about the use of its military strength and pays attention to actual results. "Reaganism" confirms that military force should be used as the last resort in diplomatic conflicts and that it is necessary to follow the patterns of "recovering Grenada" and "launching air raids on Libya," that is, fighting no battle without certainty of winning it.

"Reaganism" seeks a global strategic target, with the aim of obtaining superiority, gaining the initiative, pushing the Soviet Union back, and consolidating its hegemony.

Over the last 40 years since the end of the war, U.S. global strategy and foreign policy have undergone several adjustments and experienced development periods characterized by the Truman doctrine, the Eisenhower doctrine, the Nixon doctrine, and the Carter doctrine. "Reaganism" is U.S. global strategy and foreign policy in the new period. In comparison with the previous doctrines, "Reaganism" bears the characteristics of being more aggressive, more adventuristic, more practical, and more flexible.

There are also some unfavorable factors in the course of practicing "Reaganism." First, it is hard to imagine that the Soviet Union will take lying down everything done by the United States. On the contrary, the Soviet Union is directing its countermeasures at the United States. [paragraph continues]

Second, Western allies of the United States and the Untied States hold identical views only on certain problems but not on every problem. Third World countries, which are now striving for peace and development, are the first to suffer in U.S.-Soviet contention. Some Third World countries may accept U.S. economic and military aid provided out of consideration for U.S. strategy. But when they feel that their sovereignty is harmed and economies are controlled by the United States, they will free themselves from U.S. control and look for a new way to national security and economic development. In the United States, there are also factors restricting the practicing of "Reaganism," such as some people's dissatisfaction at U.S. troops being dispatched to other countries and the congressional debate over funds being allocated for economic aid.

In conclusion, the United States will meet with restrictive factors in the course of practicing "Reaganism" and will therefore find it difficult to practice it at will. As to how much progress the United States will make by practicing "Reaganism" in its global strategy, this remains to be seen.

XINHUA ANALYZES U.S. ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE

OW191634 Beijing XINHUA in English 1353 GMT 19 Jul 86

["News Analysis: Fed Discount Rate Cut Is Symptomatic of the Sluggishness of U.S. Economy (by Xia Zhaolong)" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] New York, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The Federal Reserve Board, the U.S. central bank, lowered its discount rate to six percent from 6.5 percent last week, bringing the country's bellwether lending rate to its lowest level since October 1977.

The cut is the third so far this year. In March, the rate was reduced to seven percent from 7.5 percent and again in April the rate was cut to 6.5 percent.

The discount rate is a benchmark interest rate in the United States, so a lower discount rate would eventually lead to overall interest rate reductions by commercial banks and other lending institutions. Lower interest rates, in turn, encourage people to borrow more and spend lavishly, thereby encouraging growth.

The Fed move was followed by the nations' banks, which cut their prime rate to eight percent from 8.5 percent, the lowest since January 1978.

The U.S. economy spurted in the first quarter of this year, growing at an annual rate of 2.9 percent, far above the 0.7 percent of the previous three months. The healthy development came as the country reaped the benefits of the drop in oil prices, low inflation and the depreciation of the dollar. In this favorable climate, the Reagan administration set the growth target for the year at four percent, almost twice that of last year.

But statistics began to turn gloomy as summer set in. The situation in some sectors worsened instead of improving. The operating rate of the country's factories, mines and utilities stuck below 80 percent and unemployment above seven percent. The leading economic indicators in May, a broad measure to forecast economic activities in the coming six months or so, was up by only 0.2 percent. Although official figures for the economic performance in the second quarter are not available, many economists estimate that it may be in the two percent range, much lower than the first three months of this year.

Government officials, business executives and industrialists believe the lack of capital spending and the slump in the manufacturing and energy industries are the achilles' heel of the U.S. economy. Capital spending across the country fell four percent during the first three months of the year and the oil and gas industry alone slashed six billion dollars from its annual budget for exploration and development.

The manufacturing industry has been a weak point since the current economic recovery took off four years ago and is now virtually in recession. The Labor Department said that between January through June, another 159,000 workers lost their jobs, bringing the total to 300,000 in this sector since the beginning of last year.

THE WASHINGTON POST wrote recently that the U.S. recovery would go bust soon because it is built on a "shaky foundation under the glittering surface of the economic boom." The vulnerable spots that can trigger a collapse include a trade crisis caused by the failure of a depreciated dollar to revive American exports; refusal by foreign investors to continue bankrolling America's high level of consumption; and rising protectionism that worsens the economic decline in both the developed and developing worlds.

The Reagan administration appears worried about the economic situation, particularly in view of the November congressional election. A faltering economy can damage the electoral prospects of the Republican Party. It is under such circumstances that White House Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan went public earlier last week to urge the central bank to reduce the interest rate.

A large number of U.S. economists are reassessing their earlier rosy predictions that the economy would pick up steam in the second half of the year. Some of them believe that the present cut in the discount rate is late and not sufficient to stimulate the economy now in the doldrums. They expect more cuts by the Fed in the coming months if the central banks in Japan and Federal Germany join in.

PRC BODY, HAWAII UNIVERSITY SIGN AGREEMENT

OW181152 Beijing XINHUA in English 1059 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Academy of sciences and the University of Hawaii, USA, signed an agreement of cooperation here today. Under the agreement, the academy's South China Institute of Botany, Kunming Institute of Botany and Yunnan Institute of Tropical Botany on the one hand, and Hawaii University's Tropical Agriculture and Human Resources College and Natural Sciences faculty on the other, will exchange visiting scholars, lecturers and graduate students, and provide each other with information and materials related to their research programs.

President Lu Jiaxi of the Chinese Academy of Sciences and President Albert J. Simone of Hawaii University signed the agreement. Prior to the signing ceremony, Vice-President Sun Honglie of the Chinese Acadmey of Sciences and President Simone exchanged views on further cooperation between the two sides.

DPRK ENVOY TO PRC DENOUNCES U.S., ROK STAND ON TALKS

OW210744 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 21 (XINHUA) — Korean Ambassador to China Sin In-ha denounced the United States and the South Korean side for refusing a proposal on tripartite talks of military authorities at a press conference here today.

Sin In-ha said the proposal, which was put forward by the Ministry of the People's Armed Forces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) June 9, is aimed at easing military tension on the Korean peninsula and creating an atmosphere for the north-south dialogue.

He said the peninsula remained in military tension because the United States and the South Korean side refused the proposal and continued their policies of war and military confrontation. Noting that peace in Korea is closely linked with that in Asia and the world as a whole, the ambassador urged the U.S. and the South Korean authorities to accept the proposal of the DPRK side.

KIM IL-SONG DENOUNCES U.S., ROK STAND ON PROPOSAL

OW220736 Beijing XINHUA in English 0656 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 22 (XINHUA) — President Kim Il-song has blamed the U.S. and South Korea for their rejecting of North's peace proposal and staging frequent military exercises, which increase the "war danger" over the Korean peninsula. The Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army (KPA) proposed on June 17 tripartite talks between military officials of North and South of Korea and the United States. But it has been rejected by the U.S. and South Korean authorities who described it as "propaganda" and "not constructive."

His remarks were carried in his letter published in today's newspaper NODONG SINMUN to mark the 40th anniversary of the establishment of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland.

Kim said the most serious problem his people are facing is "to want a split Korean nation or a reunified one; to turn the country to a nuclear warfield or a safeguard of global peace." He added that may reasonable reunification proposals have been made by the government of the Democratic People's Republic, and the Workers' Party of Korea and great efforts have been made to realize the reunification.

U.S. 'SPY PLANE' INTRUDES INTO KOREAN AIRSPACE

OW181735 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 18 Jul 86

["U.S. Spy Plane Intrudes Into Korean Airspace, Korea Says" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Pyongyang, July 18 (XINHUA) — A U.S. high-speed, high-altitude reconnaissance plane intruded into Korean airspace near the east coastal area this morning, the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported. The agency said that U.S. spy planes have intruded into Korean airspace eight times this month. The intrusions show that the United States has no interest in holding talks and easing tension but is stepping up reconnaissance flights to increase confrontation on the Korean peninsula.

LIAONING SECRETARY RECEIVES DPRK DELEGATION

SK210537 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] At the invitation of the Liaoning Provincial People's Government, a seven-member friendship delegation from North Pyongan Province in the DPRK, headed by Yu Chae-man, vice chairman of the Administrative and Economic Guidance Committee of the North Pyongan Province, arrived in Shenyang by train on 6 July to participate in activities to mark the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Treaty on Friendship, Cooperation, and Mutual Assistance Between the PRC and the DPRK, and to pay a friendly visit.

On the afternoon of 6 July, the Shenyang Railway Station was splendidly decorated for the festive occasion; and several hundred people, with flowers in their hands, warmly met the distinguished guests at the station by beating drums and gongs. Meeting the guests at the station were Zhu Jiashen, vice governor of the province; Cheng Jinxiang, secretary general of the provincial people's government; Gao Jizhong, vice major of Shenyang City; Zhao Ziliang, deputy director of the provincial Foreign Affairs Office; and Lou Guozhen, director of the Shenyang City Foreign Affairs Office. Some children presented fresh flowers to the distinguished guests.

At 1600 that very afternoon, Yu Chae-man and all other members of the delegation paid an official call to the provincial people's government. The delegation was received by Quan Shuren, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor of the province; Zhu Jiashen, vice governor of the province, and Gao Jizhong, vice major of Shenyang City. The host and the guests had a cordial conversation amid a brotherly and friendly atmosphere, and commonly pledge to make new contributions to strengthening the friendship and unity between the people of China and Korea.

That very evening, the provincial people's government held a banquet at the Youyi Guesthouse in honor of the Korean guests.

When the delegation arrived in Dandong, Zheng Ping, mayor of Dandong City; Li Zefeng, vice chairman of the city People's Congress Standing Committee; and hundreds from the masses went to the end of Yalujiang Bridge to meet it. When the Liaoning provincial Friendship Delegation, headed by Vice Governor Bai Lichen, went to the DPRK by way of Dandong, it posed for a picture with Yu Chae-man, head of the North Pyongan provincial friendship delegation.

DPRK OFFICIAL RECEIVES JILIN, LIAONING GROUPS

SK180518 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Text] On 14 July, Chong Chu-ki, vice premier of the State Administration Council, received the Liaoning provincial friendship delegation headed by Bai Lichen, vice governor of the Liaoning Province, and the Jilin provincial friendship delegation headed by Zhao Xiu, chairman of the Jilin Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, and had a conversation with them in a cordial and friendly atmosphere.

Chong Chun-ki expressed warm welcome to the delegations. He said: Since Jilin and Liaoning are neighbors of Korea, strengthening the friendship and cooperation ties between us will play a key role in strengthening the friendship between the DPRK and China. He hoped that the border provinces of the two countries have more contacts with each other and further develop cooperative ties. He hoped that Liaoning and Jilin provinces will make greater achievements in their socialist construction.

PYONGYANG STUDENTS RALLY AGAINST NUCLEAR WAR

OW181418 Beijing XINHUA in English 1335 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Pyongyang, July 18 (XINHUA) — Nearly ten thousand Korean students staged and anti-nuclear rally this afternoon at the Pyongyang indoor stadium. During the rally, sponsored by the Socialist Working Youth League of Korea (SWYLK) and the Korean Students' Committee, the students vowed to wage a struggle to prevent nuclear war and promote global peace.

Yi Yong-su, chairman of the Central Committee of SWYLK, in a speech at the rally said nuclear war poses a grave threat to the Earth. But war, he said, is not inevitable. He said the peace-loving Korean youths will wage an active struggle to turn the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone. Yi suggested that the 13th World Festival of Youths and Students be held in Pyongyang in the summer of 1989. He also appealled for the support of youths and youth organizations of foreign countries. The rally passed an appeal-for-peace letter to the youth of the world.

Vice President of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea Pak Song-chol attended the rally.

JAPAN-USSR AGREEMENT REACHED ON GRAVE VISITS

OW211816 Beijing XINHUA in English 1733 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Tokyo, July 21 (XINHUA) — Japan and the Soviet Union today reached an agreement on Japanese visits to their ancestral graves without visas on two Soviet-held northern islands and 11 places in the Soviet Union from late July through August, Foreign Ministry sources said. According to KYODO NEWS SERVICE, the accord was agreed upon after a meeting between Hiroshi Shigeta, head of the Foreign Ministry's Soviet Affairs Division, and Soviet counsellor G.E. Komarovskiy.

However, Shigeta expressed regret that the Soviet Union failed to accepted Japan's earlier request for permission to grave visits to all the four northern islands — Shikotan, the Habomai group, Kunashiri and Etorofu. The accord only allows Japanese grave visitors to go to Shikotan and the Habomai Islands.

The northern territories, east off Japan's main island of Hokkaido, were occupied by the Soviet Union at the end of World War II and Japan has been claiming its territorial right over them.

Shigeta told Komarovskiy that Japan particularly regretted that the grave visit to Kunashiri, which had been permitted in the past, was excluded this time. The Soviet diplomat promised to convey to Moscow the Japanese regret, but argued that the proposed list included three new places of Chekhov and Poronaisk on Sakhalin and Okha in the mainland of the Soviet Union.

Former Japanese islanders visited the Soviet-held northern islands between 1964 and 1975, bearing identity cards issued by the Japanese Government. But in 1976, Moscow announced that Japanese wanting to visit these islands would need visas, leading to the suspension of such visits. Earlier in May when Japanese Foreign Minister Shintaru Abe visited Moscow, the two countries agreed in general on the resumption of grave visits.

SINO-INDIAN TALKS END WITH LITTLE PROGRESS

OW231048 Beijing XINHUA in English 1032 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) — The seventh round of talks between Chinese and Indian officials ended here today without substantial progress made on the boundary issue.

Sources said that the talks, which had centered around the boundary issue, proceeded in a "friendly and frank" atmosphere. The two sides enhanced their mutual understanding, but made "no substantial progress." The two sides also had "fruitful" discussions on cultural, scientific and technological exchanges and exchanged views on international issues of mutual concern.

Both sides maintained that the talks were "useful" and agreed to hold the next round of talks in New Delhi, but the specific time would be decided through diplomatic channels, the sources said.

Wan Li Cautions Patience

OW231204 Beijing XINHUA in English 1129 GMT 23 July 86

[Text] Beijing, July 23 (XINHUA) — China's acting Premier Wan Li cautioned Chinese and Indian officials here today that they should be patient and try to accomodate and understand each other while negotiating on the Sino-Indian boundary issue. "It does not matter if no agreement is reached this time. You can talk about it again next time you meet," he said. He also expressed the hope that China and India will maintain peace along their border while discussing their boundary issue.

Wan made these remarks at a meeting with a delegation of Indian officials attending the seventh round of talks between Chinese and Indian officials here this afternoon.

The seventh round of talks between Chinese and Indian officials ended here today after three-day discussions. No substantial progress has been made on the boundary issue, sources close to the talks said.

Wan told the Indian officials that China and India are the two most populous countries in the world. The two countries share identical or similar views on world peace, disarmament, North-South dialogue, South-South cooperation and other major international issues. Since both countries uphold peace and devote themselves to economic development and a better living standard of the people, he said, they should work together to contribute to world peace and common development.

Wan and Venkateswaran, head of the Indian delegation, agreed that the boundary issue is the major problem facing the two countries in their relations. They also pointed our that the talks between officials of the two countries have proceeded in a friendly atmosphere.

Venkateswaran expressed the hope that the two countries will find a reasonable and fair solution to the boundary issue through negotiations.

Wan asked Venkateswaran to convey the greetings and best regards to Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi from Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and himself.

ZHAO ZIYANG FINISHES EUROPEAN PHASE OF TRIP

Meets PRC Officials in Istanbul

OW222222 Beijing International Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang and his entourage 20 July visited all the staff members of the Chinese Consulate General in Istanbul as well as other Chinese foreign service members here, urging them to make vigorous contributions toward strengthening Sino-Turkish relations and enhancing friendship between the people of the two countries.

Ends Turkish Visit

OW230824 Beijing XINHUA in English 0806 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Izmir, Turkey, July 23 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left Izmir for Tunis this morning, ending his seven-day official visit to Turkey.

Zhao's visit to Turkey, the first ever made by a Chinese Government leader, was described as successful. The Chinese premier arrived in Ankara last Thursday on the fifth leg of his tour of six Balkan and Mediterranean nations: Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain, Turkey and Tunisia.

During his stay in Ankara, the Turkish capital, Zhao met twice with Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal for talks described by the two leaders as "fruitful" and "helpful" to bringing the age-old ties between the two countries to a new high. The Chinese premier noted that Sino-Turkish relations had entered a new stage marked by mutual trust and friendly cooperation.

Zhao met with Turkish President Kenan Evren in Istanbul Monday. They discussed some specific ideas aimed at furthering the growing economic cooperation and trade between the two countries. The Chinese premier came to Izmir, Turkey's third largest city, Monday afternoon, as part of his program to see more of the achievements made by the Turkish people in developing and modernizing their national economy.

In his trip to Cesme, a small town about 100 kilometers from Izmir, Premier Zhao took a morning walk along its narrow but bustling streets crowded with pedlars, shoppers and tourists. The shop keepers and customers were surprised and overjoyed to see the Chinese premier enter their shops and ask questions about their businesses.

The Chinese premier, showing great interest in the way the local government and people run a flourishing tourist industry, chatted with the manager of a caravansary-converted hotel. "This is a very beautiful area and you have done a good job," the Chinese premier said to his host.

PRC, UK SIGN DOCUMENT ON GRANTS, SOFT LOAN

OW191000 Beijing XINHUA in English 0939 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 19 (XINHUA) — An agreed record of discussion on grants and soft loan to be extended by Britain to China was signed here today. According to the record, the British Government will provide grants to some 20 cooperation projects, including an information control training program for the development of China's coal industry, a research project on Beijing's traffic control, a feasibility study on port development and a post and telecommunication cooperation project.

The two sides also agreed to make every effort to conclude arrangements for soft loan projects as soon as practicable.

Chinese Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin met British Minister of State of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Minister for Overseas Development Administration Timothy Raison and his party before the signing ceremony.

PRC-UK LIAISON GROUP MEETS IN LONDON 22 JUL

OW230620 Beijing XINHUA in English 0614 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] London, July 22 (XINHUA) — The fourth meeting of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group began here today.

The Chinese team at the four-day session is led by the senior representative, Ke Zaishou, who arrived here with his party on July 20. The British team is headed by senior representative David Wilson.

Timothy Renton, British minister of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs, hosted a dinner this evening to mark the occasion.

The group was established in order to facilitate liaison, consultation and the exchange of information on the implementation of the Sino-British joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong, signed by the two governments in 1984. The group meets at least three times a year. The previous three meetings last year were held in London, Beijing and Hong Kong.

QUAN SHUREN-LED DELEGATION RETURNS FROM FGR, UK

SK210822 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 7 Jul 86 p 1

[Text] Quan Shuren, governor of Liaoning Province, led a provincial friendship delegation to visit the Federal Republic of Germany and the UK from 18 June to 3 July. When visiting these two countries, the delegation was accorded a warm and grand reception. Amid a cordial and friendly atmosphere, both sides exchanged their opinions on further strengthening the exchange and cooperation in the fields of economy, science and technology, and culture and education. Quan Shuren, governor of Liaoning Province, and Lothar Spath, prime minister of the Baden-Wurttemberg State of the Federal Republic of Germany, signed the "Communique on Establishing Friendly Ties Between Liaoning Province and Baden-Wurttemberg State. After successfully winding up its visit, the delegation returned to Shenyang on the morning of 5 July.

ZHAO ZIYANG ARRIVES IN TUNISIA FOR VISIT

OW231018 Beijing XINHUA in English 1004 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Tunis, July 23 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here from Turkey at 10:45 GMT this morning for a four-day official goodwill visit to the Republic of Tunisia, the last leg of his six-nation tour in the Balkan and Mediterranean region.

The visit to Tunisia is the first made by a Chinese premier since the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai's visit and the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries in 1964.

Premier Zho is to meet with Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba and hold discussions with Tunisian leaders on ways to further friendly bilateral cooperation in all fields.

Zhao visited Yugoslavia, Romania, Greece, Spain, and Turkey before coming to Tunisia.

- Makes Statement at Airport

OW231156 Beijing XINHUA in English 1142 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] Tunis, July 23 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived at Carthage international airport this morning from Izmir, Turkey, for a four-day official goodwill visit. The Chinese premier is here at the invitation of new Tunisian Prime Minister Rachid Sfar. This is the first visit by Chinese premier to Tunisia since the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai's visit in 1964, when the two countries established diplomatic relations.

In a statement at the airport, Zhao said that there exists a traditional friendship between the Chinese and Tunisian peoples, and that the recent years in particular have witnessed new developments in bilateral economic and technological cooperation and trade. This is not only in the interest of the two peoples, he pointed out, but also helps promote South-South cooperation and North-South dialogue.

Zhao said he will meet with President Habib Bourguiba and exchange views with Tunisian leaders on further enhancing friendly cooperation in various fields and will also discuss the current international situation and issues of common concern.

"I would like to take this opportunity to get to know the life of the Tunisian people and their useful experience in building up the country and invigorating the economy," Zhao said.

The Chinese premier was met at the airport by Tunisian Prime Minister Rachid Sfar, Defense Minister Slaheddine Baly and diplomatic envoys of various countries in Tunisia.

The Tunisian visit is the last leg of Zhao's six-nation Balkan-Mediterranean tour which has also taken him to Romania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Spain and Turkey.

TIES WITH TUNISIA REVIEWED ON EVE OF ZHAO VISIT

OW221736 Beijing XINHUA in English 1505 GMT 22 Jul 86

["Sino-Tunisian Cooperation Growing — by (Xie Pinru)" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Tunis, July 22 (XINHUA) — Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang's official visit here from the 23rd to the 26th of this month in an important step in the development of Sino-Tunisian relations. The visit will be the first by a Chinese premier since former Prime Minister Zhou Enlai visited Tunis in 1964. Throughout these years Sino-Tunisian relations have been growing steadily.

In 1979, with the help of an interest free Chinese loan, work was begun on the Medjerdha — Cap Bon Canal. The canal runs for a distance of 120 kilometers from Medjerdha in north central Tunisia to Cap Bon on the Mediterranean Sea. It is one of Tunisia's most important hydro-electric projects and annually moves 200 million cubic meters of water satisfying not only the needs of the capital, Tunis, but also providing water for the irrigation of more than 18,000 hectares if cultivated land.

The canal was completed in May of 1984 with the help of Chinese workers and technicians. At the opening ceremonies, attended by President Habib Bourguiba and Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng, the Tunisian president, as a gesture of thanks for China's contribution to the project, named the canal "the Sino-Tunisian Friendship Canal".

Since the first half of 1984 economic cooperation between China and Tunisia has become much more varied. Within the last two years a number of contracts have been signed by both parties. These involve the building of dams, roads and a sports complex as well as the supply of technical services in the procelain and handicrafts industry.

Commercial exchanges between the two countries have also grown tremendously. In 1980 total trade between China and Tunisia was valued at 22 million U.S. dollars but within four years that amount almost doubled so that by the end of 1984 total trade stood at nearly 40 million dollars.

In October 1984 China and Tunisia signed a counter-trade agreement to ensure a solid base for the continued development of bilateral exchanges. Counter-trade is the barter exchange of goods between two parties where no transfer of funds is involved. The agreement was made specifically to preserve needed foreign exchange by both countries. In 1985, when the agreement first went into effect, China exported cotton and wheat to Tunisia and received in return phosphates for fertilizers. Up to and including this year, counter-trade between the two countries has reached a value of 60 million U.S. dollars, a record amount in the commercial relations between China and Tunisia.

The government and the people of Tunisia are extremely satisfied with the rapid development of friendly relations between the two countries and Tunisian leaders say this is a prime example of South-South cooperation. Chinese leaders have said the economic cooperation thus far enjoyed goes beyond the borders of the two countries.

Premier Zhao Ziyang's visit will certainly bring to a new level the exemplary cooperation between China and Tunisia.

PRC, LEBANESE FOREIGN MINISTRY OFFICIALS MEET

OW221222 Beijing XINHUA in English 1205 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 22 (XINHUA) — The Chinese Government supports the Lebanese Government in its effort to safeguard national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and demands that Israel must withdraw all its troops from Lebanon unconditionally.

This was stated by Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Qi Huaiyuan during his talks here this morning with Fu'ad Alturk, secretary general of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Lebanon, who arrived yesterday evening.

Qi said the Chinese Government will, as always, support all methods and motions designed to help safeguard Lebanon's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity in the United Nations and elsewhere. The Chinese people deeply sympathize with the Lebanese people's sufferings from war, he said.

Speaking of Lebanon's internal unity, Qi expressed the hope that all parties involved would iron out their differences and settle their disputes peacefully through consultation in the spirit of equality, mutual understanding and accommodation.

Al-Turk gave an account of the situation in his country and in the Middle East. He thanked the Chinese Government and people for their sympathy and support to the Lebanese Government and people.

Both sides expressed the desire to maintain and develop the friendly relations between the two countries.

Tonight Qi gave a banquet in honor of Al-Turk.

PRC, KUWAIT TO COOPERATE IN DESERT CONTROL

OW220154 Beijing XINHUA in English 2356 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] Kuwait, July 21 (XINHUA) — Chinese and Kuwaiti scientists will cooperate in controlling desert and developing agriculture in land transformed from desert. This was agreed here today at talks between a visiting Chinese desert research group and officials of the Kuwaiti public authority for agriculture and fisheries after the Chinese group made a two-week desert study in Kuwait. During the talks, the scientists of the two countries exchanged experience in preventing desertification and discussed agricultural development in Kuwait.

During their stay here, the Chinese scientists visited some agricultural projects and chemical fertilizer plant and conducted a survey of the movement of sand and causes of desert drifting in Kuwait.

The Chinese desert research group led by Zhu Zhenda, director of the Desert Institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, arrived here on July 7 and left for home this evening.

LIAOWANG VIEWS POLITICAL REFORM SEMINAR

HK230254 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 29, 21 Jul 86 pp 3-4

[Article by Shu Ge: "It Is Imperative To Carry Out Reform of the Political Structure in China — Seminar on Theories for the Reform of the Political Structure Held in Beijing"]

[Text] The current in-depth development of economic structural reforms in China inevitably requires a corresponding reform of its political structure. This is the basic viewpoint of people who attended a theoretical seminar on political structural reform which was held in Beijing from 10 to 12 July.

People attending the seminar unanimously agreed that the political structural reform which China will carry out represents the self-improvement of the socialist system, and is a concrete application and development of Marxist political science under China's present new situation.

The seminar was an academic meeting sponsored by postgraduate students in the theoretical department of the CPC Central Committee Party school on the principle of linking theory with practice with the support of the school leadership. Nearly 100 academic theses were submitted to the seminar. More than 130 researchers and responsible people of the relevant departments of the CPC Central Committee and State Council were invited to attend the seminar. They included Gong Xiangrui, professor of law at Beijing University; Gao Fang, professor of international politics at the Chinese People's University; Tan Jian, assistant research fellow at the Political Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; and Chen Yizi, director of the Chinese Economic Structural Reform Studies Center. At the seminar, they held free and lively discussions on the nature, aims, basic contents, necessity, and reasibility of reforming China's political structure.

Political Structural Reform Is Imperative

On the question of why political structural reform must be carried out in China, people attending the seminar first answered the questions: What is a political structure, and what are the contents of the political structure? Through discussion, they generally held: A political structure is the form of a certain social class's organization of government. It includes the state management form, the structural form, the election system, and the system for the people to exercise their political rights. Professor Gong Xiangrui said: The political structure should not be an invariable thing, and it should also change in light of changes in the economic basis of society. When talking about China's political structural reform, we should first affirm that measures have been adopted and results have been achieved in the field of political structural reform. For example, the Army has been subject to the leadership of the state; direct elections have been carried out at and under the county level; a retirement system has been adopted among cadres and the practice of allowing cadres to hold lifelong tenure of office has been changed; leading bodies at all levels include young, middle-aged, and old cadres; the legal system has become sounder; and the people's communes have been separated from government functions. Then he listed three reasons for the necessity of political structural reform in China:

— The reform of the economic structure requires the reform of the political structure. Economic structural reform embodies changes in production relations and is bound to require that corresponding reforms be carried out in the political structure, which belongs to the superstructure. For instance, the economic structural reforms urgently need a large number of talented economic managers with up-to-date knowledge and pioneering spirit, but the current cadre system in China is not beneficial for discovering, forging, and training talent, or for gradually reducing the age and improving the educational standards of the cadre contingent. Moreover, the system frequently causes the burial and wastage of a large number of talented persons. As another example, one of the tasks in the economic structural reform is to give full decision-making power to enterprises. However, if the leadership system remains unchanged with the party continuing to perform the functions of the government, and the government continuing to perform the functions of enterprises or using administrative means to meddle inappropriately in all aspects of socialist life, then it will be hard to achieve the purpose of giving decision-making power to the enterprises.

— Political structural reforms are needed in order to build a high degree of socialist democracy. This is because in China's current political setup there exist things like the patriarchal system, autocracy, bureaucratism, and so on, that hamper the develeopoment of socialist democracy.

— Political structural reforms are necessary from the angle of the quality of culture and education and from the angle of correcting unhealthy trends. Take, for instance, the unhealthy trend of abuse of power. If we had a set of laws regulating the powers, obligations, and duties of state cadres and public servants, and a complete system covering the selection, appointment, supervision, examination, and dismissal of leading cadres, the unhealthy trend of abuse of power would be very greatly restricted.

The Feasibility of Political Structural Reform at Present

In the theses and speeches by people attending the seminar, they expressed their opinions on the feasibility of the political structural reform. They first analyzed the favorable conditions for such reform. For example, since the economic structural reform was carried out in an all-round way in 1984, reform has taken root more deeply in the hearts of the people, and has become a main part of China's political and economic life. The situation in which people all agree that reform is a necessity is greatly favorable to the unfolding of the political structural reform in China. Moreover, the economic structural reform has created the necessary conditions for the political structural reforms and has removed the foundation for the emergence and existence of outmoded things in our political structure. At the same time, the economic structural reform has also provided useful experience for political structural reform. In addition, the reform of the leadership system which began in 1982 has led to the promotion to leading posts of a number of cadres who are revolutionary, young, well educated, and have professional knowledge. Thus, this provides an organizational guarantee for carrying out political structural reform in China. [paragraph continues]

People attending the seminar held that the most important favorable condition for the political structural reform is the fact that since 1979, Deng Xiaoping has made a number of speeches on carrying out political structural reform, and these speeches will play a great role in unifying the thoughts of all people and cadres in the country.

However, the subject which was most controversial and most heatedly debated was the question of how to specifically carry out reforms of the political structure, and in particular, the question concerning the point of breakthrough for such reforms. Some held that separation of the party from government functions and the rational distribution of powers should be taken as the point of breakthrough in reforming the political structure. Only thus can the problem of overconcentration of power in the hands of the party be resolved. Others held that only by establishing a socialist system with a high degree of democracy, and correctly solving the questing of the relationship between democracy and centralization, can the goals of reforming the political structure attained. The great majority of the participants held that in carrying out political structural reforms it is essential to get a good grasp of two issues. Separation of party and government, and a high degree of democracy. This is because all other problems that need resolving derive from these two issues.

Feng Shengbao, deputy director of the Foreign Political System Research Center of the Diplomatic Institute, said that replacement of the government by the party is a kind of artisan method that has caused many unpleasant consequences: For instance, a high concentration of power; personality cult; the fact that the party was above the law and enjoyed concentrated power, with the result that the legal system could not be established; a sense of dependence was nourished in the cadres; and the system was purely upward in form. This state of affairs weakened party work. He said that the party's leadership should first be political leadership, and the party should not replace the administrative functions of the government. He held that it is necessary to establish the principle of socialist division of powers with checks and balances, and to bring into play the systems engineering role of the political structure. Professor Gao Fang stated that the main thing in reform of the political structure is to resolve the question of rational distribution of power, including that between party and government, between central authorities and the localities, and between the legislature and the judiciary. However, it is not an absolute division of power but rational apportioning. He stressed the leading role of such a reform measure among other reforms.

When discussing the question of how to achieve a high degree of democracy, the participants believed that democracy is a fundamental system of socialism. It embodies the nature of socialism and is the core of the political structural reform. Deputy researcher Tan Jian said that the goal of political structural reform is to build a socialist country with a high degree of democracy. This democracy includes: Making politics democratic and public, turning policymaking into a scientific process, making political activities into a legal system, and systematizing supervision of the power organs.

Professor Gao Fang said: In order to realize democracy in state and social life, it is first necessary to ensure inner-party democracy, and a way to ensure inner-party democracy is to give play to the role of the party's national congresses.

Boldly Exploring the Way To Build a Political Science System With Chinese Characteristics

Zhu Houze, director of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department, was invited to the seminar, and made a speech there. He said: Comrade Deng Xiaoping has spoken many times on the importance of political structure reform. Recently, he again made a point of stressing the necessity and urgency of this reform. Zhu expressed the hope that everyone would step up investigation and study; get hold of detailed materials; apply a Marxist-Leninist stance, viewpoint, and method; succeed in linking theory with reality; and carry out bold explorations with a scientific approach and rigorous work style. They should carry out research in may aspects, to build a political science system with Chinese characteristics. The participants believed that political science in China was developed to a new stage. In the last 3 months alone, SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO, the magazine ZHONGGUO SHEHUI KEXUE, and some young theoretical workers in Beijing have respectively held theoretical seminars on reform of the political structure. In August this year, Shenyang and Harbin will respectively hold such seminars. The Chinese Society for Political Studies and the Politics Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences have also planned to hold national theoretical and academic seminars on reform of the political structure.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON POLITICAL STRUCTURAL REFORM

HK220830 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 14 Jul 86 p 3

[Article by Bao Xinjian: "An Inquiry Into the General Goal of the Reform of China's Political Structural Reform"]

[Text] In carrying out any structural reform, we must first set a pattern for its general goal. Whether the pattern of the general goal is clear and correct and whether it is understood and consciously followed by those who take part in the reform, have a direct bearing on whether the reform will be smoothly carried out. Therefore, a task of first priority in carrying out our country's political structural reform at present must be to clarify the pattern of the general goal. The pattern for the goal of our reform should not be decided on at will in a subjective manner, but should reflect objective law. Generally speaking, setting the pattern for the political structural reform goal for a socialist country should be based on the following three aspects of objective reality: 1) The demand raised by our economic structural reform and by the reestablished pattern of our economic construction on the reform of our political structure; 2) the requirement on the essence of the political structural reform raised by our government and political systems of which the basic content is that the people are the masters of the country; and 3) the tremendous influence of the specific national environment, in particular the traditional ideology, on our political structure, which is also an objective factor that must be considered in setting the pattern of our political structural reform goal. Starting from these three aspects of objective reality, the general goal of our country's political structural reform at present, and in the future, should be as Comrade Dang Xiaoping pointed out: To continue to realize and perfect the democratization of the political life of theparty and state. Why should it be this ?

The all-round implementation of overall economic structural reform with strengthening the vitality of our enterprises as the key link, and the rapid development of the commodity economy, have fiercely pounded at and tested our existing political structure from the economy angle. In the face of this pounding and testing of the reform, some aspects of our political system, such as the setup of our organizations, the functions of our government, the quality of our cadres, and our leadership system and work style, have continued to show that they have various defects which make it hard for them to meet the demand of the objective situation of enlivening the economy at home and opening up to the outside world. The forms of these defects vary as departments and spheres vary, but viewed as a whole, they have all shown that there is a shortage of a high degree of democracy in the leadership and management of our economic life, unclear division of labor between party and government, and unclear separation between the functions of government and enterprises. All these have seriously hindered our enterprises from exercising their decision-making power and our laborers from giving play to their initiative and creativeness. The lack of democracy in our economic management makes it hard to exercise correct and effective centralization. Weak democracy in our economic management directly originates from the lack of democracy in our party's and state's political life. Therefore, the general goal of our political reform is to oppose and overcome bureaucracy, realize the democratization of our party's and state's leadership system, and thus strengthen democratic management in our economic life as a whole. This is the key to enlivening our enterprises and to the development of our country's overall economy.

Our's is a socialist country of people's democratic dictatorship in which the people are the masters of their country. This is the basic content of our country's state system. The question of what forms and measures should be adopt to enable the vast number of people to exercise their democratic rights as masters of their country, and to ensure that these rights are earnestly protected from encroachment, is a very practical and important question that we are faced with in carrying out political structural reform in our socialist country. It also comprises the overall contents for the development of the political system for a socialist country. Whether we can resolve this question satisfactorily has a direct bearing on ther realization and consolidation of our socialist democracy and the democratization of our socialist system. Lenin pointed out profoundly: "In order to thoroughly develop democracy," it was imperative to "find forms for this development" and "test these forms in practice." ("Selected Works of Lenin" Vol. 3, p 230) In general, our country's system of democracy is superior, but its actual structure and system still have various defects. As a result, under certain circumstances, there is no effective guarantee for the masses of people to exercise their rights as masters of their country. Therefore, perfecting socialist democracy in our political system is a great general goal that we should pursue in our country's political structural reform. The basic tasks in the development of socialist democracy in our political system should be to intensify the consolidation of our state organs according to the principle of democratic centralism, and to enable the people to better exercise their power to run their country. Our state organs consist of two mutually linked parts: The first is the organs of state power, namely the people's congresses at various levels and their standing organs; and the second is the state administrative organs, in other words, the organs at various levels that execute state power -- the People's Governments at various levels. In both parts, there is an urgent task now to realize socialist democratization.

In reforming the system of people's congresses, at present it is necessary to focus on solving practical problems in the following three spheres: 1) We should satisfactorily handle the relationship between strengthening the unified leadership of the ruling party and the earnest exercising of the people's supreme power. In exercising their due share of state power, a local People's Congress may run into conflicts with the party's line, principles or policies; with the resolutions or decisions of the local party committees; or even with the personal opinions of the committee secretaries. We should safeguard the power of people's deputies, but we should not weaken the leadership of the ruling party. This makes it imperative to present an appropriate form for relations between the party and governments. 2) Although we say that the people's congresses at various levels are organs of state power that represent the people's will, in reality, this role of these people's congresses has not been fully ensured. For this, there are causes related to concepts and also related to our structure and indeed system. 3) There are problems related tothe election of, supervision over and removal of, people's deputies by the people. In this area, in fact, we lack practical and thorough measures and there are still quite a few loopholes in some spheres. If we fail to solve the problems in this area, it will be impossible or us to perfect our People's Congress system. The general goal in reforming and perfecting our People's Congress system should be to really ensure our people's democratic rights in the political life of our state; to really ensure that the people's congresses and their standing organs "have very close and inseparable links with the masses and most of the people, links that can easily be checked and renewed," and that the members of these organs should be elected and changed according to the people's will rather than through bureaucratic procedures," and to enable these congresses to "combine the advantages of the parliamentary system with those of direct democracy. In other words, to combine legislative functions and the functions to administer law in the people's elected deputies" ("Selected Works of Lenin" Vol 3, p 309)

In a socialist society, the people run state affairs, realize their democratic position, and exercise their democratic rights, mainly through the people's governments at various levels. Therefore, the ability of various governments to execute the people's will loyally, serve the people wholeheartedly, and strengthen their organization and ideological education out of the basic interests and needs of the people, has a direct bearing on whether the people can actually exercise their democratic rights and whether these rights are guaranteed. The whole essence of the consolidation of people's governments is to solve the question of whether government workers are "servants of society" or "masters of society." For a long time, in our government organs, of various levels, there have been serious malpractices, duplicated departments, too many levels of organs, unclear division of duties of office, overstaffing and bureaucracy characterized by low work efficiency. Some government departments and cadres have pursued private ends with their power of office. All these have seriously hindered the realization of the people's will and interests. Analyzing these various kinds of malpractice, both from the angle of the structure and system, and from the angle of concepts and work style, shows that this is due to our failure to satisfactorily solve the problem related to "servants of society." Therefore, the general goal of the government structural reform should be to build executive organs that are historically most capable, most responsible and most effective in carrying out the popular will and serving the people.

Both in our economic structural reform and in our political structural reform, we encounter a very stubborn obstacle — the influence of feudalist ideology. Eliminating remnant feudalist ideology is not only a direct condition that ensures the smooth progress of the reform, but also a direct task in the reform in various spheres, particularly in our political structural reform. All the various defects in our country's political structure at present, whether those in our party and government organs, cadre systems, leadership system, and work style, or in the work style of party and government organs, are closely related to feudal ideology. Both bureaucracy and the exploiting of one's power of office to pursue one's private ends, which are the most typical abuses in our political system, stem from the feudalism of a small number of people. We can find the cause in the soil of corrupted concepts about "position" and "power" for the growth of all the corrupted factors in our structure and system that oppose the principles of the people being the masters. Remnant feudal ideology has permeated our political system. In carrying out our political structural reform, we must regard eliminating feudalist ideology as a general goal. This is an important constituent part of the general goal of the democratization of the political life of our party and state.

WANG RUOSHUI ARTICLE ON MARXIST PHILOSOPHY

OW221800 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 17 Jul 86 p 2

[Part 1 of 2-part article by Wang Ruoshui: "On the Marxist Philosophy of Man"; "Rewritten on the basis of several speeches the author made in 1985"]

[Text] The All-Round and Free Development of Man Is the Basic Principle of Communism.

When speaking of Marxism, people first think of class struggle and the proletarian dictatorship. Beginning in the 1950's, following the basic conclusion of class struggle, our party continued to launch a series of political movements in the name of class struggle and consolidation of the proletarian dictatorship. Finally, this brought about the 10-year internal disorder. Because of this, Marxism was mantled with a color of harshness and cruelty. However, the advent of the new period has placed before us the task of upholding and developing Marxism. The first step in doing this, I think, should be restudying Marxism, including Marxist philosophy, so as to comprehensively and accurately grasp it.

Without doubt, class struggle and the proletarian dictatorship make up the fundamental ideology of Marxism. According to Marx, however, both class struggle and the proletarian dictatorship are methods rather than goals. Marx' goal is to achieve the emancipation of the proletariat and all mankind and to realize communism. His philosophy is closely connected with this goal. It is not only materialist but also humanist.

We are now beefing up the publicity of the communist ideal. What is communism? The most popular explanation is: "From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs." How should we understand this? If we construe "from each according to his ability" as meaning "do whatever you are able to do" and "to each according to his needs" as meaning "you will be provided with whatever you need," our understanding will be too superficial. According to Marx' idea, communism should not only enable each and every member of society to contribute all that he can, but also cultivate, exploit, and develop everyone's capabilities. [paragraph continues]

The simple phrase "from each according to his ability" cannot denote this idea. The same is true for "to each according to his needs." When talking about needs, many people would think of eating dainties, living in exquisite building and villas, wearing high-quality clothes, having color TV sets, refrigerators, radio-cassette recorders, and washing machines at home, and riding in sedans when going out...Certainly, all these are man's needs, but if the needs are limited to these, some of the most affluent countries have already been able to satisfy their people's needs.

The needs of man Marx referred to are not only material but also spiritual. Needs, whether material or spiritual, are developing. For example, now tourism is very popular in the world. In the past, tourism was a matter for very few people; now it has become an activity of the masses — a material as well as spiritual enjoyment. This is a new social need that has appeared in the last several decades. In communist society, there will be a very big change in man's needs. Some of the needs will disappear, while many new and higher needs will come into being. Generally speaking, the needs at that time will be much, much richer than at present. Communist society should not only satisfy the needs of its members, but also develop and expand their needs. At that time, labor will become the first need of life. This is very important. The simple phrase "to each according to his needs" can in no way indicate all these, and moreover, not all needs can be met by distribution.

"From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs" was stressed by Marx in his "Critique of the Gotha Program." It was primarily aimed at explaining the principle of distribution in a communist society. As Marx and Engels regarded it, a statement that can best describe the basic characteristics of a communist society is a remark from "The Communist Manifesto": The free development of each individual is a requirement for the free development of all people." In his "Das Kapital," Marx repeatedly said that the fundamental principle of a communist society is "the full and free development of each individual." In 1894, after the death of Marx, someone asked Engels to write an inscription for the NEW ERA weekly (of course, the inscription should reflect the features of NEW ERA). Engels planned to look for an appropriate remark from Marx's works. He did not use "From each according to his ability, to each according to his needs." Instead, he decided to use the above-mentioned remark from "The Communisty Manifesto." In his letter, ("To Kaneipa" [0595 0355 1548] Engels said: "I could not find anything suitable but this remark."

From this we know that Marx and Engels attached great importance to this principle. However, over the years we have not properly publicized the principle. Why?

I think one of the major reasons could be that we have not fully understood it. What is "free development?" Won't everything be in a muddle if everyone develops freely? Although we do not completely negate individual's freedom, we do impose restrictions on the individual's freedom and emphasize the freedom of collectives and the state. We can easily understand accept the notion that the freedom of collective is a requirement for individual's freedom.

As a matter of fact, Marx and Engels did say: "The individual's freedom is possible only in a collective" ("The German Ideology"). But they also maintain that the reverse is also true, and this is something some of our comrades cannot understand.

Not only is studying the Marxist Philosophy of Man necessary in order to understand the communist basic principle "The complete free development of man," it also has practical importance in guiding current reform and socialist modernization efforts.

To understand these two issues we have to understand the Marxist philosphy of man.

Man and the World — Subject and Object

In "The German Ideology," Marx and Engels said that the method they used was "based on real people with life." They also said: "We aim at people engaging in actual activities." This kind of people are practical people and people of the society, and are entirely different from the abstract man mentioned by Feuerbach.

After man arrived on this world the first problem he had to solve was how to survive, or live. "In order to live man first needs clothes, food, and somewhere to live, as well as other things. Therefore, mankind's first activities were to produce the means to satisfy these needs, that is, to produce things needed for material life." These activities are the "basic requirements for all human history to take place." Without these production activities, not to mention other things, human society will perish.

Marx held that "the common characteristic of man is his free and conscious activities" ("Manuscript of the Economics and Philosophy of 1844"). The most fundamental form of these conscious activities is material production labor. For this reason, Marx and Engels said on other occasions that it is labor that distinguishes man from other animals. Mao Zedong also said that the characteristic that distinguishes man from all other beings is man's "Conscious dynamic role' ("On Protracted War"). This is in conformity with the concept about "free and conscious activities" asserted by Marx.

Some animals also perform labor. Examples are spiders and bees, but what they do is instinctive instead of conscious labor. "The skill of bees in building beehives shames many architect is wiser than the most skillful bee, in that he can build a beehive in his mind before he uses beeswax to actually build it...He not only bring about the transformation of natural matter but also achieves his own goals in the course of transforming it" "(Das Kapital"). Mao Zedong described this as "consciousness turning into matter," "while Marx called this "the realization of the target of labor [LAO DONG DI DUI XIANG HUA 0525 0520 4104 1417 6272 0553]" or "the materialization of subject [0031 7555 4104 3670 0553]. "Marx said that when man overcomes obstacles to achieve his goals, he is "bringing about by himself the materialization of subject, or achieving genuine freedom — and when this freedom finds expression in action, it is labor" ("The Manuscript on 1857-1858 Economics").

In society, man uses production tools to perform labor, transform nature, produce means of materials livelihood, and create material wealth so as to support his subsistence, nurture his posterity, and satisfy his needs. With the continuation of these activies generation after generation, the depth and breateh of man's activities to transform nature is changing more and more. The world we face today is no longer an undeveloped wild world, but a world of man and civilization.

Of the numerous things we can perceive in our daily life — such as houses, streets, vehicles, fields, tables, chairs, books, foods, household electric appliances, ... — is anything still in its purely natural form, without being processed or transformed artifically? The grain, vegetables, and fruits we eat are of strains cultivated by man rather than the primitive wild strains. Even the air we breathe is quite diffferent from that when the Industrial Evolution was at its threshold 200 years ago.

Confronted with the realistic world, is it adequate for us to simply repeat the general materialist theory that "matter is primary?" It is inadequate. What we should do is not only to understand the world, but also understand man. To understand man, we should not only see the relationship between matter and consciousness, but also look into the relationship between subject and object. Man is not only an object, but also a subject. This was perceived by Feuerbach, but he viewed man merely as a subject to understand the world, not as a subject transform the world. Because of this, in his view the objective world is one without man's practical activities and does not include the history of human society. Marx criticized Feuerbach, saying: "He did not realise that the perceptual world around him is by no means something that has existed and not changed since the world came into being, but a product of industrial and social development, a product of human history and the result of activities of the mankind of generation after generation" ("The German Ideology"). He also said the major defects of all previous materialisms, including Feuerbach's materialism, are "trying to perceive matters and reality from an objective point of view or directly through the senses," but not "through a subjective point of view" ("On Feuerbach's Outline"). This is rather difficult to understand. Since materialism tells us to view problems from an objective point of view, why did Marx say we should perceive them from a subjective viewpoint? This has something to do with incorrect translation. The word "subjective" should have been translated as "subject." It is said as opposed to "object," mentioned in previous paragraphs. What Marx really meant is: It is correct that actual matters are objects, but, over and above this, we should also see people's activities in real life and realize that actual matters are products of human activities, which are the subject aspect of actual matters. That is, in common language, we should see people as well as matters, and see people through matters. A desk is an object, but desks did not exist until men created them to satisfy their needs. Through a desk we should see man's objectives, wisdom, and labor, and realize that a desk is just "humanized nature" or "a materialized subject."

Therefore, the Marxist world outlook actually includes a perception of man. This is a world with man, not a world without man. The world (here refers to the earth) has been like this since it came into being. This world, which has been changed by mankind, has again become an object for man to study and reform. Thus, the original relationship between man and nature (nature independently existed before mankind came into being) has gradually become a relationship between man and the products created by man himself, and man has reformed himself in the course of reforming the world. This is history. Without mentioning the world's historical development there is no way to explain man in real life, and without making reference to man's actual activities there is no way to explain the real world. Marx put man in the centr of the world; examined nature, society, and man as a collective object; and regarded the world as a man's world. In this sense, the real world is not only an object, but a subject at the same time.

Man's Needs — Existence, Comfort, Development

How did man's needs develop? In his "On the Level of Needs," Maslow, a representative modern behavioral scientist of the West, maintained that there were five levels of man's basic needs, namely physiological needs, security needs, socializing needs, needs for respect, and the need to realize his dream. After this theory was introduced into China, some people thought it was something new. Others thought it was heresy. In fact, classic Marxist works had long incorporated the theory about needs. In certain areas Maslow's theory was identical with Marx' viewpoints. However, Maslow focused on the motive of individual behavior, with the aim of regulating individual behavior, whereas Marx focused on macroscopic historical phenomena and observed the development of man's needs along with the development of social productivity, with the aim of achieving his ideal — social revolution.

Marxism divides man's needs into three levels: existence, comfort, and development. In light of this viewpoint, Engels divided most generalized means of living into three types: means for existence, means for comfort, and means for development ("Natural Dialectics").

Primitive man's needs were very simple. His basic needs were the material means of living essential for his existence (including the existence of his offspring), and because of the limits of his capabilities, he managed to obtain the basic means of simple living. As social productivity grew, so did man's needs. The need for comfort gradually developed after the needs for existence were basically fulfilled. Today man eats not simply to sustain his life and physical strength, but he also wants his food to be delicious. Man wears clothes not simply for covering his body or keeping warm, but he also wants his clothing to be of good quality and to have the right style and color with all the necessary trimmings to show his bearing, status, dignity, and esthetic requirements. Furthermore, man also needs certain other things, including luxuries, that have absolutely nothing to do with his existence. Needs for existence have thus developed into needs for comforts.

Needs for comfort were something that occurred after human society entered into the civilized age. Some philosophers maintain that the development of such needs was the cause of the degeneration of simple social conduct and the demoralization of the people. They thought that every effort should be made to control the desire for comfort. Lao Zi of ancient China said: "No sin is greater than indulging in fulfilling desires, no misfortune is greater than being discontent, and no misdeed is greater than being greedy." He said man should return to this natural state and "have no personal belongings or desire." Mo Zi [founder of the Mohist School — a school of thought in the spring-autumn and warring states period, 1770-221 B.C.] encouraged ascetic practices, maintaining that a man should only satisfy his most basic needs and that anything more than that would be a waste that must be stopped. In his article "The Impropriety of Pleasure Seeking" [fei le 7236 2867], he said: "Being dedicated to the state's cause, a benevolent person seeks nothing that is pleasing to his eyes, entertaining to his ears, delicious to his taste, or accommodating to his comfort. A benevolent person never seeks personal comfort at the expense of the people's food and clothing." [paragraph continues]

The cynics and stoics of ancient Greece and Rome maintained that unless people were able to control their physical desires with reason they could not acquire spiritual tranquility and freedom. These two schools of thought maintained that man's natural state is the best and that natural state is a primitive state in which productivity is low and man's needs extremely simple. As such, they placed their hope of realizing their social ideals on returning to the primitive age, instead of looking forward to the future. As for some ascetic religions, they place their hope for happiness on the Kingdom of Heaven.

During the early period of the proletarian movement, there were also communist ideas that encouraged universal asceticism and egalitarianism. Marx criticised these ideas as "coarse communism" that "discredited in the abstractive sense the culture and the civilised world as a whole" (that is simplistic, total negation — quoter), and which was a retrogression to becoming "poor and wantless people" ("The 1844 Manuscript of Economic Philosophy"). Marx maintained that the more mature communism (such as that advoated by Owen) "directly originated from French materialism," which acknowledged "the rationality of pleasure-seeking." He said that this type of materialism is in line with humanism (see "The Sacred Family"). Marx ridiculed the idea that the "natural state is the genuine state of human nature," saying that this is "a conjecture that was popular during the 18th century" ("The Philosophic Declaration of the French Historical School of Thought"). He maintained that man's nature developed in society, that his desire for pleasure is social and natural, and that it is unnatural to suppress this desire simplistically. He also maintained that if a man only satisfies his most basic needs, such as food and water, and gives up other human activities and pleasures, then his functions are nothing more than those of an animal (see "Manuscript of Philosophy"). Despite the fact that uncontrolled desire for comfort causes crime, Engels pointed out: "Despicable greed has served as the motive force of the civilized age from the very first day of its existence to today" ("The Origin of Family, Private Ownership, and State"). As Hegel maintained; "Evils are a form of expression of the motive force of historical development" ("Ludwig Feuerbach and the End of Classical German Philosophy"). It is a pedantic practice to use moral reasons to discredit the historical progress.

In addition to material enjoyment, there is also spiritual and cultural enjoyment. Overall, spiritual enjoyment is on a higher level than material enjoyment, and within spiritual enjoyment there are different levels (for example, the appreciation of popular music and that of classical music). To get enjoyment of the higher level, one must have the capacity (such as artistic and cultural training) to enjoy it. This capacity, like man's creativeness, must be cultivated. By cultivating this capacity we will be able to turn to the higher level of man's needs, disply our vitality, develop our potential, and realise ourselves.

What is "self-realisation?" To explain this, we must first understand the pair of categories: "potential" and "realisation." This idea can be traced back to Aristotle: In modern times Hegel also especially expanded it. According to it, the change and development of things are a process from "potential" to "realisation," or in other words, from possibility to reality. [paragraph continues]

Egg is egg, and chicken is chicken. How can an egg become a chicken? Because the egg (we are referring to, of course, a fertilized egg) itself contains the internal cause for becoming a chicken. Therefore, an egg is a "potential" chicken, while a chicken is a "realized" egg. Similarly, how can flowers become fruits? Because flowers are the "potential" of fruits, while fruits are the "realization" of flowers.

All creatures, upon birth, have an impulse to realize their potential. Of all creatures, man has the greatest potential. Man's intelligence, wisdom, and creativeness are not manifested at birth — they are developed through study and labor in a given environment (both natural and social). To bring out man's potential is "self-realization." The needs of self-realization, that is, the needs of development, are the highest needs of men. The so-called "complete and free development of man" refers exactly to the complete and free development of men's potential and man's realization of himself.

People think that communism is a society in which "one can have whatever one wants" and all people enjoy the material comforts of a millionaire. This is a common misunderstanding. Its mistakes lies not in its overestimation of communism — on the contrary, it is a mistake of underestimation, because the measure of value used here is still that of capitalism. Marx' focus of attention is not "material" but "man," not comforts but creation (creation itself is also an enjoyment). He believed that a new type of person, an "enriched man," will emerge in a communist society, who is different from either a "poor man" or "rich man."

In the '20's Lu Xun said of this century: "Our top priorities of the moment are first, to survive; second, to have adequate food and clothing; and third, to develop." We were a poor and weak nation at that time and the most urgent matter was the question of survival — not only the survival of individuals, but also that of the nation. To safeguard national survival we carried out a protracted revolutionary war. To solve the problem of people's livelihood we carried out land reform and years of production and construction. Today, the problem of food and clothing is basically solved: Not only are people able to survive, they are by and large, living a life of plenty.

Then, does this mean that the question of survival is completely solved? I think not. The needs of survival are also developing. The modern man not only wants to live, he also wants to live a long and healthy life. This in turn requires adequate and rational nutrition, all kinds of medical care, the absence of environmental pollution, safety protection, and so on. We have so far not solved all these problems, for some of which the world has yet to come up with a solution. However, so far as the basic means of livelihood (food and clothing) are concerned, we have solved the problem. China is undergoing a transition from "a sufficient-in-cloth-and-food type" to "a comfortably-well-off type." This means that needs in livelihood and enjoyment will also further develop. The needs for material enjoyment, for cultural life, and for appreciation of beauty were suppressed over a long period in the past. At present these needs have been awakened and developed. This is an inevitable trend following economic development. (to be continued)

CONCEPTS CHANGE DUE TO OPENING UP, REFORMS

HK221303 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 22 Jul 86 p 8

["Excerpts" of article by Tang Chuangxin, published in SHEHUI KEXUE BAO (SOCIAL SCIENCE NEWS): "Nine Major Changes in Concepts in China"]

[Text] Since the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and of invigorating the domestic economy as well as of the reform of the economic structure in our country, what changes have occurred in the ideological domain? To put it briefly, there are approximately nine areas where huge changes have brought about great impact in our entire society.

First, the change in the concept of class struggle in the socialist society. It led to a shift on the focus of all work in our entire country, allowing the national economic construction to march on the path towards four modernizatons.

Second, the change in the concept of philosophy. The discussion on "practice is the sole standard for verifying truth" thoroughly repudiated the erroneous viewpoint of the "two whatevers." It enabled the emancipation of the people's minds and the gradual creation of an atmosphere of democracy and prosperity in all areas of work.

Third, the change in the concept on the classification of intellectuals. As a component part of the working class, intellectuals' social status has been transformed and they are now playing an enormous role in society.

Fourth, the change in the concept of culture, moving from the traditional closed door concept to the modern day opening up concept. China needs the ideological concept of reform and opening up in order to smash up the cultural concept of blind repudiation of foreign things and of customary conservation. No more can resist the charge of "modernism" upon our society.

Fifth, the change in the concept on the status of science and technology. In the past, the emphasis was on "the more people there are, the easier it is to do things," "the more people there are, the greater the force." In recent years, "science and technology are productive forces, and are very important productive forces" -- this idea has been widely stressed and accepted, and greatly promoted the transformations in production and life styles.

Sixth, the change in the concept of talented people. People have gradually realized: the question of talents is a question related to the demise and prosperity of a country. "Respect knowledge and respect people of talents" is now a well-accepted adage.

Seventh, the change in the concept of moral values. The pursuit of a prosperous economic life through legitimate channels is no longer criticized.

Political authority and power are no longer the subject of blind faith and adoration as people attach more importance to self-value.

In the process of economic work and production, people have realized that competition is the distinctive rule in the commodity economy and that it is not an immoral act.

Eighth, the concept of information is highly valued. Information is a resource like materials and energy and can be fully utilized and shared by all. The use of information to develop production, make a living, and to become prosperous have become the open secret and guideline for not a few enterpreneurial leaders.

Ninth, the change in the concept of time. All work should attach importance to the concept of time and great efforts are being made to change some of the existing traditional habits and customs in the country. The rhythm of people's life is being widely accelerated.

GUANGMING RIBAO ARTICLE ON COMMUNIST IDEALS

HK181053 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 pl

[Commentator's article: "Ideals To Be Attained at Different Stages"]

[Text] To build socialist spiritual civilization, we should bring up a new generation of socialist people who have ideals, morals, and culture and observe discipline. Education in ideals is the most important What are the contents of our ideals? In our propaganda work carried out in recent years, we have talked a lot about communist ideals. It is, of course, right to do so. However, when we are talking about ideals, should we talk only about communist ideals? Should we not mention other kinds of ideals? For example, the 12th party congress proposed that we should build our country into a modernized, highly civilized, and highly democratic socialist power. Are these not our ideals? We also say that we should invigorate the Chinese nation in order to make our motherland and nation prosperous, our country powerful, and our people rich. Is this not our ideal? There is no doubt that what we mentioned above are the contents of our ideals. It is obvious that our ideals should be attained at different stages.

Lenin said: ("Complete Works of Lenin," Vol 1, p 393) Communist ideals are based on the scientific delineation and analysis of the contradictions in human society and are the inexorable objective reflection of social development. After their spread to China, communist ideals have become common objectives of struggle of tens of thousands of communists and progressive figures. In the dark old China where conditions were extremely arduous, revolutionaries of the older generation feared neither hardship nor sacrifice. They worked together with one heart and fought courageously. What did they rely upon? They relied upon communist ideals as their mental support. Our current socialist new China was the result of the victory of their struggle. Today, while carrying out our socialist modernization program, communism is still the direction of our advance and our ultimate goal of struggle.

Communism is our ultimate goal, which cannot be attained overnight. Protracted efforts should be exerted by people of successive generations in order to attain the goal. To attain this ultimate goal, we should achieve our immediate, mid-term, and long-term goals of struggle. We should say that attainment of these goals of struggle is also our ideal. These goals of struggle are also our ideals.

In other words, different ideals should be attained at different stages: 1) Striving for communism all our life is our long-range ideal; 2) invigorating the Chinese nation so that our country becomes powerful and our people rich is the common ideal of all Chinese people.

The goal of making our country powerful and our people rich can only be attained step by step. Due to the successful implementation of a series of guiding principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, 1 billion Chinese people have basically solved the problem of having enough to eat and wear. However, in a very small number of localities, a handful of people have not yet solved the problem. Progressing from having enough to eat and wear to having more than needed, to attainment of the comfortably well-off level, and finally to the well-to-do level is the trend of enhancement of the people's living standard. Enhancement of the people living standard depends upon the development of the economic construction and various undertakings of the state. Regarding the economic construction of our country, by the end of this century our gross industrial and agricultural output value will quadruple that of the early 1980's and attain a comfortably well-off level. During the early 2020's, we will attain a middle level of development. In the mid-2000's, we will reach the level of developed countries. Of course, in the process of carrying out economic construction, we should simultaneously grasp the building of the two civilizations. In the meantime, we should also do well in promoting our socialist democracy. We should build our country into a modernized, highly civilized, and highly democratic socialist power. Although attainment of this goal does not mean that we have entered communist society, it is a process we should pass in order to attain the final goal of communism. It is a specific task to be completed in a fairly long period of time in the course of struggle for communism.

A thousand-li journey starts with the first step. To attain the long-range ideals of communism, we should do well in materializing the four modernizations program and in carrying out reform now, and in a certain period of time, in the future. This is our specific task. If we fail to do well in the four modernizations program and reform, the realization of communism is only empty talk. If we forget the ultimate goal of communism, we will lose our bearings in our present work. It would be impossible for us to do well in the four modernizations program and reform. Therefore, people who have communist ideals should turn the attainment of the long-range ideals into their specific actions in the current four modernizations program and reform. Only by doing well in carrying out reform, in overcoming defects of the old system that are not in accord with the development of productive forces, and in establishing a Chinese-style socialist economic system that is full of vigor and vitality, we can vigorously develop social productive forces and make our country powerful and our people rich. Only by doing so will those who already have communist ideals further strengthen their belief in communism, and more and more people educated with facts will foster their communist ideals.

We might as well review history and see how our intellectuals embarked on the path advancing from partiotism to communism. When our country was invaded by foreign imperialism and feudal oppression ran rampant at home, many intellectuals wished to "rescue the nation through science" and "save the country through education." They also wished that our country would become powerful, and our people prosperous. However, under those historical conditions, "rescuing the nation through science" and "saving the country through education" could not be realized. Therefore, many of them embarked on the revolutionary road, accepted Marxism-Leninism and fostered communist ideals. [paragraph continues]

It was obvious that their ideals of invigorating the motherland and the nation were a prerequisite and basis for fostering communist ideals, and a bridge leading to communist ideals. Today, the slogan of "invigorating the Chinese nation" is encouraging the people. Making our country powerful and our people rich are not only the purpose of our party, but also common ideals of the broad masses of people in our country . Like communist ideas, such patriotic ideas are also our powerful spiritual motive force for our four modernizations program and reform. Such spiritual strenghth should not be underestimated. Propelled by the practice of the four modernizations program and reform under the leadership of the party, patriotic ideas of many people can be turned into communist ideas. Of course, a process and time are needed to bring about such a transformation. Some people might change faster, whereas others might change slower. This is a natural phenomenon. We should let people realize such changes through their own practical experience, their own thoughts and feelings, and independent thinking. Here lies the crux of the problem.

In a word, while providing education in ideals during the course of building socialist spiritual civilization, we should pay attention to the contents of our ideals to be attained at different stages. We should integrate communism with patriotism and combine ideals with reality. We should turn our ideals into our current specific acts, and do well the current work of promoting the four modernizations program and reform.

DEPUTY MINISTER SPEAKS ON CULTURAL REFORM

OW220827 Shanghai WEN HUI BAO in Chinese 17 Jul 86 p 2

[By WEN HUI BAO reporter Tang Sifu from Beijing]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jul — How will the leading organs of the Ministry of Culture change their function during the new period? At the closing ceremony of the national conference of the directors of the cultural departments (bureaus), held today, Gao Zhanxiang, vice minister of culture, answered this question. He said that the leading organs of the ministry must show major changes in their thininking, work, and leadership in order to meet the needs in giving guidance, doing overall planning, formulating rules and regulations, and providing supervision.

Gao Zhanxiang said: Efforts must be made to strengthen our strategic concept and study the strategy of the development of culture, so as to bring about coordinated developments in the cultural, economic, and political fields. In the past, we have expended too much of our manpower, material, and financial resources in organizing meetings, joint performances, and other activities. From now on, the leadership of the ministry will devote most of its time to conducting study and research and tackling actual problems. We will still carry out all types of activities, but we must make improvements and concentrate our efforts to organize those activities that are of high quality, great impact, exemplary, inspirational and help promote culture.

Gao Zhanxiang said: Over the past few years incidents concerning the violation of right in writing were often reported. Therefore, we must use our laws and policy to protect literary and art works. This is the key to helping our literary and art works flourish. The Ministry of Culture must solve existing problems in cultural work through legislation and policy and change its work method to solving one problem at a time and on a small scale.

He said: The Ministry of Culture will boldly try to achieve simpler administration and decentralization. It should feel at ease and let lower-level units have a free hand. China is a vast country with many nationalities. People of various nationalities in China have different cultural backgrounds. It is impossible to effect centralization once again. If the whole nation is centralized in its actions, its control will be tight and rigid and its rules will be specific. Thus, lower level units are unable to do things freely. An important task for the leadership of the Ministry of Culture is to vitalize the basic-level cultural units.

Gao Zhanxiang said: The Ministry of Culture's policy in dealing with those who have committed errors in the course of making reform is to "learn lessons and forgive them." He said: Our past experience in carrying out reform is valuable to us. In tackling the problems and remedying unfairness that is uncovered in the course of reform, the Ministry of Culture should give proper guidance and adopt measures to handle cases individually.

DISTRIBUTION OF VIDEOTAPES CLOSELY CONTROLLED

OW181734 Beijing XINHUA in English 1426 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 18 (XINHUA) — The Chinese film distribution and exhibition corporation will be the sole distributor of prerecorded Chinese and foreign art videocassettes in China, officials of the Ministry of Radio, Film and Television said today.

In addition, they said, no art videocassettes produced overseas may be sold, rented or shown in public without ministry approval.

The new rules, effective September 1, are primarily designed to prevent the proliferation of pornography in China, observers here have said.

The Chinese film distribution and exhibition corporation plans to produce 100 prerecorded films, including some American, Japanese and Hong Kong films.

DENG PUFANG AT BEIJING STATION CEREMONY

OW221134 Beijing XINHUA in English 1124 GMT 22 Jul 86

[Text] Beijing, July 22 (XINHUA) -- The China Welfare Fund for the Handicapped (CWFH) today presented 74 wheelchairs to 64 railway stations to help handicapped passengers. Speaking at a ceremony held to present these wheelchairs at Beijing railway station this afternoon, Deng Pufang, director-in-chief of the CWFH, said that this action was aimed to provide special service for the passengers who are disabled or have difficulties getting about. He hoped it would arouse the whole society to care for and help the handicapped people overcome difficulties.

Wang Zhen, honorary director-in-chief of the fund, was present at the ceremony. He noted that the handicapped people are one of the forces to revitalize the country, and urged all circles to create favorable conditions for them to participate in social activities. Vice-Minister of Railways Luo Yunguang said that his ministry would purchase more wheelchairs and provide other service facilities for the handicapped passengers.

These wheelchairs had been donated to the CWFH by Dr Ming-yu Tsai, chairman of the Mingyu Cultural Foundation in Japan.

RURAL SUPPLY, MARKETING COOPERATIVES DEVELOP

HK180932 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jul 86 p 2

[Newsletter by reporter Yang Chuanchun: "Rural Supply and Marketing Cooperatives Gradually Resume the Character of Enterprises Run by Local People"]

[Excerpts] Since the reform in 1982, the rural supply and marketing cooperatives have gradually resumed the character of "mass organizations, flexible operations, and democratic management." The vast number of supply and marketing cooperatives at the grass-roots level lay emphasis on overcoming "bureaucratic style in commerce" and enhancing their capability to serve the development of rural commodity production, thus increasing their vigor.

The rural supply and marketing cooperatives were formerly cooperative commerce run by local people. Later, they were gradually turned into "government-run" enterprises. Beginning in 1982, by sorting out shares and increasing the number of shares, the 35,000-plus supply and marketing cooperatives at the grass-roots level and the 600,000-plus supply and cooperative stores throughout the country carried out a reform aimed at resuming the character of "mass organizations, flexible operations, and democratic management". It was verified that cooperative members had paid 360 million yuan for shares in the supply and marketing cooperatives. The government also paid retroactively 120 million yuan in bonuses. Consequently, the peasants vied with one another to become shareholders. The number of peasant households buying shares has now reached 140 million, accounting for 85 percent of the total number of peasant households. The supply and marketing cooperatives have also reformed the labor and personnel system and perfected the system of congresses of cooperative members. Over the past few years, they have recruited over 270,000 contract peasants, and over 90,000 peasants have become leaders of the county federations of supply and marketing cooperatives, the supply and marketing cooperatives at the grass-roots levels, and the boards of directors or supervisory committees. [passage omitted]

The expanding scale of operations and the improve methods of service have stimulated rural commodity production and developed the supply and marketing cooperatives themselves. The fixed assets of the rural supply and marketing cooperatives have increased from over 9.9 billion yuan in 1980 to 17.9 billion yuan at present. Their storage facilities, transport vehicles, and service space have increased substantially.

Commentator's Article

HK180938 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jul 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Support Reform of the Supply and Marketing Cooperative"]

[Text] After carrying out reforms for more than 4 years, the rural supply and marketing cooperatives have gradually resumed their character as cooperative commerce "run by the local people." They are playing an ever increasing role in commodity circulation and information exchange. Practice shows that so long as the supply and marketing cooperatives persist in carrying out reforms and so long as governments at all levels and all trades and professions lend active support, the supply and marketing cooperatives will be able to give full play to their capabilities in the circulation field.

Having developed over the past 30-odd years, the rural supply and marketing cooperatives have built up a contingent of over 4 million workers and staff members, established a complete set of operational measures, and set up more than 600,000 stores. Following the efforts to sort out shares and to increase the number of shares, the fixed assets and the circulating capital of the supply and marketing cooperatives have increased substantially. It should not be denied, however, that the "bureaucratic style of commerce" developed over the years has not been completely eradicated and that the outdated system still considerably hinders the supply and marketing cooperatives from improving their service quality and developing their business operations. Only by persisting in reforming the management structure, the organizational system, and the methods of operation is it possible for the personnel, technology, facilities, and capital of the supply and market cooperatives to make greater contributions to the development of rural commodity production.

To enable the supply and marketing cooperatives to play a great role, it is insufficient to rely on the efforts of the supply and marketing cooperatives alone. All trades and professions should notice their importance and actively support their reform. At present, the supply and marketing cooperatives particularly need the vigorous support and help from governments at all levels and state-run commerce. In some localities, the governments do not sufficiently respect the peasants' right as the master of their own affairs. They wilfully interfere in the business operations of the supply and marketing cooperatives and transfer or dismiss at will the leaders of the supply and marketing cooperatives elected by democratic means. In business competition with the supply and marketing cooperatives, state-run commercial enterprises in some localities do not treat the other party as equal. They infringe upon the business right of the supply and marketing cooperatives by trying every means possible to maintain their monopoly over profitable items and to shift to others items that are unprofitable or yield little profit. Failing to have a free hand in their work and indiscriminately apportioning heavy expenses have also become an obstacle to the supply and marketing cooperatives responsible for their own profits and losses in the course of carrying out the reform.

Production and circulation act on each other. On the one hand, expansion of the circulation field depends on development of production, namely, the ample supply of commodities; on the other hand, only when products are absorbed in the course of circulation is it possible for production to expand and develop, which means it is necessary for goods to flow freely. A conspicuous contradiction now is that a closed circulation structure with few channels and many links is playing a tremendous role in obstructing the development of commodity production. For this reason, we should actively support the reform of the rural supply and marketing cooperatives with the attitude of supporting reform in the circulation field.

Allowing the rural supply and marketing cooperatives to play a greater role does not mean that we should define the status of the rural supply and marketing cooperatives as the "main channel of circulation," as has been done in the past. [paragraph continues]

The reform of the circulation field is aimed at establishing a new and open circulation structure with multiple channels and fewer links. We should help all kinds of circulation channels give full play to their capabilities and develop in the course of competition.

RENMIN RIBAO ON RECONSTRUCTION OF TANGSHAN

HK190723 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jul 86 pp 1, 2

["Feature Story" by reporter Ai Feng: "The Rise of the New Tangshan"]

[Excerpts] Ten years have passed very quickly. Reflecting on the past in light of the present, we shall find that each brick, each piece of stone, each blade of glass, and each tree manifests this truth: The CPC is wise and great, the socialist system is incomparably more superior, the PLA is loyal and reliable, and the people who have taken their fate in their own hands are invincible.

— Quoted from the "inscription of the Tangshan earthquake monument"

The serious Tangshan earthquake which shook the world occurred exactly 10 years ago. People have again shown great concern for this piece of land which experienced an extremely tragic catastrophe.

The following records are found in the world's history of earthquakes:

In 1600, the earthquake in Kriti, Greece, destroyed that prehistorically civilised area; in 1906, the earthquake in San Francisco, the United States, took away the vitality of that city for more than 30 years; in 1923, a serious earthquake occurred in Honshu, Japan and it took 20 years for Tokyo and Yokohama to restore themselves....

The Tangshan earthquake caused disastrous damage unprecedented in history. It destroyed a modern city with heavy industry, a city that had a 100-year history and a population of 1 million. At present, in the 10th year since the earthquake, the city solemnly declares that:

"The task of rebuilding Tangshan has basically been complete!"

"A brand-new Tangshan has again stood up loftily in eastern Hebei of China!"

Standing up Again After the Catastrophe

The unforgettable year of 1976. The decade of turmoil had already made the entire Chinese nation exhausted, but a handful of careerists were still beating hard the battle drums. Just at that time, nature became "enraged."

On the 53d second, at 0342 in the morning of 28 July 1976, a devastating earthquake of 7.8 scale and of 11 at the epicenter, like the explosion of 100 atomic bombs of the kind dropped in Hiroshima, occurred 11 kilometers underground near Tangshan and Fengnan, a densely populated area!

"Tangshan has been levelled to the ground!" These are the first words reported tearfully by post-quake hero Li Yulin and others, who quickly drove over 400 kilometers to Beijing, to the central leaders at Zhongnanhai.

Statistics released later showed that damage caused by the earthquake which extensively affected the Beijing-Tianjin area are:

dead — 242,769 persons; seriously wounded -- 164,851 persons.

In Tangshan: 7,200 complete families died; over 1 million families had members killed; 2,652 children below 16 years old became orphans; 895 elderly people lost all their children; 2,817 persons became cripples.

97 percent of the above-ground buildings and 55 percent of the production equipment were destroyed.

Traffic, water supplies, power supplies, and telecommunications were all suspended. Calculable direct economic losses amounted to over 3 billion yuan at a minimum. [passage omitted]

Calling on You, New Tangshan

Tangshan was not "wiped off from the earth" as some foreigners put it. Ten years since then, a complete and new Tangshan has emerged, like the point of an awl sticking out through a bag, at the foot of Dacheng Shan and on the banks of Dou He. Its appearance after the disaster has attracted many visitors at home and abroad. [passage omitted]

Let us also look at the following figures:

In the last 10 years of reconstruction, a total construction area of more than 18 million square meters has been completed, as compared with only 13 million of the old Tangshan.

New residential areas of 11.2 million square meters have been built. Two hundred and twenty-six thousand households have moved into new houses, a number greatly exceeding the original number of 163,000 households. They account for more than 98 percent of the total number of households. [passage omitted]

Evidently, history has painted a magnificent page for yesterday's Tangshan. Let us see what brilliant picture it will paint in the coming decade!

RENMIN RIBAO URGES MORE TECHNOLOGY EXPORTS

HK190539 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 13 Jul 86 p 2

["Special Commentary" by Zhao Zhongsan: "Actively Expand Technology Exports"]

[Text] It is pointed out in the CPC Central Committee's suggestions on the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" that in order to solve the problem of increasing exports and earning more foreign exchange, which is of crucial importance to the overall situation of the country's modernization, it is necessary to actively expand technology exports. The purpose of this important decision is to speed up the country's four modernizations and to improve the country's international standing.

The export of technology is a form of technology transfer and an important means by which countries carry out technological exchanges among themselves. This also happened in ancient times. The Chinese nation is both hard-working and intelligent. Scientific and technological development in ancient China has a special place in the world's scientific and technological development. The introduction of gunpowder, the compass, printing, and papermaking, which are commonly referred to as China's four major inventions, to Europe had significantly contributed to speeding up the rise of a modern civilization there. The introduction of iron casting porcelain, and silk (sericulture and the production of textile goods) eastward to Japan and Korea by sea and westward to Europe via Arabia on land had contributed to the world's scientific and technological development. In fact, the famous "silk road" was one along which technology was exported and transferred. Thus, we can proudly say that our ancestors had already begun exporting technology in ancient times. However, protracted feudal rule, the implementation of a closed-door policy, and an anti-foreign attitude prevented China from carrying out technological exchanges with foreign countries and prevented progress in science and technology, with the result that modern China was very backward scientifically and technologically compared with other countries. Since its liberation, China has made considerable progress in science and technology. However, there is still considerable distance between China and advanced countries. As a result of the "10 years of turmoil," this distance has become even greater. Thus, in the course of the reform of the economic structure, which is developing in depth, it is necessary to strengthen scientific and technological exchanges in order to shorten the distance between our country and the developed countries and to catch up with, or even surpass, the scientifically and technologically advanced countries.

Generally speaking, China is quite backward in science and technology. However, this does not mean that it is backward in every field. In many fields, China has developed many unique types of technology which are up to the world's advanced standards or even better. Chinese technology and its technological products and technological service have very great competitive power on the international technology market. For example, China's blast furnace coal-powder spray technology, its top-heated hot blast stoves, its two-stage method for the fermentation of vitamin C, its new strains of hybrid paddy, its emulsified dynamite, its bismuth germanite crystals, and its carrier rockers have all been put on the international market. This shows that China has great potential for exporting technology, advanced technology in particular. Since 1979, more than 1,000 technological achievements have received national invention awards. They mean great wealth and can give a push to the country in its bid to join the world's advanced countries.

In recent years, as a result of rapid scientific and technological development, international technology has been rapidly expanding and business on the international technology market has been brisk. The total volume of international technology trade was $2 billion in 1965. It rose to $11 billion in 1975 and to $50 billion in 1985. In these 20 years, it increased 25 times at an average annual growth rate of 16.3 percent. The average annual growth rate of the total volume of world trade was only 3.3 percent within this period. By enthusiastically expanding technology exports, China is adapting itself to the world's rapid scientific and technological development.

While we are opening up the country to the world, revitalizing the domestic economy, and carrying out the reform of the economic structure, we can acquire the following benefits by expanding technology exports:

First, we can readjust the export product mix and gain entrance to the international market. China's export products in the past were mostly material products. Few of them were intellectual products. Most of these material products were mechanical or electrical appliances, agricultural products, native products, and handicrafts. This export product mix has affected our ability to dominate the market and to make our place in it more important. By expanding technology exports, we can readjust our export product mix, make our place in the international market more important, and dominate the international market.

Second, we can derive better economic results from technology exports and enhance our ability to earn foreign exchange. The four modernizations must be financed with much foreign exchange. Technology, as a resource or a source of wealth, can be traded for more foreign exchange than material goods. By exporting those types of technology that are suitable for export, we can attain better economic results and earn more foreign exchange to meet the urgent needs of the four modernizations.

Third, we can participate in the international technological competition and accelerate the country's scientific and technological development. Competition is a driving force. International technological competition can give impetus to various countries' scientific and technological takeoff. By expanding our technology exports and by directly competing with the advanced countries on the international technology market, we can develop our strong points, overcome our shortcomings, introduce a favorable environment for technological development, and encourage the development and perfection of new technology. In addition, we can also assimilate the advanced technology developed by other countries and speed up the four modernizations.

Fourth, we can train and produce a team of leading technological workers. Under the prolonged influence of a closed door policy, some scientific or technological workers in the country care very little about exports. Since they can compare their achievements with nothing, they either improperly belittle themselves or are conceited. In expanding technology exports, it is important that we give people a better idea of the need to export technology and set ambitious targets. By doing this, we can arouse our scientific and technological workers' enthusiasm for developing new technology, enable them to be more creative, and facilitate the growth of our scientific research teams while steadily expanding technology exports.

And fifth, we can transform our international image. By actively expanding technology exports, we can shorten the distance between the country and the world's advanced countries and help the former gradually join the latter. In addition, we can also transform the country's international image in the eyes of other peoples and improve its international standing. In ancient times, our ancestors presented "the four major inventions" to the world. Now, as outstanding members of the Chinese nation, we are confident that we can present even more advanced types of technology to the world. The "kingdom of bicycles" will certainly develop into a scientifically and technological advanced great country.

NONGMIN RIBAO URGES INCREASING PEASANT INCOMES

HK180807 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "A Question Not To Be Ignored — On Increasing Peasants' Incomes"]

[Text] According to a survey report drawn up recently by the departments concerned, this year some localities of our country have seen symptoms of a trend that peasants' incomes are going down. This is a question not to be ignored in our present rural work. The parties concerned should attach great importance to the question and take strong measures to deal with it promptly.

Since the 3d Plenum of the 11th CPC Central Committee, peasants' incomes have gone up greatly, year after year, along with the flourishing rural economy. Per-capita income in 1985 rose to 397 yuan, up by nearly 200 percent in only 7 years. This has become the focus of world attention, but we should not be content with the situation. Comparatively speaking, peasants in our country have, by and large, attained sufficiency in food and clothing, but there is still a long way to go for them to live a comparatively well-off life as the party interprets. What is more, hundreds of millions of peasants in remote mountain areas have up to now lived in poverty. An important task ahead of us now is to make continuous efforts to ensure a steady increase in peasants' incomes.

Whether peasants' incomes increase or not cannot simply be regarded as a question relating to their livelihood, because it greatly affects the development of agricultural production. It is simple to understand that if their incomes do not increase but decrease after a year of hard work, this certainly chills their enthusiasm in production. Meanwhile, if we view the question from the angle of agricultural investment, we may further understand the importance of increasing peasants' incomes. At present, and for a long time to come, our investment in agriculture will depend mainly on accumulation of agriculture itself, with only a small amount of funds allocated by the government. If peasants' incomes cannot increase, it is difficult for them to support their families. How could they have surplus money to invest in production? Investment is the basis of expanded reproduction. If investment in agriculture diminishes, it is hard to ensure the continuous and steady growth of farm production.

Whether peasants' incomes increase or not affects not only the growth of farm production but also the development of industrial production in the cities. Viewing the market alone, about 60 percent of goods supplied for retail sales is in the rural areas. If the per-capita purchasing power of 800 million peasants rises by 8 to 10 yuan every year, the figures will be fantastic. Furthermore, consumer demand in the rural areas at present is different from that in the urban areas. Generally speaking, peasants like to buy medium- and low-grade commodities, and these commodities conform relatively to our present structure of industrial production. It is thus obvious that the purchasing power of 800 million peasants is the most powerful motive force in our industrial production. In this sense, an ensured increase of peasants' incomes provides a guarantee for the development of industrial production in the cities.

Some comrades fail to understand the importance of increasing peasants' incomes. They see more unfavorable than favorable conditions in this question, so they think they can do nothing about it.

Such mental attitudes must change. True, the necessary readjustment of the state agricultural policies, the rise in prices of some means of production, the change of market demands, and unsound circulation channels have made it difficult to increase peasants' incomes in some localities, but this does not mean that we are not in a position to do something. For example, in order to readjust the production structure, the area sown to cotton in some localities was cut down according to state plans, and the prices of purchase were readjusted. This has inevitably affected peasants' incomes. However, there is a great potential for developing farm production, and we can tap new sources. If cotton growing gets nowhere, we can develop other industrial crops and if developing industrial crops will not do, we can plant grain crops and concentrate our efforts on grain processing. In addition, we can also develop non-farm production. In four areas of northwest Shandong Province, the area of cotton field was cut down by more than four million mu last year. This reduced the real income of peasants in these areas by 25 percent. But they did not moan and groan because of this. They plucked up their courage and transferred a part of the labor force to develop forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, industry, commerce, transport and building industry. Finally they made up all they had lost in income due to the reduction of the cotton field area. The total output value of farm production in the four areas last year did not reduce but increased to some extent. It is thus evident that we are not in a state of inertia in increasing peasants' incomes. There is plenty of opportunity to make use of our prowess. What is important is that we must have the spirit to overcome difficulties of our own accord, know the law of developing the commodity economy in rural areas well, provide more social services such as information, technology, supply and marketing, and help peasants adapt themselves to market regulation so as to achieve the rational circulation and best combination of production essential factors.

The first half of 1986 has passed and the second half of the year will be more important for increasing farm production and peasants' incomes. In the second half of the year, efforts must be made to expand production of grain and industrial crops, and to develop the diversified productive activities. We hope rural cadres in all localities will seize the opportunity to strive for a bumper harvest this year, so as to ensure a steady increase in peasants' incomes. The departments concerned should take the interests of the whole into account, deepen their understanding, and try in every possible way to create conditions for increasing peasants' incomes.

NONGMIN RIBAO STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF AGRICULTURE

HK210335 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jul 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "While Exercising Macrocontrol, Put Agriculture in an Appropriate Position — Inspiration Drawn From This Year's Bumper Harvest of Summer Grain and Oil Crops"]

[Text] Although the output of summer grain was underestimated this year, the actual output is rather high. There is an unexpectedly good harvest of both grain and oil crops. As reported by the departments concerned, so far the growth rate of grain and oil crop storage has already surpassed the growth rate of the output, with the figures recorded in the same period of last year as the base. In the markets in most places, the prices of grain, forage crops, and oil crops have remained stable or dropped slightly. While purchasing crops according to the quotas set in contracts, the state has also offered to procure any amount of crops at the market prices or protective prices. [paragraph continues]

This year, great progress has been made in solving such old problems as the "difficulties that peasants encounter in selling grain" and the case of "grain becoming a drug on the market." Autumn grain is growing very well in most areas, with seedlings coming along fine. The masses say: "A good harvest of summer grain will ensure good harvests throughout the year. The crops appear to be very promising this year."

Some comrades have been worried by the slight decrease in grain output last year. This is quite natural, since "food is the people's first concern" or the source of energy for the labor force. Shortage of grain may affect the supply of grain ration and commodity grain, thus the surplus labor force in rural areas will hardly be able to be transferred to other economic sectors, animal husbandry and fisheries will go short of feed, the food processing industry and catering service trade will be seriously affected, and it will be difficult to readjust the production structure in rural areas. In consequence, it will be impossible to effect the planned market regulation for some commodities, small town and township enterprises will hardly be able to develop... Thus it can be seen that the grain problem is the main problem that agriculture faces. The development of agriculture and the steady growth in grain output are not only the basis of economic development but also an indispensable condition for the urban and rural reform. Now that a good harvest of summer grain has been reaped, the market price of grain has already sensitively reflected people's happy feelings. An ample or short supply always shows immediate effect. Therefore we should never treat the grain problem lightly. While exercising macroeconomic control, we must give agriculture its correct place. This is the first inspiration we have drawn from the bumper harvest of summer grain this year.

Because of grain production's decisive position, various localities have strengthened leadership over and service toward agriculture this year. A series of preferential measures, such as the lifting of restriction on the prices of grain in the market, the timely supply of production means, the moderate increase in agricultural loans, the supply of information and technology from various sources, and the implementation of the system of industry subsidizing and supporting agriculture, and so on, have been adopted to bring the peasants' initiative into play, so that the peasants will readily invest funds and labor in the fields, introduce scientific farming, and devote greater efforts to mid- and final-phase field management. In light of the harvests in different localities, mid- and final- phase field management has an important bearing on the harvest. Therefore, if one attaches real importance to agriculture, one must display the spirit of leadership through service and render more service to the peasants in a down-to-earth manner. This is the second inspiration we have drawn from this year's bumper harvest of summer grain.

We come to the third inspiration. The human factor is undoubtedly the major one contributing to the good harvest of summer grain this year. However, we cannot deny that the favorable weather also played a great part. Relatively speaking, our adaptability to the natural environment is still rather poor, restoration and construction of water conservation works lag far behind the agricultural development, and the mechanization standard remains very low. It is possible that there would have been no bumper harvest if the weather had been as unfavorable as in the previous period. Therefore, we should never feel complacent over the good harvest. [paragraph continues]

The weather will not necessarily be favorable in every season and every year. We must do our utmost to increase investment in agriculture, to improve the conditions for agricultural production, to increase agriculture's adaptability to natural calamities, and to strive for good harvest by fighting against natural calamities. While securing investment funds from the state, we must also raise funds among the masses, so that more funds will be available for investment in agriculture and reproduction on an extended scale.

By and large, from this year's good harvest of summer grain we can draw some inspiration, namely, it is necessary to attach importance to agriculture and to grain production, to strengthen leadership over and service toward agriculture, and to increase necessary investment in agriculture. At the moment, the top priority task before us is to make persistent efforts, strive for a bumper harvest in the latter half of the year, and draw up the summer grain production plan for next year, so as to lay down a sound foundation for the fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan in relation to agriculture!

CORRECTION TO LEADERS DISCUSS BUREAUCRATIC WORK STYLE

The following correction pertains to the item headlined "Leaders Discuss Bureaucratic Work Style," published in the 21 July China DAILY REPORT, page K 5, paragraph four, line one:

...Bo Yibo said: China's bureaucratism is bureaucratism that will not die and so it is extremely hard to put things right. Organs are...(rewording)

GUIZHOU HOLDS MEETING ON ASSISTING POOR AREAS

HK200846 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 17 Jul 86

[Excerpts] At the meeting of leaders of the teams of organs at the provincial level assisting the poor areas which was held by the peasants and workers department of the organization department of the provincial CPC Committee, provincial CPC Committee Secretary Hu Jintao pointed out: In the work of assisting the poor areas, we must help them arouse their enthusiasm and develop their intellectual resources and take such measures as are suitable to local conditions to do this work still better. [passage omitted]

In the first half of the year, the 11 teams of the organs at the provincial level assisting the poor areas embarked on 67 tasks to help the poor areas eradicate poverty and get rich and help them consolidate their enterprises well. They trained some 6,000 junior technical workers for localities and made contributions toward our province's work of assisting the poor areas. What is more important is that the teams assisting the poor areas conveyed to them the concern of the party and government for the masses of the poor areas and strengthened confidence in getting rich, invigorating Guizhou, and enriching the cadres and the masses of the poor areas. [passage omitted]

At the 3-day meeting of the leaders of the teams assisting the poor areas, leaders of the peasants and workers department of the organization department of the provincial CPC Committee listened to the reports by the work teams and arranged for the tasks of the work of assisting the poor areas for the second half of the year.

At the conclusion of the meeting, leaders of the provincial CPC Committee and provincial government, including Wang Chaowen and Ding Tingmo, attended the meeting, visited the comrades attending the meeting, and spoke.

SICHUAN'S NIE RONGGUI ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK210452 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 19 Jul 86

[Text] The 4-day provincial party rectification work conference concluded at the (Jinliu) Hotel on the afternoon of 17 July. Nie Ronggui, Zhang Lixing, and Xu Chuan, responsible comrades of the party rectification guidance group under the provincial CPC Committee, delivered important speeches at the conference.

In his speech, Comrade Nie Ronggui pointed out that with the efforts of CPC committees at all levels, party rectification has been developing healthily in the province and remarkable achievements have been made. The main reflections are that party members have been educated in party spirit and party discipline and submit themselves to and serve the party's general target and task, malpractices have been effectively curbed, and party organizational and ideological consolidation has been strengthened. All this has ensured and promoted the smooth progress of reforms and stimulated the development of commodity economy. Party rectification in units above the county level has now been completed, but we must not relax our efforts in consolidating and developing the party rectification results. We must properly carry out party rectification at the district and township level from beginning to end and must avoid slackness. We must further make clear the division of duties of grass roots, and particularly the division of duties of party and government organs, so as to establish a normal work system.

On party rectification at the village level, Comrade Nie Ronggui pointed out that we must carry out party rectification at the village level in a planned way and step by step. The general requirement is that rural party rectification must basically be completed before the spring festival next year. To guarantee the quality of rural party rectification, we must strengthen leadership. In particular, county CPC committees must bear extremely important responsibility for party rectification at the village level. They must pay serious attention to it and give meticulous guidance. We must continue to select and transfer cadres to strengthen rural party rectification and ensure that every village party branch has a competent and trained full-time party member cadre to act as a liaison officer and help party rectification.

In conclusion, Comrade Nie Ronggui said that rural party rectification in our province, which is on large scale, involves many fields and people in different areas, so the tasks in rural party rectification are arduous and not at all easy to fulfill. Therefore, CPC committees at all levels must pay serious attention to and properly carry it out. Cadres who take part in party rectification must work conscientiously and make party rectification at the rural party branch level a success.

XIZANG LEADERS STRESS EDUCATION FOR PROGRESS

HK190521 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Excerpts] On 17 July, the principal leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee and government including Wu Jinghua, Raidi, Doje Cering, and Dangzin, enthusiastically received responsible comrades of education departments and schools in 16 provinces and municipalities that are running schools for Xizang, together with some teachers of Xizang classes. During the reception, the leading comrades of the region reemphasized the importance of Xizang schools being run in the interior of China, and highly praised the contributions of the education departments and schools concerned in the 16 provinces and municipalities in training talented people for Xizang.

Raidi, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee, spoke at the reception. He said: Earth-shaking changes have taken place in all respects in Xizang since the liberation. However, economic development, culture, and education are far from being comparable with that in the interior provinces and municipalities. The CPC Central Committee has made the extremely wise strategic policy decision that 16 provinces and municipalities should help Xizang in running schools. An important item of work for building a united, well-off, and civilized new Xizang is to train talented people and to a good job in education. The practice of the past year in running schools in the interior has shown that the decision of the CPC Central Committee is correct. [passage omitted]

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Wu Jinghua reemphasized the importance of running schools in the interior. He said: It is relatively easy for all nationalities to attain political and legal equality after the proletariat has seized political power. However, it is not easy to achieve real equality in economics, culture, and education. Advanced nationalities have the duty to help the backward ones stride into the ranks of the advanced. [passage omitted]

XIZANG HOLDS PARTY SCHOOL WORK CONFERENCE

HK180824 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 16 Jul 86

[Excerpts] The second regional conference on party school work, which lasted 6 days, concluded successfully on the morning of 16 July.

(Shi Hongsheng), vice president of the regional party school, presided over the closing ceremony. Leaders of the regional CPC Committee, including Wu Jinghua, Raidi, and Dangzin, and leading comrades of the Propaganda Department and Organization Department of the regional CPC Committee, including Li Weilun, (Sun Yunzhou), and Cideng Pingcuo, attended the conference.

(Yang Yinglan), vice president of the regional party school, delivered the summing-up speech at the conference. He said: The second regional conference on party school work made achievements in three aspects:

1. This conference further defined the importance and urgency of strengthening training for cadres and of running party schools well.

2. It deepened understanding of the principle of stressing both.

3. Proceeding from realities, it initially explored several urgent problems of running party schools well and put forward some ways to solve them.

In dealing with further defining the importance and urgency of strengthening the training of cadres and of running party schools well, (Yang Yinglan) said: At present, Xizang is facing such a historical juncture that cadres are a decisive factor after the political line has been determined. Whether Xizang's work can be promoted depends, in the final analysis, on the problem of qualified personnel. The crucial problem of qualified personnel is the problem of education. Party school education is to train qualified personnel for the management of a county, a district, and a department. If the leadership groups of the 75 county CPC committees throughout the region have been trained and their theoretical and cultural quality improved, their working ability is strengthened. If the work of every county is promoted, Xizang is full of promise.

He said: Our region is now carrying out structural reform. A large number of middle-aged and young cadres have joined leadership groups at and above the county level. These middle-aged and young cadres urgently need cultural and theoretical training. Thus, party schools' tasks are fairly arduous and pressing.

While talking about deepening understanding of the principle of stressing both, (Yang Yinglan) said: The principle of stressing both is the principle of education formulated by the first regional conference on party school work for party schools at all levels of our region. This princple has been welcomed by the cadres, particularly the cadres of Tibetan nationality. However, some comrades have understood it differently. In the discussion at this conference, they came to unanimously understand this problem. That is, they must proceed from Xizang's realities, and party schools at all levels of the region must investigate and study the current state of the cadres of our region, particularly the minority-nationality cadres. The contents of training, theory, or culture must be determined by the current state of those who are trained. We cannot subjectively determine them. However, so far as guiding ideology is concerned, importance must be attached to both theoretical training and cultural training. Both courses must be run well. [passage omitted]

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Wu Jinghua and Deputy Secretaries Raidi and Dangzin also spoke at the conference.

TIANJIN'S NI ZHIFU SPEAKS AT COMMENDATION RALLY

SK210453 Tianjin TIANJIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jul 86 pp 1, 3

[Speech by Ni Zhifu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and secretary of the Tianjin Municipal CPC Committee, at a 30 June Tianjin municipal rally to celebrate the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC and commend advanced party organizations and fine party members]

[Text] Comrades:

This year, 1 July will be a glorious festival in celebration of the 65th anniversary of the founding of the CPC. The ceremonious rally to commend advanced party organizations and excellent party members is a matter of great significance in party building. On behalf of the municipal CPC Committee, I first extend warm greetings to the 11 advanced party organizations and 22 excellent party members on which honorary titles were conferred as well as the 38 advanced party organizations and 198 excellent party members that were commended, and congratulate them on their outstanding achievements in, prominent contributions to, and lofty honors gained from building the socialist spiritual and material civilizations. I hope that they make greater efforts and continue to keep forging ahead in order to win greater honor. At the same time, I hope that the party organizations at all levels and all party members throughout the municipality learn from the advanced and regard the drive to learn from the advanced and strive to be excellent party members will emerge.

Although the party members that were commended by the municipal CPC Committee this time are in the minority of the 500,000 party members of the municipality, they are the main aspect of the ranks of the municipality's party members. The overwhelming majority of party members in Tianjin are good and comparatively good. In particular, through party rectification, notable changes have taken place in the situation of the party organizations and the mental outlook of party members and the party's combat effectiveness has been strengthened. We cannot separate the achievements in the two civilizations made in the first 5 years of the 1980's from the efforts of the party organizations at all levels and the vast number of party members. Facts have proven that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party has truly realized a notable turn for the better in party style and has enjoyed increasingly higher prestige among the masses. Although dark sides of things exist in the party, the party is brave in exposing and eliminating corrosive practices. This indicates that the party has strength and confidence. Only when we resolutely and persistently grasp all fields of work concerning straightening out party style and continue to strengthen the ideological and organizational construction of the party in line with the plans of the central authorities will we certainly clean the dirt off our bodies, realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style, and better guide the masses to push forward our great cause.

The heavy task of leading the entire masses to realize the four modernizations and to build a powerful socialist country has historically fallen to Communist Party members. What should Communist Party members do in order to accomplish the heavy task entrusted by history or to certainly live up to expectations of the people? Today's rally has answered this question. The excellent party member with advanced ideas and exemplary deeds have vividly given examples for us. I hold that party members should attend to the following few tasks in order to play an exemplary role in the two civilizations in the new situation.

First, Communist Party members should have firm communist ideals and belief.

The lofty communist ideals are banners to guide the working class to make progress as well as the spiritual pillar of Communist Party members. Our party won a great historic victory by leading the people throughout the country to carry on a long-term arduous struggle. In the course of the struggle, the party constantly paid attention to conducting the education on communist ideals among all party members so that Communist Party members were able to persist in their own belief. This was the party's source of strength in turning failure in revolution to victory and advancing toward a greater victory. Reviewing the party history, we can witness three historical changes from failure to victory. The first change was from the failure in the great revolution to the rising of the Agrarian Revolution; the second was from the correction of Wang Ming's erroneous "leftist" idea to the launching of the world-famous 25,000-li Long March, during which the party guided the people to comprehensively launch the anti-Japanese national liberation war; and the third was the beginning of the great transition in the party history which is of profound significance after the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Particularly during the current historical transition, our party has always stressed the importance and need to strengthen education on the communist ideals. The 12th party congress considered the building of spiritual civilization a fundamental goal closely integrated with the building of material civilization and pointed out that without the socialist spiritual civilization focusing on the communist idea, it would be impossible to build socialism. In building socialism, we should not only rely on the growth of material wealth, but also on the constant improvement of the people's awareness in the communist idea and the continuous development of the revolutionary spirit. At the 1985 National Conference of Party Delegates, Comrade Xiaoping seriously pointed out: No matter how weak our party was and what difficulties it met in the past, our party has always had a strong fighting capacity, because it has been equipped with the Marxist and communist beliefs. With a common ideal, there will be an iron discipline. This was, is, and will be our actual superiority. This has raised the communist education to a new level.

We can see with happiness that during the past few years, along with the constant deepening of the socialist spiritual civilization and the ideological education among party members, a large number of fine party members and cadres who have revolutionary ideals, moral integrity, and discipline have emerged on all fronts. Some of these party members and cadres were commended at this rally by the municipal CPC Committee. All party members should steadfastly adhere to communist ideals, belief, and morality; should foster the idea of being the master, the idea of collectivism, and the sense of organization and discipline; and should fully carry forward the spirit of serving the people and the communist labor attitude. At the same time, they should constantly spread advanced ideas and set examples in their practical behavior to mobilize increasingly more people to become new persons with lofty ideals, moral integrity, knowledge, and discipline.

Next, we should combine lofty ideals with the current fighting goals, and plunge into the great and mighty torrent of reform.

Communism is not only a scientific ideological system and a completely new social system, but also a revolutionary movement through which the old society will move toward a future one. Over the past 65 years, the party's struggle and practices in each historical stage have been designed to attain the future great communist goal. The fighting goals of our party for each stage are precisely designed to attain this "great goal" at last. During the present stage, our task is to fulfill the four socialist modernizations. To attain this goal, the CPC Central Committee has set forth the plan of "walking in three major steps," with an aim toward building our country into a strong and modern socialist country which would approach the level of the developed countries by the middle of the 21st century. To this end, we must persistently implement the basic national policies of reform and opening to the outside world. This is how to apply communist ideals to the practice at the present stage. All party members should understand, uphold, and promote reform from the high plane of fulfilling the four socialist modernizations and communist ideals, and should consciously plunge into the mighty torrent of reform.

Comrade Xiaoping has pointed out recently: Accomplishing the four modernizations is an overriding task, and the focus of this task is to carry out reform. At present, focusing on the issue of reform, all party members should clarify their understanding of the following: First, the orientation of reform is totally correct, and should be and can be maintained persistently. The trend of reform is irreversible. We should fully understand this, the most important point, and should never waver or even lose our confidence. Second, as there is no ready-made pattern to follow, we should rely on ceaseless exploration to continuously improve and push forward our reform. The principle for this year's reform is "consolidation, assimilation, supplement, and improvement," which represents a principle of steady advancement, and should be upheld conscientiously. Third, as far as the structural reform as a whole is concerned, we are in a period of transition from an old system to a new one. Reform reflects a course of gradual progress, and the reform there should also be a course for the people to gradually suit their thinking to the situation. Communist party members, the party's cadres at all levels in particular, should not only adapt their thinking and work to the situation of reform but also stand at the forefront of reform, and lead the masses to overcome difficulties in reform with a reformative spirit just as the fine party members who are commended today for their prominent achievements in reform have done. Fourth, it is necessary to correctly understand the relationship between reform and the correction of unhealthy trends. During the previous period, some people who harbored individualistic ideas to a serious extent took advantage of loopholes in reform to engage in unhealthy trends, and law and discipline violating activities. However, we must never jump to the conclusion that unhealthy trends are brought by reform. When performing the work of rectifying party style, we must pay attention to clearly distinguishing unhealthy trends from temporary mistakes in reform, and we should never lump them together. Unhealthy trends must be corrected resolutely, and reform must be carried out unswervingly. These two tasks should be grasped simultaneously, and should coordinate with and promote each other.

At present, our economic situation is, generally speaking, in good shape, reform is being conducted comparatively smoothly, and the national economic development has become more normal. However, some conspicuous problems still exist. At a conference of leading district, county, and bureau cadres held on 26 June, Comrade Li Ruihuan delivered a speech on the major measures our municipality will adopt for its economic work for the latter half of this year on behalf of the municipal CPC Committee and government. [paragraph continues]

It is hoped that party organizations at all levels throughout the municipality, and all Communist Party members will vigorously swing into action, strive to increase revenues and cut expenditures, and ensure the implementation of these measures with their vanguard and exemplary role.

Third, it is necessary to correctly handle the relationship between individual interests and the interests of the party and the people.

Comrade Yaobang recently called on every party member to subordinate his individual interests to the party's interests without preconditions. This is the fundamental demarcation line which distinguishes party members and nonparty masses. It is precisely because, Communist party membes not only always place the interests of the party and the peole above their own individual interests, but also voluntarily safeguard and realise the interests of the party and the people at the expense of their individual interests when necessary, that we say that they have proved to be an advanced part of the proletariat. During the current situation, must of our party members are able to serve the people and implement the party's line, principles, and policies. However, we have also often noted that some of them cannot withstand the tests. Some party members are indifferent to the interests of the party and the people while being preoccupied with their own. Others are individualistic to a very serious extent, and even abuse power for selfish gains. A very small number of them are in total disregard of party discipline and state law, violate the law, and transgress our codes of discipline to a serious extent, and completely lose their fundamental stand as Communist Paryt members. The contradiction between them and the party has become antagonistic. All party members should take the initiative to temper themselves with party spirit, work wholeheartedly for the people, strictly abide by party discipline, pay attention to resisting the corrosive influence of various corrupt ideas, struggle against all evil trends detrimental to the interests of the party and the people, voluntarily subordinate their individual interests to the interests of the party and the people, be the first to bear hardships and the last to enjoy comforts, never abuse power for selfish gains, and make all of their speeches and acts compatible with the greatest interests of the broadest number of people.

Fouth, it is necessary to carry forward the spirit of waging arduous struggle and doing solid work.

Comrade Mao Zedong said: "The establishment of the socialist system has opened up a road for us to reach an ideal state, but the realization of the ideal stare depends on our diligent labor." It is a fine tradition of communists to combine lofty ideals and fighting goals with the spirit of waging arduous struggle and doing solid work. In the new historical period, the spirit of doing solid work is need to develop socialist productive forces, to promote overall structural reform, to strengthen the building of the socialist spiritual civilization,and to correct unhealthy trends. Displaying such spirit, we will certainly be able to achieve greater progress. All party members should not only foster lofty communist ideals but also be men of action to carry out arduous struggles, do more solid work, guard against giving empty talk, implement the party's principles and policies in a creative manner, treat their own work with a communsit labor attitude, and fulfill their work and production tasks with high efficiency and quality.

Fifth, it is necessary to be examples in study.

Since the beginning of this year, party organizations at all levels throughout the municipality have attached importance to study, and some of them have established study central groups. This is very good. It is out of the question for a communist party member to firmly believe in communism and devote all of his life to realizing communism without knowing the basic Marxist theory. Without knowing scientific and general knowledge modernisation is also out of the question. Party members, party-member cadres in particular, have many things to learn. First of all, they should read some Marxist classics, master the Marxist stand, viewpoints, and methods, and use them as a guide in their practice and their efforts to solve practical problems. Meanwhile, they should conscientiously study the party's line, principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, clarify the important issues concerning domestic and foreign policies, and maintain unity with the CPC Committee ideologically and politically. In addition, they should also study scientific and general knowledge to enhance their competence in carrying out the four modernizations. If all communist party members foster lofty revolutionary ideals, posses the spirit of working for the party's cause in a down-to-earth manner and dedicating themselves to the interests of the people, and master knowledge and the practical skill to serve the people, the quality of the contingents of party members will be greatly improved, the party's combat strength will be greatly enhanced, and our great and glorious party will be able to lead the masses in carrying out the behest of the forerunners of communism, and accomplish and unprecedented great cause.

TIANJIN PLA CADRES STUDY MARXIST THEORIES

OW182210 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0736 GMT 18 Jul 86

[By reporter Cheng Guanglong]

[Excerpts] Tianjin, 18 Jul (XINHUA) -- The party committee of a tank regiment under the PLA Tianjin Garrison district pays attention to new cadres' study of basic Marxist theories, and makes the study program a fundamental measure to improve the cadres political quality and the regiment's ideological education. In the last 2 years, they have given more than 60 lectures on Marxist philosophy, political economy, and scientific socialism. Eighty-three percent of the cadres have completed two or more courses. [passage omitted]

The lectures on basic Marxist theories given by the regiment are designed to enhance the cadres ability to analyse and solve problems using a Marxist stand, viewpoint and method. They integrate the study of basic Marxist theories with the study of important documents adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The cadres have been organized to study such classical works as "Scientific Socialism," "Critique of the Gotha Programme", and "Politicis and Economy Under the Dictatorship of the Proletariat." They have also seriously studied such documents as Comrade Deng Xiaoping's "Building Socialism With Chinese Charactristics" and "Decision of the CPC Central Committee on Reform of the Economic Structure." The study has raised the cadres' awareness of the need to uphold the four basic principles and keep an ideological and political unity with the party Central Committee. [passage omitted]

SUN WEIBEN HAILS HEILONGJIANG LAND RECLAMATION

SK211159 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 20 Jul 86

[Excerpts] On the morning of 20 July, Heilongjiang Province ceremoniously held a meeting in Jiamusi City to hail the achievements scored by the demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs in reclaiming the wasteland in the province. [passage omitted]

Hou Jie, governor of the province, presided over the meeting that was participated in by 430 representatives of the demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs from reclamation areas throughout the province. [passage omitted] Comrade Wang Zhen, vice chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, personally wrote words of commemoration for the meeting, calling for waging an arduous struggle and boldly pioneering roads. The PLA General Political Department also sent a congratulatory letter to the meeting. Attending the meeting were Du Runsheng, director of the rural Policy Research Center of the Secretariat; and leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial people's government, and the provincial People's Congress, including Sun Weiben, Hou Jie, Chen Yunlin, Wang Yusheng, Wang Lianzheng, and Zhao Zhenhua.

At the meeting, Comrade Sun Weiben delivered a speech. Attending the meeting to extend their congratulations on the occasion were Yang Chen, vice minister of civil affairs; Liu Zheng, vice minister of agriculture, animal husbandry, and fisheries; representatives from the central level and state organs, and other departments and commissions concerned; and representatives from the PLA General Political Department, from the Political Department of the Shenyang Military Region, and from the reclamation areas of fraternal provinces. [passage omitted] In his speech, Sun Weiben stated:

[Begin recording] Comrades: Today's meeting in honor of the achievements scored by the demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs in reclaiming the wasteland in the province and in building the reclamation areas represents a big event in the province's history of agricultural reclamation, fully reflects the high appraisal and respect shown by the party and the people for the broad masses of the demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs, who are devoting themselves to reclaiming the wasteland and building the reclamation areas in the northern border region of the country, and fully indicates the outstanding achievements scored by the broad masses of these servicemen and armymen in the vast lands of the province. I, on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, would like to extend warm congratulations and cordial regards to the more than 400 representatives attending the meeting, to the more than 10,000 armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs, to the family members of these armymen, and to all staff members and workers in the reclamation areas throughout the province. [passage omitted] [end recording]

In his speech, Sun Weiben stated: The history of reclamation throughout the province is an epic one of arduously conducting pioneering work, forever making progress, and achieving advances and development. Through nearly 40 years of efforts to arduously conduct pioneering work, the great northern wilderness in the northeast territory of the great socialist motherland has become the great northern grain granary. This is a change with historical significance, in which the broad masses of the demobilized servicemen from various localities throughout the country and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs have selflessly dedicated their youth and energy to the reclamation program.

In his speech, he stated: Building the state socialist farms with Chinese characteristics is the new target being vigorously fulfilled by 710,000 staff members and workers of the agricultural reclamation areas with the backbone force of the demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs. At present, the province has more than 100,000 farms in various categories run by the family members of the staff members and workers. The system in which small farms have been opened under the large ones has initially taken shape. The drive to conduct reforms has brought about limitless life and tremenduous vitality to the state farms and an unprecedented upsurge in the enthusiasm and creativeness of staff members and workers. The spirit displayed by the great northern wilderness is the heritage and development of the spirit displayed by the farms in Nanniwan District in the new historical period. Therefore, the spirit displayed by the northern wilderness will be carried forward generation by generation as well as reflect former times. In his speech, Sun Weiben stated:

[Begin recording] In reviewing the past, we have found that the broad masses of demobilized servicemen and the armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs have scored glorious achievements in the history of the country's agricultural reclamation program. In looking forward to the future, we have discovered new and more arduous tasks imposed by this history on the broad masses of demobilized servicemen and armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs as well as of staff members and workers among the reclamation areas in the province. The task of reclaiming the wasteland on a large scale in the province has been great. Major future tasks are to bring into full play the strong points of state farms that have scored a high standard in mechanizing farming operations, have abundant natural resources including land, and have achieved a high ideological and cultural quality among the staff members and workers; to conduct reforms or create something new in order to march forward the promotion of production in both depth and breadth; to pave a road of developing socialist farms suitable to the characteristics of the province and the country; and to encourage the state farms throughout the province to achieve a large increase in economic results and to be the vanguards of farming areas throughout the province in becoming wealthy rapidly and ahead of schedule and in realizing the agricultural modernization at an early date.

Comrades, the future appearance of the states farm complex in the province, in which the economy is prosperous, livelihood is wealthy, and social morale is good, will certainly exert the greatest influence on economic development throughout the province, particularly on economic development in rural areas, and will certainly play the role of example in this regard. The provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government are firmly convinced that the broad masses of demobilized servicemen and armymen who have been transferred to civilian jobs as well as of the staff members and workers of the agricultural reclamation areas will certainly be able to completely fulfill their heavy duties and to make all-out efforts to continously score contributions to achieving the great development of the rural economy in the province. [end recording]

CENTRAL LEADERS CONDOLE LIAONING OFFICIAL'S DEATH

SK170354 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jul 86 p 1

[Excerpts] Comrade Zhou Chiheng, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the Fifth Liaoning Provincial People's Congress, and a retired cadre, died of illness in Shenyang on 18 June 1986 at the age of 71, after all lifesaving efforts had failed.

After the death of Comrade Zhou Chiheng, some central leading comrades including Peng Zhen, Wan Li, Song Renqiong, Huang Huoqing, and Duan Junyi; as well as Comrades Wan Yi, Guan Shanfu, Su Gang, Chen Puru, Yu Ke, Li Guixian, and Sun Weiben respectively expressed their condolences and sympathy by sending envoys and condolence messages and through phone calls. They also sent wreaths to the deceased. Also sending wreaths were the Organizational Department of the CPC Central Committee; the CPC Committee, the Headquarters, the Political Department, and the Logistics Department of the Shenyang PLA Units; the Northeast China Economic Planning Office under the State Council; the Liaoning Provincial CPC Committee; the Liaoning Provincial Advisory Commission; the Liaoning Provincial Discipline Inspection Commission; the Liaoning Provincial People's Congress; the Liaoning provincial people's government; the Liaoning Provincial CPPCC Committee; the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee; the Jilin Provincial Advisory Commission; the Jilin Provincial People's Congress; the Jilin provincial people's government; and the People's Congress Standing Committee of Shaoxing City in Zhejiang Province, the hometown of Comrade Zhou Chiheng. [passage omitted]

On the morning of 30 June, some leading comrades of the provincial organs and some representatives of workers went to the hospital to pay their last respects to the deceased. Among the leading comrades of the provincial authorities and the provincial Military District who paid their last respects to the deceased were Sun Qi, Zhang Zhengde, Xu Shaofu, Dong Keda, Chen Sushi, Shen Xianhui, Shang Wen, Bai Licheng, Wang Julu, Wang Guangzhong, Xie Huangtian, Zhang Tiejun, Lou Erkang, Tang Hongguang, Gu Jingxin, Liu Zenghao, Feng Yousong, Zhang Zhiyuan, Zuo Kun, Yu Jingqing, Zhang Yan, Yue Weichun, Qi Kaiyan, and Li Ming. Also paying last respects to the deceased were some veteran comrades who had stepped down from their leading posts to the second and third lines of posts, including Huang Oudong, Li Huang, Li Tao, He Quingji, Luo Dingfeng, Liu Yiyun, Chen Yiguang, Zhang Qingtai, Zhao Shi, Liu Wen, Liu Peng, Wang Jiyuan, and Zhao Qi.

Comrades Wu Shaowen and Yang Zhantao, close friends of Zhou Chiheng when he was alive and representatives of Jilin Province; and Comrade when he was alive and representatives of Jilin Province; and Comrade Deng Zhongru, representative of Shenyang City, made a special trip to Shenyang City to pay their last respects to the deceased.

Comrade Du Rui, wife of Comrade Zhou Chiheng, and Zhou's children sent wreaths to the deceased.

When Comrade Zhou Chinheng was seriously ill, Comrades Song Renqiong, Guo Feng, Huang Oudong, Li Guixian, Quan Shuren, and Zhang Zhengde and respectively went to the hospital to visit him.

CORRECTION TO LIAONING COMPLETES ARMED FORCES TRANSFER

The following correction pertains to the item headlined "Liaoning Completes Transfer of Armed Forces Departments," published in the 18 July China DAILY REPORT, page S 2, paragraph two, line twelve:

...people. Song Keda, deputy political commissar of...(adding word "deputy")

TAIWAN WILL CONTINUE BAN ON COMMUNIST VISITORS

OW230051 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 21 Jul 86

[Text] The Government of the Republic of China has reiterated its ban of any person from a communist country visiting or attending meetings in or participating in sports events in the Republic of China for national security. Foreign Ministry spokesman Chiu Chin-i said that the nation is still in a period of emergency, and to protect the country against communist subversion, the government will continue to prohibit visits by anyone from the communist bloc. Chiu's statement was seen by some local observers as a response to a recent unconfirmed report that two young go players from Eastern Europe wanted to take part in a go tournament in Taipei but were said to have been denied entry visas.

Commenting on trade affairs with East European nations, the spokesman said: Economic and political affairs should be seperated and treated on a case by case basis.

LIBERALIZATION WILL NARROW TRADE GAP WITH U.S.

OW211325 Taipei CHINA POST in English 16 Jul 86 p 12

[Text] Only liberalisation of trade will help narrow the trade gap between the Republic of China [ROC] and the U.S., Chao Yao-tung, chairman of the Council for Economic Planning and Development told participants of the National Developoment Seminar [NDS].

He also noted that Sino-American trade frictions have been caused primarily by differences of industrial structures and production costs. If the problem can not be solved, the trade imbalance will continue to increase, he warned.

The government has always encouraged local businesses to invest in the U.S., Chao said, adding that unlike South Korea, the government adopts a hands-off policy on the matter.

He also warned that some problems were caused by the nation's transition from an agricultural to an industrial society.

As an illustration, he stated that to allow free imports of American tobacco and wine may adversely affect the production of such domestic agricultural products as grapes and tobacco. To narrow the trade imbalance, the two sides have no other alternatives but to uphold the spirit of free trade, he stressed.

Chao also told the NDS scholars that Mainland Chinas export trade is controlled by the "government." To avoid compromising the ROC's staunch anti-Communist stand and running the risk of economic losses, the ROC has to ban direct trade with Peking.

HONG KONG PAPER ON 'EXODUS' FROM SHENZHEN

HK210356 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 21 Jul 86 p 8

[By To Yiu-Ming]

[Text] About a fifth of Shenzhen's 500,000-plus population have moved out of the special economic zone in the past 12 months or so, THE STANDARD has learned.

The "exodus" is part of the effort to reorientate the four special economic zones, including Shenzhen, towards an export-based economy, as directed by the Central Government last year.

Informed sources told THE STANDARD that in Shenzhen more than 50,000 construction workers had been laid off and sent back to their rural home counties to put a brake on the building industry.

Under the revised policy, THE STANDARD understands hotel projects have been scaled down or scrapped. Other completed blocks will be used for different purposes.

Sources said the laid-off are mainly peasants without the necessary skills for other jobs in the manufacturing sector in Shenzhen.

Shenzhen's development has been criticized for relying too heavily on selling imports to other cities in the hinterland as well as for its non-productive business such as tourism and property development.

It is also learnt that the new mayor of Shenzhen, Mr Li Hao, is determined to lay off redundant workers to lighten the financial burden on the local government.

Before the Lunar New Year, he repatriated about 40,000 people who had legally or illegally migrated into the economic zone in the past few years through personal connections with local officials or other influential people in the government, a source said.

Following the stepping down of the former mayor Liang Xiang last September, it was expected that the new chief would initiate major corrective changes.

But Mr Li has maintained a low profile and insists that no major reforms are coming.

A source said, however, that Mr Li has been working hard on pressing issues since he took over.

He works on many fronts to implement the directive to channel all efforts and resources to export-oriented projects.

To save funds for such projects, the local government has stopped or postponed work on 84 projects involving 2.1 billion renminbi.

Apart from reducing the population and setting new investment priorities, Mr Li has also ordered a 20 percent pay cut for all staff of state enterprises in the municipality. This is an average reduction of 200 renminbi

The reason for this is to reduce production costs and to increase the competitiveness of export products.

According to official statistics, exports have since gone up by 23 percent in the first quarter, breaking the U.S. $100 million (HK$780 million) mark.

But Mr Li's reforms still have to overcome a number of obstacles ahead, the most serious of which is deep-rooted bureaucracy.

The source said Mr Li had to work with a city government made up of party members of various backgrounds with different working styles and values.

Though noted for his administrative skills during his days as Deputy Secretary-General of the State Council, it is still too early to say if he can gear in with the local cadres, one source said.

But the latest reshuffle of the municipal government points to a victory in his battle against bureaucracy.

But he still faces an acute shortage of educated manpower which is unlikely to be solved in the near future.

Of the 400,000-strong population in the zone, only 10,000 people have a higher education, a source said.

ZHONGUO TONGXUN SHE COMMENTS ON CPC POLITICAL REFORM

HK200422 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 0947 GMT 18 Jul 86

[Article by Tian Ye: "A Concise Discussion of the CPC's Reform of the Political Structure" — ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 18 Jul (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) — The CPC's reform of the political structures now becoming a focus of attention.

Not long ago, Deng Xiaoping said that the reform of the urban economic structure to be carried out by China in the next 5 years was in fact a reform of the country's overall economic structure and that the reform of some aspects of the political structure constituted part of this reform of the economic structure.

It can be seen that Deng Xiaoping was trying to incorporate the reform of some aspects of the country's political structure into the reform of the country's economic structure and that he regards the latter as both the starting point for and the ultimate purpose of the former. The word "some" preceding the phrase "aspects of the political structure" clearly tells us that it is necessary to consider the reform of those aspects of the political structure that impede the economic reforms in order to facilitate the in-depth development of these economic reforms.

Compared with the reform of the economic structure, the reform of the political structure appears subordinate, secondary, partial, and selective. However, I believe that it is not a less formidable task than the other. Although turbulence is quite unlikely, things will not be smooth either. It will be like the reform of the economic structure, which was obstructed from the outset. Zhao Ziyang frankly admitted this in Yugoslavia not long ago.

It seems possible that in addition to objective obstacles, a net knitted with such feudal, patriarchal stuff as loyalty to the emperor, the partriarchal system and lifelong tenure of office in our several thousand years of history will also obstruct and impede the reform of the political structure. These traditional ideas still influence us in actual life. Having been caught in this net for so long, many people are so accustomed to it that they are unwilling to free themselves. In order to carry out the reform of the political structure, it is necessary to boldly tear apart those outmoded "nets" that have been proven by practice to be not completely correct and to accept new ideas. Of course, in destroying the old and establishing the new, there is always the problem of conflict between advanced ideas and feudal, conventional ideas. However, it is said that China's reforms are endorsed by its people. This is the main reason so many people are optimistic about these reforms.

According to Deng Xaioping, the 5 years covered by the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" are of crucial importance. It is hoped that he will be able to fundamentally change old China's fate with a firm grasp of this "crucial importance."

PANEL RECOMMENDS DIRECT ELECTIONS BEFORE 1991

HK200330 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 20 Jul 86 p 1

[By Esther Leung, David Wong]

[Text] Direct elections should be introduced to Hong Kong within the next five years, a Umelco panel on constitutional affairs recommended yesterday.

Most legislative Councillors on the panel favoured direct elections being introduced from 1988 or 1991 onwards, and that the present system of indirect election be kept on at the same time, according to the panel's deputy-convenor, Mr Andrew Wong.

Sources in China told THE STANDARD yesterday that the Chinese Government's thinking also tends to favour having legislative Councillors who ar produced through a mixture of direct and indirect elections for the Special Administrative Region Government after 1997.

But they are concerned that the pace of direct elections should not go too fast as the proportion of directly elected members would become so great that it could upset "the delicate political balance within the law-making body."

"The first step is the crucial because it is virtually impossible to make a U-Turn afterwards," a source said.

This appears to reinforce an earlier point made by senior government and Chinese officials that the political reforms in the territory and the Basic Law being drafted could be compatible to each other since both sides have tended to reach a consensus on the vital issue — the introduction of direct elections.

At yesterday's meeting, members of Umelco's panel examined two possible methods for future elections for returning legislative Councillors -- both of which have a direct election element, but systems vary according to the size of the constituencies.

One method is to inject an element of direct election into the present structure whereas the other is to let candidates for electoral colleges be elected by voters in the districts.

The panel has received many proposals, submitted by the public, regarding the future structure of the Legislative Council and these have been put into a discussion paper, said the convenor, Mr Chen Shoulum.

At the meeting, the panel summarised the opinions into two major suggestions which it considered worth studying.

The first method was to retain the present elements in Legco, that is, the functional constituencies, the electoral colleges, the appointed members and the official members.

But a new element, members directly elected by the public, will be added to the present structure, he said.

The second option was to make changes in the election procedure of the electoral colleges while all other sectors will not be changed.

The prodecure of having district board members elect a member from among themselves to sit on the council will be abolished by this method.

Instead, representatives will be elected by voters in the district.

There was a bit of dissention among the panel members about the most favourable time to introduce direct elections, some suggested 1988, while others favoured 1991 so as to allow more time to see how well the present system worked.

But the proportion of Legco members created through direct elections by either of the two methods had yet to be sorted out, Mr Chen said.

He said the panel will study the two systems, their problems and effects, and welcomed any other suggestions.

He said the panel's discussion on the structure of Legco follows the aims of the 1987 review of representative government.

It is based on the present system and within the boundaries of the White Paper and the Green Paper of 1984, and the Sino-British Joint Declaration, he said.

JOURNALIST EXPELLED BY PRC ARRIVES KAI TAK

HK230452 Hong Kong Commercial Service in English 0430 GMT 23 Jul 86

[Text] British journalist John Burns has arrived in Hong Kong after being expelled from China for entering an area forbidden to foreigners. He spent almost a week in custody in Beijing and told newsmen at Kai Tak the whole affair was nonsense. Mr Burns believes he has done nothing wrong.

[Begin Burns recording] I engaged in a quite legitimate journalistic activity. I traveled to the countryside of China to see for myself spontaneously what differences had been brought by the reforms of the last few years.

This was a completely normal activity by a reporter, and what's more, it was a completely normal activity by somebody who has completely friendly feelings toward the people of China, which were altogether enhanced by my week on the road and those feelings have not in any way changed as a result of what happened in the past week. [end recording]

Mr Burns, who was the NEW YORK TIMES correspondent in Beijing, says the decision to release him was sensible. He adds that he was treated fairly whilst in custody.

HONG KONG-EEC TEXTILES TALKS END IN STALEMATE

HK200310 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST in English 20 Jul 86 p 2

[Text] The second round of bilateral textile negotiations between the European Economic Community and Hong Kong ended yesterday afternoon without a conclusion.

The talks, which began in Brussels on Thursday, will resume at a date to be announced later.

Commenting on the talks, Mr Hamish Macleod, who led the Hong Kong negotiating team, said the talks had covered all the main issues and had included formal proposals by each side.

"The gap between the sides is quite wide -- we are frankly somewhat disappointed that to date there has been no discernible recognition of Hong Kong's open market, but both sides have been making genuine efforts to bridge the gap and we look forward to renewing those efforts in a month or two."

Mr Macleod said progress had been made more difficult by the need to take into account the likely effects of the introduction of the harmonised system.

"While we have made some progress in narrowing down the problem areas, there remains significant problems both in the area of a few of the categories affected by re-categorisation and in relation to products affected by changes of definitions.

"We shall be looking into these problems in more detail.

"We shall also be assessing in consultation with the Textile Advisory Board the possible implications in other markets."

The Textile Advisory Board, chaired by Mr E.P. Ho advised the Hong Kong team.

Mr Ho commented the lack of progress was a little disappointing, but not entirely unexpected.

"The problem arising from the harmonised system are complicated and important and the contribution of our industrial advisers on the textile advisory board in this sensitive area was particularly useful."

RENMINBI DEVALUATION TO AFFECT DAYA BAY PROFITS

HK230251 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 23 Jul 86 p 1

[By Albert Chan]

[Text] The recent drastic devaluation of the renminbi, the Chinese national currency, is likely to eat into the Daya Bay nuclear plant's expected profit.

This will in turn affect the ability of the Chinese to repay the multi-billion dollar loans needed to build the project.

This was disclosed by Mr Liang Hanchao, general manager of Guangdong Nuclear Investment Company (GNIC), China Light and Power Company's partner in Daya Bay.

Beijing announced a 15.8 per cent devaluation of the renminbi earlier this month and the current rate is 3.7 yuan to the U.S. dollar.

In fact, the drop has been even sharper compared with early 1985, when China Light signed a joint venture contract with the Chinese for the construction and financing of the $27 billion nuclear station.

In that contrast, it was agreed that China Light, through its subsidiary Hong Kong Nuclear Investment Company (HKNIC), would buy 70 per cent of the total electricity output from the station and pay GNIC in foreign exchange.

This was to enable China to get enough foreign currency to pay off the foreign bank loans for the project.

But the rest of the output will be consumed by Guangdong province and this is the part that is worrying the Chinese.

Since this portion of the electricity will be used by mainlanders, it will be paid for primarily in renminbi.

The Chinese are planning to change a large part of this renminbi into U.S. dollars for repayment of the foreign loans.

The devaluation will thus have a serious impact on the expected income generated from this local sale of electricity.

According to Mr Liang, the foreign exchange Hong Kong will provide when power is sold to China Light, will not be adequate for full repayment of the loans.

Officials involved with the project are pinning their hopes on nationwide tariff increases for electricity.

"We believe it will come sooner or later and probably before the early 1990's when the Daya Bay plant is commissioned," Mr Liang said.

Although prices for more and more commodities are being freed from strict state limits, electricity is still controlled.

There is no standard charge for electricity in China, but the general tariff is far below cost, Mr Liang said.

This is made possible because the state subsidises the power companies to make sure the basic living cost is kept at a very low level.